FELIX MOSES

THE LATEST LITERARY EFFORT OF JOHN URI LLOYD BOONE COUNTIAN, TRULY IS A "UNIQUE WORK — SCENE LAID IN BOONE COUNTY

The banal expression "unique" has become so trite, when speaking, or writing, of works of literary art that the writer hesitates to employ it in referring to the latest production of Prof. John Uri Lloyd, Boone county native son, benefactor and philanthropist alibitum.

However, after one has carefully read "Felix Moses The Beloved Jew" he might search his category until the "judgment day" and never find an expression that would more fittingly describe, in one word, this splendid story of the wandering Israelite, who departed from his "ghetto" in an European city, an harassed disciple of an oppressed race.

From this obscure and unusual beginning "Old Mose," as he was affectionately and familiarly known to Boone countians, finally landed in

JOHN URI LLOYD

Florence—"Stringtown on the Pike"—where he plied his trade, branching out into adjacent communities with permanent success.

Webster defines "unique" as meaning—"being without a like or equal." This definition places our thoughts in exact accord with our view of the story that should be read and devoured by Boone county sons and daughters with delectable relish.

Possibly no other author ever has written with more unusual, yet, at the same time, a more understanding, love for a Jewish character. Certainly no pen ever has chronicled a more vivid description of Boone county folklore, as it was known to exist in this community in the fifties and sixties.

This wonderful story, from the pen of a beloved and wonderful character, literally is surcharged with a refreshing and enlighening philosophy; it even branches into the ethereal realms of themetaphysical. Then it delves into history and science with a startling exactness, with both of which the author is thoroughly familiar.

In fact, when one has perused the chain of beautiful chapters of this latest volume of cherished features of Boone county history, as depicted by this celebrated author, he certainly must respect the hackneyed adjective—unique—as we apply it to this lovely story.

No one, except John Uri Lloyd could have written it.

Just a few days ago the editor of the Recorder received an autographed copy of this book, of which he is inexpressively proud—and for varied reasons. First — the scene, principally, is laid in Boone county, where this newspaper found its inception. Then the grandfather of this editor fought beside Felix Moses, the godfather of the youthful Confederate volunteer, a hero of this story; and, finally, such beautiful Boone county characters as Rev. James A. Kirtley, as well as many others of more or less note, are eulogized with such appropriate brilliancy by one in whom is embodied, as in no other, the privilege—and knowledge to portray such with a pen.

Prof. John Uri Lloyd, the author of this work, truly is Boone county's own son, the writer of several books

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

The Burlington High School Tomcats and Kittens journeyed to California, Ky., last Friday night, January 2nd, and were defeated two games. The Kittens losing their game to the California girls known as the "Jolly Team" by the score of 22 to 16. Phillips, the flashing forward for the Kittens was the high point maker, making 10 of the 16 points. Parker, the center for the Jolly girls, was their high point maker. The Tomcats lost one of the best games they had played this season to the Jolly boys, by a close score of 15 to 13. Captain Greenup, better known as "Romeo" to California, was high point maker for the Tomcats, making six of their 13 points. Rouse a guard for the Jolly boys, was high point maker for the Jolly boys. Next Friday night January 9th, two teams from the south end of Boone county, representing Verona, will challenge the Tomcats and Kittens on the Burlington court. The Verona teams have been defeating some of the best teams in Northern Kentucky. So be on hand at 7 p. m., and root for your team.

Miss Mary B. Rouse, Lucille Rice and Virginia Yelton visited our school last Thursday.

Mr. Marshall Hearin and wife, former principal of Burlington High School, were visitors of our school last Wednesday afternoon.

Londa Lee Jarrell was absent from school Friday due to a death of her aunt.

Our first inter-scholastic debate will be held Thursday evening January 8th, at 7:30 at Auditorium. At this time our affirmative team meets the negative team of Florence High School, debating the question, Resolved That the Chain Store System is detrimental to the best interest of the American public.

The Mid-term examinations will start next week.

The Sophomore class is taking up a detailed study of Silas Marner. This work is to be chiefly done by oral reports and all seem to be entering the work with pep and vigor.

Marie Snelling and George Cook were absent from school Monday.

Mr. Baker, a school teacher from the Richwood school, visited our school last Thursday.

GRADE NEWS

First Grade

There were eight in the first grade that were neither tardy nor absent during the month of December.

The scholarship prizes were won this month by the following pupils: For the first reader class Helen Cress first; Leslie McMullen 2nd. Helen winning by one point. For the first primer class James Gayle Smith won 1st and Geraldine Yelton, Elaine Vice and Edward Stephens tied for second. James Gayle winning by two points. For the second primer class J. D. Jarrell won first and Ada Sorrell won second. J. D. winning by two points.

7th and 8th Grades

The 7th and 8th rooms were busy having mid-term exams all last week.

SANTA CLAUS

MAKES ANNUAL VISIT TO MANY BOONE COUNTY HOMES BY VIRTUE OF GENEROSITY OF PHILANTHROPIC CITIZEN

Only the response of Human Hearts to the call of the spirit of the First Christmas makes possible a "Santa" to visit all the homes for those too impoverished of this world's goods can not play the role. Again in Boone county for the third year one family acted the beautiful part of the Magician of Christmas to 20 homes—and through the baskets of Christmas goodies and substantial food, seventy-six people, members of these families had a feast on Christmas day.

This Christmas spirit and example is contagious, for this year the girls of the Reserve Clubs of Hebron and Burlington and the Sunshine Class of the Burlington Baptist church joined hands with this family and added gifts of their own, making for the children in these homes.

And now to all of those who made possible a REAL Christmas for these of our county families I extend this greeting for the New Year;

"God Bless You Every One."

A coon hunting story, related by Mr. Johnson Sunday evening, was most enjoyable to a number of Boone county listeners, whether or not they were followers of that enjoyable sport.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Carpenter moved from their farm on the East Bend road to their new home in Burlington on Monday of this week. Their new residence was recently purchased from ex-sheriff L. T. Utz and has been improved in every modern detail. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter certainly are welcome additions to this town. S. B. Ryle and family have moved to the Carpenter homestead and Mr. Ryle will operate Mr. Carpenter's farm this year.

Anna Mae Lenhof has been absent for several weeks.

Melicent Berkshire was absent Monday on account of illness.

SHOW FINE FORM IN DEFEATING UNKNOWNS, OF LUDLOW IN LOCAL GYM SATURDAY NIGHT—BAPTISTS DEFEATED BY PETERSBURG IN HARD FOUGHT COMBAT

The Burlington Baptists staged one of the most miserable exhibitions ever before put on by a local team in their church league game at Covington last Saturday afternoon. Just what was the matter no one has been able to determine, but they succumbed to the Dayton Presbyterians by the disgraceful score of 30 to 9. With Lamb back in the lineup after a holiday trip to Western Kentucky followers of the Baptists thought they might give the Dayton team a great battle, if not a beating. But, for some unknown reason, neither offense nor defense could get going.

However, the same team came on to Burlington after the game and put up a great fight against Petersburg, a stronger five than Dayton, on the home court Saturday evening.

The game was hard fought throughout with the score fairly even at every stage. With one minute to play the count stood 18-17 in favor of Petersburg, but Howard Jarrell, the high point man for the visitors, sank a sensational crip to put his mates out of danger just before the final whistle. The scoring for the loca's was fairly evenly divided, Walton [illegible]

The addition of the Williamson brothers to the local high school five means a great deal although both played in the game last Saturday, they are not eligible for high school competition until January 16, when they will be permitted to play against Piner at Piner.

As an aftermath to the evening card two girls teams staged an interesting combat. The alumni of Petersburg High opposed an alumni five from B. H. S., both teams being composed principally of members of last year's teams from these two schools. The Petersburg girls won the tilt by a score of 11 to 8.

Herbert Kirkpatrick, of Petersburg, who for so many years was an honored Burlington citizen, was a caller at the Recorder office Wednesday morning. All hands were overjoyed to see "Hub" once more. It was his first visit to Burlington in many moons.

Earl T. Cropper left Sunday afternoon for Cincinnati after having spent a very enjoyable holiday vacation with his mother, Mrs. Lorena Cropper. Mr. Cropper expected to leave at once for a road trip for his firm, the John H. Hibben Co.

LOCAL HAPPENINGS

Miss Elizabeth Kirby, of Cincinnati, spent the Xmas holidays with her aunt, Mrs. B. E. Aylor here.

Burlington P. T. A. will meet for business Jan. 12th 7:30 p. m., at the Court House.

DELINQUENTS

ARE NOT ADVERTISED IN THIS ISSUE OF RECORDER, DUE TO POSSIBLE MISUNDERSTANDING OF GOVERNOR'S PROCLAMATION—SALE OF AUTO LICENSES ARE MORE THAN 100 BEHIND LAST YEAR

The proclamation issued by Governor Flem D. Sampson of Jan. 1st, has caused no little excitement among taxpayers and officers alike.

While it may have been aimed at relief for distressed, as well as depressed, yet there are those who strained every nerve to make their tax and auto license payments on time who gravely resent the announcement of the proclamation too late to benefit them. They feel that it should have been announced earlier in order to allow more of the so-called "depressed" to benefit.

As far as the legality of the proclamation is concerned Attorney General J. W. Cammack has ruled that all taxes became delinquent on January 1st, and that all sheriffs must necessarily be charged with the customary penalties and interest. Sheriff Herbert Snyder has added all penalties and interest to the delinquent lists in Boone county, but, due to a possible misunderstanding on the part of those who have not yet paid, will not advertise the tardy names until next week's issue of the Recorder. He states, however, that it will become necessary to follow the usual procedure of advertising the delinquents in the next issue in order that the sales may be made on the first Monday in February.

At this writing there are [illegible] than two hundred [illegible] one hundred. No doubt [illegible] number of these are now delinquent due to the fact that they innocently feel that they will be allowed until February 1st, under Gov. Sampson's grant of respite. Mr. Snyder, however, desires to make it plain that under the Attorney General's opinion, he must charge the penalties and interest, or pay the same himself.

County Clerk A. G. McMullen states that his records show that he had sold more auto licenses on January 1st, this year than at the same time last year, but that since the announcement of the Governor's proclamation sales have fallen off to such an extent that he now is more than a hundred behind last year as the Recorder goes to press. The attorney general's opinion relative to tax payments is the same in regard to the payment of auto licenses. In other words all auto owners are required to have license plates attached by January 1st.

ANNUAL POULTRY SCHOOL JANUARY 16TH

The annual Boone county winter poultry school will be held at the Town Hall in Florence on Friday, January 16th according to the report of the Boone county poultry extension committee.

Problems of eliminating high chick losses and increases profits from poultry work will be discussed by leading poultrymen and representatives from the College of Agriculture. A number of brooding demonstrations to show the importance of poultry sanitation will be arranged at the meeting.

The poultry school is an annual educational event in Boone county. It is sponsored by the county extension program and is open free of charge for all who are interested in poultry work. All poultrymen of the county are invited to make plans to attend.

The University of Kentucky has been given the coal rights on the 15,000 acres of land upon which is located the Sub-Experiment Station at Quicksand, Ky Mr. E. O. Robinson donated land for the sub-station some years ago, but reserved the mineral rights. The coal rights have just been donated to the University, and will be of much value. The 15,000 acres lie about ten to fifteen miles east of the Agricultural Sub-Station and are now being developed as a forest reserve.

Both Parties Hold Back On House Organization

(By Mark Vane Collier)

Washington—The situation in the next House presents a real puzzle to leaders on both sides. With the margin of control so narrow, nobody knows just what will happen. Republican leaders admit that if they organize the House they can have no assurance of actual control of legislation. In fact, should the Republicans elect the Speaker and perfect the organization, later developments may give the Democrats numerical control, making a reorganization possible.

At the same time, if the Democrats should succeed in organizing the House when the 72nd Congress meets, or afterward, their margin of control would be entirely too close for comfort, and they might lose it at any time through death of one or more members. However, Minority Leader Garner and his lieutenants are laying plans for the organization of the House. A caucus of Democrats will be called before the present Congress expires.

As the record now stands there will be 218 Republicans, 216 Democrats and 1 Farmer-Labor representatives in the next House. Should Representative Kvale, Farmer-Labor, of Minnesota, cast his lot with the Democrats they still would need one more vote to organize the next House with a margin of one. Reports have been published—and not denied—that under certain conditions Representative La Guardia, Republican, of New York, who is always independent, would be disposed to join with the Democrats. With Kvale and La Guardia on the Democratic side it would be nip and tuck, and the Democrats must obtain support from the Midwestern progressives to retain control.

Some standpat Republicans have stated frankly, but not for quotation, that it might be a good thing to let Garner and his cohorts go ahead and organize the House and assume responsibility for legislation. Republicans who take this view smile broadly when they speak of the load the Democrats would be compelled to carry if they organize the House in the next Congress.

Some leaders who try to take an impartial view of the situation say frankly that it will be virtually impossible to legislate in the House in the next Congress, without the exception of appropriation bills, on account of the close numerical division of the membership, with the situation in the Senate much the same.

Senator Brookhart has announced the withdrawal of his offer to vote with the Democrats in the organization of the Senate, declaring that the Democratic party apparently has "the same sort of leadership as the Republican party." Brookhart and one other Republican or Farmer Labor member could give the Democrats control of the Senate. "So far," said Brookhart, "they have announced no program. The Democratic party seems to be wanting to avoid responsibility, and the country will not trust any party that wants to do that."

The Iowan declared that the much discussed cooperation between Democrats and Republicans "is simply bipartisan Wall Street rule," adding: "It is the same we have had all along. Nearly all laws which are oppressing the people today were passed by this bi-partisan cooperation. Party regularity is the same proposition in both parties. It places party above country and I think is treason to the country. Party policy should always be subordinated to national policy."

HOW THE GOVERNMENT HELPS

One hundred and sixteen million dollars for public works, forty-five millions for the relief of farmers who were affected by the 1930 drought—that is the sum which Congress has put into the President's hands since December 1, as a further effort toward getting money into circulation and getting men back to work.

That ought to help a lot. Many important Federal highway projects have been held up because the states concerned were not in a position to appropriate their share. Under the new appropriation Federal money will be lent to the states, in addition to what the Federal Government pays as its share. It is definite now that the largest road-building program of any year will be carried through in 1931.

The trouble with public works as a means of relieving unemployment emergencies is that they can not be begun instantly. Until money has been appropriated by Congress, State Legislatures or municipal governments, the preliminary plans cannot be drawn. Everybody knows that the building of even a simple house takes a great deal of preliminary time in selecting the lot and drawing the plans before the hauling of materials to the job can commence. How much more time it takes to start work on such a project as the Hoover dam few of us realize. Engineers have been at work for a year on the plans, and are only just now ready to get bids for materials and work. It will be several months before actual work, in the sense of employing any considerable body of workers, can be begun.

The Hoover dam is going through, however, and so are the new Federal highways at a great program of new Federal buildings. The preliminaries have been largely attended to in 1930; 1931 will see the money beginning to flow into the pockets of hundreds of thousand of workers.

Hints for the Home

by Nancy Hart

Cream Dressing

Two and a half tablespoons of mustard.

Eighth of a tablespoon of white pepper.

One saltspoon of salt.

Two tablespoons of tarragon vinegar.

Three quarters cup of cream.

Method:—

Mix and sift the mustard, white pepper and salt. Moisten them with the vinegar and add two tablespoons of the cream. Beat the rest of the cream until it begins to stiffen; fold in the first mixture until ingredients are thoroughly blended, and continue beating till the mixture is stiff.

This is a rich dressing.

Lemon Jelly

One box gelatine soaked in one pint of cold water. Add juice of three lemons and one orange, an inch of stick cannamon and one pint of hot water. Bring to a boil, strain and mould. Serve with custard and whipped cream.

The Way of Life

KILLING WITH KINDNESS

Recently a young couple were subjected to the ordeal of a fashionable church wedding, and started joyously on their honeymoon.

They were a nice boy and girl. His only idea was to find a job at the bottom of some good business where he could carve out a career for himself. She had dreams of making a little home, keeping him happily, listening in the evening to the story of his day's adventures, and helping him by her love and enthusiasm to be a real success.

They had only one draw-back, or rather six draw-backs; two sets of wealthy parents and two very rich old aunts.

While they were away the two aunts had an inspiration. They looked around secretly in the most expensive part of the city and picked out a swell apartment. They employed the highest priced interior decorator, and gave generous orders at the leading furniture stores.

When the couple came back to town they were met by all four parents and the two doting old maids. In a big limousine they were whisked up to the apartment. The lights were switched on. The older people waited expectantly for the exclamations of joy that would greet the splendid lay-out.

Too astonished to say anything, the poor little rich children gazed about them. Then suddenly the bride covered her face with her hands and burst into a flood of tears.

The older people thought that they were tears of joy. In clumsy fashion they began to comfort her, to tell her that what they had given her was nothing in comparison with what they would like to do.

Being a well bred young lady, the bride did not disillusion them. She mumbled some conventional words of thanks and held herself under control until they had gone.

She could not tell them—and they would not have understood—that they had done the cruelest thing imaginable; that they had destroyed her dream and robbed her of one of life's sweetest pleasures. They had tried to be so very kind, and they succeeded only in taking from her the joyful right of every girl to fix up her own little home for herself.

Most of us run no danger of hurting our children in the same degree. We are, fortunately, too poor to rob them very much.

Yet all parents need to be on guard a bit in this prosperous land. Let us have the good sense not to kill with kindness.

Let us give our kids a chance to enjoy the same grand pleasures which we enjoyed—the pleasure of selecting their own mates, making their own homes, and fighting their way up by themselves.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

Luke 3:7-17

When John was thirty years of age the spiritual summons came to begin his work as the Forerunner of Jesus Christ. This man had grown up in the midst of nature.

Others might conduct formal prayers in a synagogue John made a rock his pulpit in some wilderness arena and thither the people flocked to hear him. They could not stay away from such utterances. He dared to tell them about their most inner self, what they thought about that was vile, the things that they did which were contrary to all law and decency. He called them characterizing names such as "O generation of vipers." He demanded they give up saying all kinds of well-sounding platitudes and "bring forth fruits of worthy repentance." When some one would fall back on the fact that he was a Jew, and thus one of God's chosen people, he was told that they could no longer clothe themselves in garments which they would call righteous. Henceforth they must evidence their professions by worthy works.

A new kind of philanthropy was demanded. They must share their extra possessions with those who were in actual need. If a man had a job from which he received wages, he was to stop complaining with his meal ticket and settle down to work as he rendered service for pay received. Further, they must testify of their penitence for past sins and express a solemn purpose after new obedience in the form of baptism. Then multitudes came to him to be baptized as he stood in the waters of the Jordan river. Such a person was thought of as the long promised Messiah. At once John the Baptist declared that he was just preparing the way for the one "who shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

The Family Garden

Garden Seed

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture)

The first seed catalogues for 1931 have made their appearance; more will doubtless come, with every mail, to remind us that the gardening season is about to begin, or that planting time is here.

Garden planting includes several details, but for the time being only the matter of selecting the seed will be taken up. The other items will be discussed in these columns in their order.

Quite too many gardens fall short of the gardener's hopes because of seed haphazardly chosen. For instance, the seed must be fresh if it is to come up and flourish. Too, the varieties must be right so as to fit into the scheme the gardener has in mind.

Now, the seed catalogues are quite explicit as to the good points of the several varieties, or, rather they would be if there were not such a multitude of names from which to choose. There are to begin with, old familiar sorts we have known all our lives. Then, there are improved strains or selections from these, so enthusiastically described as to make us begin to waver in our choice, and, lastly, there are the "novelties" whose glowing descriptions leave us utterly perplexed.

Without wishing to seem unduly conservative, may I suggest that the old standby sorts should have the major part of our gardens, particularly if our experience with them has been satisfactory. These may be supplemented judiciously with special or improved strains of whose behavior we know from persons who have tried them. The "novelties" should be used still more cautiously, in as much as many of the novelties are so short lived, one of them surviving in a seed catalogue just long enough to be replaced by another and never novelty. By this is not meant that there are no points ascribed to them, but the gardener who is not in position to do wholesale experimenting will be safer in playing with the sorts, choosing newcomer varieties only after they have appeared in several catalogues, or in the same catalogue, several years.

And, now, to sum up the matter of making a seed list, the first step would be to get a catalogue, or, better still, several. Thus is had a complete list, and nothing will be overlooked. Next, using the size of the garden as a guide determine what is to be put into it, and in what proportions. Then, choose the varieties which, after study, seem best suited to the purpose of the garden, taking old familiars first, then such special strains of which knowledge is available, and then those "novelties" that are named in more than one catalogue.

Lastly, make the list now, while it may still be done in a deliberative way, or the garden season for 1931, just 'round the corner, the weather and the calendar notwithstanding, may catch us unawares.

The number of Carter county farmers using limestone on their land has increased from five to 300 in six years, County Agent R. H. King reports. Despite the drouth, farmers used 1,600 tons in 930. Limestone was applied in six communities where it had not been previously used. Twelve farmers cooperated with the county agent in demonstrating the value of limestone in growing alfalfa, soybeans and corn.

Farmers are thinking more in terms of good pasture than ever before, says J. F. Graham, farm agent in Caldwell county. A larger percentage of treated land is being seeded to pasture mixtures than to any other thing. Farmers are realizing that good pasture is one of the most profitable crops, and a good soil builder. Some of the old fields classed as waste land are being cleaned up, treated and cultivated one year and seeded to a pasture mixture.

RICHWOOD CHURCH

(Too Late For Last Week)

On a beautiful spot on Christmas day three large snow white candles were seen flickering amid the holly and green pines. They symbolized the presence of "The Father," the Christ, and the Holy Spirit. When Mr. C. C. Cooper, of Pittsburgh, was laid to rest in Richwood cemetery Sunday, and his works viewed by friends who knew him, the spirit of the beautiful candles came in effect. "The Christ, the Individual Others." All were cultured in him and given to the world.

Dr. Dickey, of Hamilton, O., was the Christmas guest of his sister Mrs. Joe Hughes.

Mr. C. C. Cooper and family of Pittsburgh, and Mrs. and Mrs. J. O. Bedinger, were guests of Mr. B. F. Bedinger and family Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Baker and small son John M. are spending part of the holiday season with Mr. Baker's mother, Mrs Baker, of Harrodsburg, Ky.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Reffet delightfully entertained at dinner Sunday the following: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Struve and family, Jess Laws and Frank DeMoisey. A turkey dinner with accessories galore was enjoyed.

NONPARIEL PARK

(Too Late For Last Week)

Miss Minnie Baxter entertained Sunday evening Russell Mitchell and wife Charlie Corbin and wife and Mrs. Fannie Clarkson.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Courtney entertained with a six o'clock dinner Thursday evening. Quite a number of friends and relatives were present.

Melvin Eddins (Pete) and family, of Chicago, visited his parents Lee Eddins and family during the holidays.

Ben Osborn has been very ill the past week.

Wm. Marksberry and wife entertained with a dinner Xmas day in honor of his parents Geo. Marksberry and wife, of Carrollton, Ky., and Harvey Baker and wife and two children.

Wood Stephens and wife entertained with a family dinner on Xmas day in honor of Lee Craddock and family, of East Bend, and Chas. Corbin and wife.

Joe Lucas and wife, of the Dixie Highway, entertained on Christmas day A. S. Lucas and daughter and Emmett Baxter and family.

Geo. Byrns and wife, of Covington, spent the Christmas holidays with her parents, Ben Osborn and wife.

Geo. Miller and wife entertained with a turkey dinner on Xmas day in honor of their children.

L. D. Aylor and wife entertained all their children with a six o'clock dinner on Xmas day. About 30 were present.

W. T. Grant and wife had for their guests Xmas day Geo. Tupman and Mrs. T. Wilson of the Burlington pike.

Mrs. L. Stephens has returned to her home in Covington after spending several months with her son in Tennessee.

The many friends regret to hear of Miss Katie Corbin being very ill the past week.

Russell Mitchell and wife and G. K. Kindard and wife spent Christmas day with Rev. Wilford Mitchell and family, of California, Ky.

Jack Renaker and family entertained with a turkey dinner on Xmas day. The guests were M. P. Barlow and wife, Harry Barlow and wife, J. G. Renaker and wife and Lon Renaker.

Harvey Baker and wife had for guests the past week her parents, Mr. Geo. Marksberry and wife, of Carrollton, Ky.

Robert Snyder and wife entertained with a family dinner on Xmas day the following guests: Wm. Snyder and wife, Charlie Burris and family and Albert Robbins and family.

Arthur Betts and wife, of Cincinnati, were calling on friends here on Friday afternoon.

Tom Osborn and family moved back to their home here after several months stay in Covington.

Watches in Havana Set When Old Gun Is Fired

Among the world's odd timepieces is that by which Havana sets its clocks and watches. Never has it lost a minute, run down or chimed the wrong hour. Nor has its face necessitated the periodic washing that all clocks seem to need.

In fact it really isn't a clock at all, but a battery of 21 old Spanish guns, mounted on the parapet of Cabanas fortress overlooking Havana harbor, one of which is fired nightly at nine o'clock, a custom that has prevailed for nearly four centuries.

Though Havana may bustle with activity throughout the day, hearing a thousand noises and sounds, it listens intently at nine o'clock for the rumble of one of the guns. The electric timepiece in the old fortress is controlled by the adjacent Observatorio Nacional. Each night a few seconds before nine o'clock a bugle sounds the approach of the hour, the gun is rammed and then fired on the dot.

Years ago, before Cuba won its independence, the Spanish fired the gun twice daily—at 12 o'clock noon and at nine, when the gates of the old city of Havana were closed for the night. However, after Cuba became its own master, it was felt needless—and a trifle expensive—to fire the gun at noon, when the city's natural noises drowned the boom of the gun. So the noon shot was discontinued, effecting a saving of seven dollars a day at the time.

Beds in Closets Once Matter of Necessity

This hygienically minded age which scoffs so readily at the European notion that fresh air at night is unhealthy may be chagrined to realize that the open beds on which we sleep nowadays are a natural evolution of the beds with doors which can still be found in peasant quarters in Europe, says the New York Sun.

The last vestige of the old notion of sleeping in a closet was the four-poster bed which, to antique collectors, is a very desirable object.

It was from sheer necessity that people used to sleep in closets. Without central heating it was the only way to keep warm at night, but as houses were better built the closet doors changed to heavy curtains. The next development was leaving off the back and sides and substituting four posts with a canopy from which curtains hung.

Monks In Old Home

The old abbey of Saint-Wandrille, near Rouen, is inhabited again by the Benedictine monks, who used to live in it before the days of the expulsion of religious orders from France. The homecoming of the holy men must have frightened away a good many profane spirits, as the abbey belonged for several years to the Belgian writer, Maurice Maeterlinck, who, with his former wife, the actress Georgette Leblanc, gave there great artistic parties, including productions of famous plays. The old cloisters contributed a beautiful scenery, and "Macbeth" found there an unrivaled setting. Then Maurice Maeterlinck took to other pleasures and other climes, and the abbey of Saint-Wandrille was deserted. Now the monks sanctify it anew.—Exchange.

Beauty Now a Science

The invention of a device to measure beauty is claimed by Jose V. Soriano, student in the University of the Philippines.

The machine consists of a circle divided into more than 20 parts and angles in which the beauty of the fair one can be mathematically determined for purposes of comparison.

The girl is viewed from different angles and her score is the sum total of the grades taken from the various angles.

The highest grade that can be made is 2,000 points and the lowest 450 points.

Yellowstone in 1867

"An exploring party, which has been to the headwaters of the Yellowstone river, has just returned and reports seeing one of the greatest wonders of the world," said an article in the Montana Post on September 14, 1867. "For eight days they traveled through a volcanic country, emitting blue flame and living streams of molten brimstone. The hollow ground resounded beneath their feet as they traveled, and every movement seemed to break through. Not a living thing was seen in the vicinity. The explorers gave it the significant appellation of Hell."

Observer Saw Beauty In Locomotive's Steam

In a period that provides us with opportunities of learning how interesting and even beautiful a thing a railway can be, it is instructive to recall that an earnest observer of a century ago saw, in the Liverpool and Manchester line, a beauty, apparently, such as Keats discovered in the Greek vase on which he bestowed immortality. Alexander Somerville, in his "Autobiography of a Working Man," published originally in 1848, and referring to a period during the thirties of the last century, states:

"All sights which I had seen in London and elsewhere—the beautiful, the grand, the wonderful—shrank into comparative nothingness when, after reaching Liverpool I went into the country for a week, in the neighborhood of Prescot and saw (each day I sought to see it, each hour of the day I could have stood to see it again) the white steam shooting through the landscape of tree, meadows and villages; loaded with merchandise, men and women, and human enterprise, rolling along under the steam. I had seen no sight like that; I have seen nothing to excel it since. In beauty and grandeur the world has nothing beyond it."—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Brazilian Nut Pickers Victimized by Buyers

The business of gathering Brazil nuts in the Amazon jungle resolves itself into a skin game for the natives concerned when the traders, who follow the harvest, arrive with their boatloads of rum and trinkets.

Near a group of huts on the river bank the trade boat stops, writes Hugo Franklin in the Boston Transcript, and there the merchandise is displayed in an improvised "store." The trader sits, like the spider in its web, behind a battery of jugs of rum, surrounded by a few pieces of bright-colored goods, tobacco, bags of salt cans of kerosene, sometimes even cases of cheap beer.

The nut pickers could make a good profit on the long trip up the river to the nut forests if only they would shun the trader, but little by little their crop piles up beside the store. At the end of the season the poor natives owe money to the traders and, unhappy and penniless, offer to pay the debt by helping to load the nuts on the boat and work their way back to civilization.

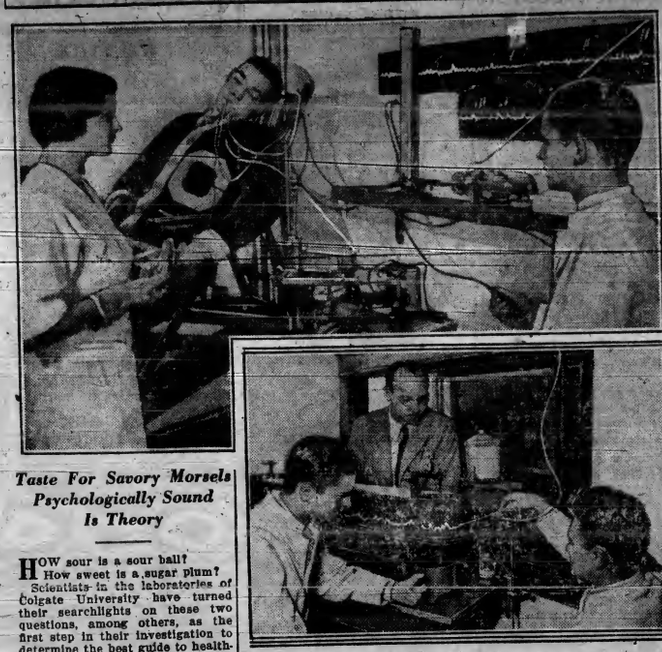
Inspiration of Great Song

Carrie Jacobs Bond, author of "The End of a Perfect Day," describes the circumstances under which the song was written as follows: "The story of the writing of 'The End of a Perfect Day' has been told many, many times and in many, many ways, but the truth is a very simple story. The inspiration came to me as I was viewing a wonderful sunset from the top of Mount Rubidoux in Riverside, Calif. I had been motoring through southern California and we had been seeing many beautiful sights, but the glory of this sunset from the mountain was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen. I hurried back to the Mission inn to get ready for dinner and while dressing I thought how I wished I could express my thanks to those friends in some little way, just out of the ordinary, and almost at once came the words of 'A Perfect Day.'"

Peculiar Hairdressing

German tribes, in olden days, paid a good deal of attention to their hair, says an article in a Boston paper. In certain districts a red dye apparently was used to dye the hair a bright red. The more easterly German tribes usually wore their hair long and loose over the shoulders, men as well as women.

The Saxons, however cut their hair fairly short. Some western tribes had a curious custom or tying the hair on the right side of the head into a knot, with the ends greased to make them protrude like horns. The women in all parts of Germany had a great variety of combs and brooches to keep their long hair in place, although unmarried women appear to have worn their hair loose.—Detroit News.



That Word "Funny"

The word "funny" has a very wide meaning in Scotland. It does not merely signify amusing or entertaining; it is more frequently used to describe something interesting, unusual, or even alarming. In childhood to feel funny on a Monday morning often meant a day off school; it was a vague form of illness that might be anything, and was safer than complaining of anything local. "He's a funny character" does not imply that he is an amusing person, but that he is rather shady. But perhaps the funniest use of "funny" was that of the old lady who asked her little grandson when he returned from a visit to the neighboring gasworks, "Was it funny, Johnnie; was it funny?"

Monarch's Penance

The dignitary who was made to perform a penance of standing in the snow while petitioning for absolution and reinstatement, during three days, was King Henry IV, emperor of Germany, who had been excommunicated in 1076 by Pope Gregory VII and who evidenced his submission in this manner. However, after his reconciliation Henry was again excommunicated and his son, Henry V, was excommunicated and reconciled not less than four times.

Should We Eat the Foods We Like? Colgate Scientists Probe For Answer

Taste For Savory Morsels Psychologically Sound Is Theory

HOW sour is a sour ball? How sweet is a sugar plum?

Scientists in the laboratories of Colgate University have turned their searchlights on these two questions, among others, as the first step in their investigation to determine the best guide to healthful eating.

Working on the theory that foods which please the eye and palate are an aid to digestion, the laboratories, under the direction of Dr. Donald A. Laird, Director of the Department of Psychology, have already begun a check-up, using members of the student body as human guinea pigs.

As a basis for the investigation, Dr. Laird points out that food fads, which have flourished in recent years, have kept thousands of persons from eating foods they really liked and wanted.

"The tendency has been," according to Dr. Laird, "to consider human beings as machines, functioning on proteins, fats, carbohydrates and other chemical elements. Whether human likes and dislikes—the taste of foods rather than their chemical make-up—are not the best general guides to healthful eating, is one of the questions which we hope to answer through research."

"Sweetness, for instance," Dr. Laird continues, "is an almost universally liked flavor. Past research in our laboratories has shown that sweet foods are one of the best sources of quick energy. The research which lies before us may further prove the sound basis for a liking for sweets, by showing that sweetness is an excellent guide to the foods we need for general good health."

A unique scale, known as a "taste thermometer" has been constructed in the laboratory as one of the devices called into play to measure the degree to which the taste of foods affects the mood of the eater and the process of digestion. Through this instrument it is possible to set a standard for the intensity of taste of all sweet, sour, salt and bitter foods, and to answer the question as to just how sweet, sour, salt or bitter various foods in these groups are.

Other instruments carefully record the contractions of the stomach, showing how that important part of the body reacts to types of foods. From these records, Dr. Laird hopes to show the importance of a psychologically sound diet, emphasizing the need for consideration of taste, odor and appearance along with the chemical make-up of foods served on the family table.

FLORENCE

Residents of our little town were once more given the opportunity to enjoy Carol Singers on Xmas eve. We surely owe an expression of thanks to this group of earnest christian people who deny themselves the comfort of their warm fireside to go trudging through the snow singing these blessed songs of praise and joy for a Saviour born on Xmas day.

Joy to the world the Lord is come
Their voices sweet and clear,
Came to us by our fireside warm
As they were gathered near.

Then passing on they called to us
Merry Xmas one and one,
Till their voices passed beyond hearing
And they paused at another door.

We thank you friends, we thank you
Who ever you may be,
And may the joy you wished for us
Be multiplied for thee.

High Ideals Sought In Principles of Bahaism

The religious sect known as Bahaism originated in Persia in 1844. The first prophet was Ali Mohammed, or the Bab. Hosein Ali was the first adherent of the Bab and later announced himself as the one Bab foretold. He became known as Baha'u'llah. He died in 1892, and before his departure named his oldest son, Abdul Baha Abbas, interpreter of his text and the center of his covenant. He passed away November 28, 1921, and in his will designated his grandson, Shoghi Effendi, guardian of the cause. The general principles of the Bahais founded upon the teachings of Baha-'u'llah are: The oneness of mankind; the independent investigation of truth; the foundation of all religions is one; religion must be the cause of unity; religion must be in accord with science and reason; equality between man and woman; prejudice of all kinds must be forgotten; universal peace; universal education; solution of the economic problem; a universal language; an international tribunal. The Bahais believe in the essential necessity of the intermediation of the Messianic principle, or the holy spirit, in the life of humanity.

Stevenson's Tribute to Civil Autograph Hunter

In "Word Shadows of the Great," Thomas F. Madigan tells of a lucky man who received this charming letter from Robert Louis Stevenson, then living in Samoa, to whom he had written, asking for his autograph:

"For the one civil autograph collector, Charles R.:

"You have sent me a slip to write on; you have sent me an addressed envelope; you have sent it to me stamped; many have done as much as that. You have spelled my name right; and some have done that. In one point you stand alone; you have sent me the stamps for my own post office, not the stamps for yours. What is asked for with so much consideration I take pleasure to grant. Here, since you value it, and have been at such pains to earn it by unusual attentions—here is the signature. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON."

Ancient Chessboard

A chessboard seven thousand years old was found in the tomb of the Egyptian high priest, Jarso Angh. Besides the mummy and the chessboard the tomb contained statues of the priest and his wife.

From this find it would appear that the game dates from a period of at least 5,000 years before Christ and that it is of Egyptian and not Persian or Chinese origin, as considered before. The ancient story of the man who agreed to pay a debt by placing a grain of wheat upon the first square of a chessboard, two grains on the second, four grains on the third, eight grains on the fourth, etc., seems also to have been of Egyptian origin. The calculation, thus carried out, will be discovered to require, long before the sixty-fourth square is reached, more wheat possibly than has ever been produced in all the world.—Exchange.

Precocity, or Coaching?

There are in existence but the most meager threads of information concerning the youth of Francis Bacon. Up to his thirty-first year there is scarcely one fact of his life which is of importance to a biographer.

Upon one occasion Sir Nicholas is said to have taken Francis to court and presented him to the queen. Elizabeth fondled his hair, called him "my young lord keeper," and asked him his age. To this question the child answered, "Just two years younger than your majesty's happy reign!" To some biographers this precocious reply has seemed a prophecy of Francis Bacon's later skill at flattering royalty; to others, however, it seems but a tribute to the coaching abilities of Sir Nicholas.—From "Sir Francis Bacon," by Byron Steel.

Jewish Festival

The Feast of Lights is Hanukka, the Jewish Feast of Dedication. The distinctive ceremonial feature of this festival today is the kindling of lights in the home and in the synagogue, one on the first evening, the number being increased by one on each consecutive evening, until eight lights are lit on the last evening of the festival. Special prayers inspired by the historic event commemorating the triumph of monotheism over heathenism, or the forces of light over the forces of darkness, are recited. Special scriptural portions are read in the synagogue. In modern times, children's festivals, in which the story and significance of the feast are recounted, have become a marked feature in the celebration of the Feast of Dedication.

Early Card Games

Cards for playing games of chance are of the most remote antiquity and have almost universal usage. There is evidence that they were in use in Egypt at the time of Joseph; that their use extended as far east as Hindustan and China at a period long before their introduction into Europe is well attested. The design and number of cards in a pack varied. Even the names of most of the old games are found only in antiquarian works. Chief among them is one called "primero." This long continued a fashionable game. Other early games were: Mauve, piquet, loadus, noddy, macke, oupre, gleek, post and pair, and bank rout.

Republicans Work Diligently To Obviate An Extra Session

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Holmes)
(Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder)

Washington— Mills other than those fabled ones of the gods will have to be put in operation if Congress disposes of some 15 bags of legislative grist in time to obviate the necessity for a special session. The mills of the gods may grind exceeding small, but they grind altogether too slow for the present purposes of Congress—that is to say, that portion of Congress outside of Mr. Borah.

Forecasts prepared at the Capitol during the holiday recess indicate that Congress faces a heavy task in the effort to pass all appropriations and miscellaneous bills in the eight weeks remaining before adjournment on March 4. So threatening is the outlook, according to seasoned observers, that Republican leaders in both Senate and House will need all of their skill to avoid an extra session, which the Hoover Administration is so desirous of escaping.

The greatest difficulty is expected in the Senate, where, in addition to the appropriation bills and other matters with which the House will also be engaged, renewed outbreaks are anticipated over the row between Robert H. Lucas, executive director of the Republican National Committee, and Senator Norris, Republican insurgent, whose party standing has been challenged by Mr. Lucas. In many quarters it is the opinion that this controversy, and that over the dismissal of the chief accountant and the solicitor of the Federal Power Commission, possess extraordinary potentialities for harm to the Republican program for prompt passage of the appropriation bills, upon the enactment of which an extra session really demands.

Possibly the legislative mills might be seeded up for such commonplace grists, but the breaking of speed records is hardly to be expected when meal-grinding machinery has to be entirely readjusted for rock crushing. It is believed that before the new year is far advanced both houses will be engulfed in controversies over Muscle Shoals, which House leaders want to dispose of at this session, the Norris "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution, the Cooper-Kelly fair-price bill, prohibition appropriations, and the anti-injunction bill. And back of all of these threatening issues one which, in the opinion of many leaders, holds still greater potentialities for trouble—the proposal of redeem the adjusted service certificates now held by World War veterans, wholly or partly in cash. Agitation in behalf of this proposal is rapidly assuming such proportions in all parts of the country as to create the belief that its consideration before the session ends is inevitable.

Then there is another issue hovering in the balkground, and that is the question as to the merits of prohibition, to which the forthcoming report of the Wickersham Law Enforcement Commission is expected to be addressed. Even without this report indications point to sharp encounters in both houses over appropriations and also over the District of Columbia enforcement bill which is to come up in the Senate.

House Republican leaders, with a majority of 100 still at the party's command, will enter the last two months of the session determined to pass the appropriation bills promptly and to arrange for such speedy consideration of controversial issues as to put the burden of avoiding an extra session squarely on the Senate. Speaker Longworth has promised that the House will get through in time to make an extra session unnecessary. In carrying out this promise, the Speaker and his lieutenants have arranged to bring up the Cooper-Kelly fair-price bill early in the new year and prepare the way for votes on Muscle Shoals and the Norris "lame duck" amendment shortly thereafter.

So much for the House. The Senate has still another and portentous issue. Its name is Borah. Statements from Administration leaders opposing an extra session of the new Congress drew from the Idaho Senator an accusation that such statements represent "an effort to assign a patriotic excuse for going home or going to Europe." While Senator Borah disclaimed to filibuster against appropriation bills as a method of forcing an extra session, his announcement lends encouragement to those Senators who are insisting that their program for Muscle Shoals, the anti-lame duck amendment, the Wagner unemployment bills and farm relief legislation be enacted during the present session. This group includes the progressive Republicans and a substantial number of Democrats, and their only practicable weapon is delaying the appropriation bills.

"It is a strange thing to me," said Mr. Borah, "to have men fighting to get into Congress and telling the people all the things they want to do and then making every excuse possible to go home and do nothing. I suggest they turn their salaries over to the hungry until they get back." It may be set down that no wild demonstration of approval followed the Senator's suggestion.

It is not to be doubted that the present House will do its duty. Apparently, however the Administration opponents object to waiting until next December for the new Congress, in which the Republicans have little hope of maintaining a working majority. The chief danger arises from a filibuster in the Senate during the closing days of this short session. To sidetrack such a movement, Senator Moses, of New Hampshire, has proposed to the President the application of a parliamentary device which has not been used for more than ten years but which has proved effective in emergencies.

It is the "continuing resolution," which renews current appropriations so as to make them apply to the next fiscal year until regular appropriation bills can be passed. It is proposed two or three weeks before the end of a short session to forestall a filibuster, and it has a privileged status which operates against obstruction. It is to be hoped that the anti-Administration legislators will not force the adoption of such an extreme measure. At best it is thought that an extra session would provide little more than a playground for the game of politics.

Senator Borah may feel that a special session of Congress would contribute to a recovery in business. At least in the eastern half of the country a vast majority of the public, we believe, would disagree with him. Fear of a special session is not limited to millionaires who hope to avoid higher taxes and stock brokers who are always happier when Congress is adjourned. This fear extends to many small business men, to shopkeepers and to laboring men. These people have gradually been losing confidence in the machinery of popular government. It has taken the present emergency to reveal the full measure of their skepticism.

CHAIRMAN LEGGE TO SPEAK AT FARM AND HOME CONVENTION

Alexander Legge, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, plans to address Kentucky farmers during the 19th annual Farm and Home Convention to be held at the Experiment Station at Lexington January 27-30, Dean Thomas P. Cooper announces. Mr. Legge will speak Tuesday, Jan. 27, the opening day of the convention, according to praesent plans.

This year's convention promises to be one of the most interesting in the nineteen years that it has been held at the University, it is said. Many outstanding speakers have been secured both from within and without the state, and many problems of vital interest to farm women and all persons interested in the welfare of agriculture will be discussed.

The convention proper will consist of two general sessions throughout the four days, one for farmers and one for homemakers. In addition there will be several special gatherings of livestock breeders, veterinarians and other organizations.

Eight Master Farmers and five Master Homemakers will be recognized and honored with banquets and special programs.

This annual farm meeting usually attracts several thousand people during the week from practically all parts of the state and from surrounding states. Speakers of national prominence, lectures, demonstrations, music and other features help to make the program attractive.

Mrs. B. S. Norman entertained with a delightful dinner party at her home Tuesday Dec. 30th. Decorations in keeping with the holiday season graced the table, where covers were laid for Mrs. J. W. Taliaferro, of Erlanger, Mrs. Sam C. Hicks, Mrs. Eliza Garrison, Mrs. A. P. Dickerson, Mrs. John B. Dickerson, Mrs. J. J. Garrison, Mrs. N. S. Bristow, Miss Nannie P. Burkett, Mrs. James A. Huey, Mrs. Katherine H. Rachal and the hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Berkshire enjoyed a re-union of their family circle on Christmas Day. Their guests included Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Berkshire and son, Norris, of Petersburg, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley B. Palmer, and two sons, of Louisville, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Woodruff and daughter, of May's Lick. A very pleasant interruption in the form of a telephone call occurred in the afternoon. When the call was answered, at the other end of the line could be heard the voice of Mrs. W. T. Crisler, of Brooklyn, New York, a sister of B. H. Berkshire. Before the conversation had been finished several members of each family had joined in the exchange of holiday greeting over the wire.

W. M. U. NOTES

(Too Late for Last Week)

On Thursday of last week the W. M. U. of Big Bone observed the week of prayer at their regular meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. Eunice Love. Nineteen members were present and did sewing to be sent out as mission work and had some very interesting discussions. Arrangements were made to send out Christmas cards to the members who are unable to attend our meetings at a late hour. We parted hoping to meet again at the church January 8. We urge all members to attend.

MRS. PAUL AYLOR,
Chairman.

Edgar Maurer and William Phillips received medals at the M. E. Christmas entertainment for two continuous years without having missed a Sunday in attendance. William Greenup and Miss Mabel Mitchell were honored for having attended one continuous year.

C. O. Portwood, of the Waterloo neighborhood, dropped in for a short call with us Wednesday of this week. Mr. Portwood reported that his son, Owen, topped the Covington tobacco market on that day when two baskets of his scrap reached the $32.00 mark.

Clyde Arnold, of Detroit, was visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Arnold on the Belleview pike during the holidays.

Christmas Day brought a new son to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Cook at their home in Tanner's Lane near Burlington.

Mule Has Long Life

The average age of a horse is sixteen years. Mules and jackasses live to be of great age, although the average length of life is approximately sixteen years. There have been records of mules having lived 35 to 40 years.

Righteousness

The man of high station without righteousness is a menace to the state; the common man who has courage without righteousness is nothing more than a brigand.—Confucius.

Average Length of Life Constantly on Increase

Figures based on the census of 1930 show that the expectation of life in the United States at birth is 59.4 years (55.3 for males and 57.5 for females). About 50 years ago it was only 40 years. The World Almanac quotes Dr. Louis Dublin, insurance statistician, as saying that the expectation of life has increased but the span of life has remained stationary. He states: "That 20 years have been added to the average length of human life since public health work began to be actively practiced in the early eighties of the last century is true. But this gain can be traced to the reduced mortality of infants and to the cutting down of the unnecessary and preventable deaths of young people from typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, smallpox and a host of other diseases which, for the most part, affect persons under forty years of age. Improvement after the age of forty has been slight and almost altogether limited to women." According to various estimates, the total population of the world is continuing to increase every year.

Picture Earth's Core as Holding Rich Treasure

A bonanza beyond belief exists from two to three thousand miles below the surface of the earth, according to two geophysicists of the Carnegie Institute of Washington. From all the known data these scientists infer that this planet is a solid ball of nickel and iron enclosed in three shells of rock.

Conjecture how the financial giants could cash in on that, were it accessible, if from mere pinpricks on the surface they pile up millions! But the scientists follow with the information that a shaft more than 2,000 miles deep would have to be sunk to reach the riches. It is doubtful if all the wealth in the world would pay for excavating a small fraction of the distance.

The core, according to the scientists' theory, is surrounded by three shells. The first is of granite, about 35 miles; the second of basaltic rock, increasing in density for about 1,000 miles, and the third of heavy rock impregnated with iron, or nickel and iron for 1,000 to 1,500 miles.

Cintra the Beautiful

Cintra lies at the foot of steep wooded hills and is one of the most beautiful and historic spots in Portugal. Byron wrote of Cintra: "If there be any place in the world entitled to the appellation of an enchanted region, it is surely Cintra; Tivoli is a beautiful and picturesque place, but it quickly fades from the mind of those who have seen the Portuguese paradise. When speaking of Cintra, it must not for a moment be supposed that nothing more is meant than the little town or city; by Cintra must be understood the entire region, town, palace, quintas, forests, crags, Moorish ruin which suddenly burst on the view on rounding the side of a bleak, savage and sterile-looking mountain. The other side is a mingled scene of fairy beauty, artificial elegance, savage grandeur, domes, turrets, enormous trees, flowers and waterfalls, such as is met with nowhere else beneath the sun."

"Dizzy" and His London

All lovers of the primrose will want to see something of Lord Beaconsfield when they are in London. Disraeli's statue is in Parliament square and like other famous men he has many birthplaces. No. 22 Theobald's road, Bloomsbury, seems to have the best tradition. He worked at 6 Frederick place, Old Jewry, four years before he startled the world with his "Vivian Grey." Then he lived at 29 Park lane, opposite Grosvenor gate, until 1872 where he wrote "Coningsby" and made his climb to political power. Later he lived at 2 Whitehall gardens. His last London home was at 19 Curzon street, where he died, and where, 'tis said, he gently declined to see Queen Victoria because "she only wants me to give a message to the prince consort."

Dutch Water Village

No traveler knows Holland unless he has seen at least one water village. One of the loveliest is Aalsmeer—famous also for the box trees grown there. Aalsmeer consists of one long, straight village street—in fact, no more than a towing path—with a canal on either side. Small swing bridges connect the houses with the path, and many of them are entirely encircled by water, each one solitary, picturesque and prosperous. The villagers propel their barges by means of a pole when they take to market cargoes of delicious strawberries and curiously shaped box trees. They are cut into the shapes of men and animals—looking just as if some enchanter had turned a whole menagerie into box trees.

Seventh-Day Believers

The name "Seventh Day Adventists," which is the official designation of a Christian sect, refers to two different beliefs or doctrines. "Adventism" is the doctrine that the second coming of Christ and the end of the world are near at hand, and an Adventist is one who believes in this doctrine. "Seventh Day" refers to the fact that the Seventh Day Adventists also believe that the seventh day of the week rather than the first is the true Sabbath, and accordingly they regard Saturday as the Sabbath.

Accumulation of Ages in Dead Sea's Flotsam

Travelers in the Holy land visiting the deepest hole in the earth's surface, that occupied by the Dead sea, into which the Jordan empties itself, are always struck with astonishment at the sight of countless numbers of palm tree trunks, heaped by the waters on its banks.

There are now no such numbers of palm groves in the vicinity, or on the banks of the Jordan, the Arnon or other rivers flowing into this sea, as would account for so prodigious an amount of debris. Any attempt at building a fire out of the mass of flotsam, results, after exercising much patience, in feeble, blue flames of no great intensity. The wood is heavily impregnated with salt from the Dead sea—Salt sea, or Lake Asphaltes as it has been called—that is, is pickled and will last for centuries.

The accumulations of countless ages are represented in those piles of roots and logs, carrying the mind back to the time when the four kings made the first incursion from Mesopotamia into Canaan, near Hazazon-Tamar, or "The Rows of Palms," the modern Engedi. (Genesis 14:7), captured Lot and his family, but were followed and defeated by Abraham.

Bus Passengers Out of Luck in Spanish Town

The poorer class of Spain believes that if you cannot catch the man who deserves punishment, the best thing to do is to punish some one else, even if vengeance is exacted upon those who knew nothing about what had happened.

In a little village in the province of Valencia a small boy was knocked down and slightly injured by a passing automobile. The driver did not stop, but the villagers decided that some one ought to be punished. So they lined up in the main street, under command of the magistrate, to pummel the first automobilist who came through.

Unluckily, the first car was a big bus. It was halted and the driver and all the passengers were pulled out and given a thorough beating. None of them knew what it was all about, but the punishment was so real that 15 had to be treated by doctors when the bus reached the nearest city and three had to go to a hospital.

Secret of Caves

Scientists have been trying for years to piece together the story of the Mayas as revealed in the ruins of their pyramids, temples and monuments, and now the investigators are confronted with a new problem, a series of vast caverns in Yucatan which extend for many miles, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Pictures and inscriptions on the walls indicate that the caves have been visited by human beings, but so far archeologists have been unable to decipher the marks or establish the time when they were carved. Were the caverns used for burial places or for religious rites? Science cannot tell. There is no evidence that they were used for human habitation, although this is a possibility.

Kamehameha's Conquest

After King Kamehameha had gained control of his own island, Hawaii, he was eager to rule the whole group. He first conquered the island of Maui, then Molokai, after which he sailed for Oahu, landing at Waikiki, in February, 1795. The Oahu soldiers were posted in Nuuanu valley and here the great battle was fought. The enemy, or Oahu men, were driven over the pali. Kauai and Niihau were interceded to him and in this way he brought all the islands under his guidance or rule.—Washington Evening Star.

Jiujutsu of Chinese Origin?

"My old teacher told me," recalls Taro Miyeake, Japanese exponent of jiujutsu, in an interview in the Atlanta Journal, "that jiujutsu is a development of the old Chinese method of fighting with the fingers extended. This was a very dangerous and skillful system. A man straightened out his fingers stiffly and jabbed with them, preferably for the eyes. Failing to reach the eyes, he sought various nerve centers on the body.

"When the Japanese took up the science, more than 1,000 years ago, they began to improve it. Instead of jabbing for the eyes they gradually developed a system of leverages that would work against bones and nerve centers."

Ancient City of Bergamo

One of the most picturesque towns of Lombardy in Italy is the ancient little city of Bergamo, perched on a conspicuous hill and still redolent of the days when the Venetians made it one of their fortresses. It is a quaint and crooked place with many interesting buildings. The church of Santa Maria Maggiore, dating in part from 1137, has excellent Romanesque work of black and white marble. During the greater part of its history Bergamo belonged to the state of Venice, having acquired the city from Milan in 1428 and retaining it until 1797.

Forget Troubles

Troubles magnify themselves too largely in fearful anticipation. The result is wasted worry. Remember the adage of the ancient philosopher who remarked: "I am an old man and have had many troubles, but the most of them never happened."—Grit.

Chinese Breeders Make Varieties of Goldfish

Goldfish made their first appearance in Europe in the year 1691, having been imported from St. Helena," writes Dr. Berthold Laufer, in the Field Museum News. "They had come to St. Helena from Bavaria, and Chinese settlers who emigrated to Java had brought them along as a reminder of their home country.

"Charles Darwin believed that goldfish had been kept in confinement in China from an ancient period. The belief is well founded and is strongly supported by Chinese records. The goldfish is a native of China and still is to be found in a wild state in rivers there. It has been brought by the Chinese not only into a complete state of domestication, but also numerous varieties and the many fantastic and grotesque monstrosities with protruding eyes or with three and four lobed tails are the products of Chinese effort. These varieties were produced, not by chance, but by a studied and conscious method of interbreeding."

"Burning Spring" Owned by George Washington

Curiosity may have killed a cat but it also made George Washington one of the first investors in natural gas property.

In 1775 he visited a tract near Charleston, W. Va., where a strange "burning spring"—flames of escaping gas, probably ignited by a water-seeker who came at night with a lantern—attracted his attention. Although the father of our country could not have known it, the property he bought was in the heart of a great natural gas field. He presented his property to the nation as a naturnl park.

The first well in this field, however, was not discovered until the early 1800s when two brothers, David and Joseph Ruffner, drilled a 58-foot shaft for salt in the great Kanawha valley of East Virginia, and opened up a gas well.

Pays to Enter Own Door

How would you like to have to pay a fee for entering your own front door? The vicar of St. Bride's, Fleet street, has to do this. Bridewell place, at the back of the church where the vicarage is situated, was built on land belonging to the Bridewell foundation, and the old dividing wall ran along the lines of the present vicarage railings. The result is that there is no free right of way into the house, and the vicar has to pay a toll of a guinea (about $5) a year. Bridewell has had an interesting history. Formerly a palace, it became in turn a hospital, a "house of occupations," a workhouse, and a prison. It ceased to be a prison in 1864, when Holloway jail took its place, but there still is a cell for apprentices who may be committed there by the city chamberlain. It never is used.—London Tit-Bits.

Originally Nautical Terms

"Westward Ho" and "Eastward Ho" were old nautical terms, familiar to the inhabitants of London because of their frequent use by the boatmen on the Thames. In Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" Olivia says: "There lies your way, due west." Viola replies: "Then westward ho! Grace and good disposition attend your ladyship." In 1605 Chapman, Marston, and Ben Jonson published a comedy entitled "Westward Hoe," and in 1832 James K. Paulding published a novel with the same title. "Westward Ho! or The Voyages and Adventures of Sir Amyas Leigh in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth" was the title of a book published by Charles Kingsley in 1852. The passage quoted from Shakespeare was probably written about 1601.—Exchange.

Popular Old Legend

In the middle of the Sixteenth century the legend of the "Wandering Jew" received popular life in Germany owing to the claims of a man who announced himself to be the "Ewige Jude" himself. In Hamburg he gave his name as Ahasuerus, and stated that he had been a shoemaker in Jerusalem who would not suffer Christ to rest at his door when fainting under the weight of the cross.

He struck Jesus, and ordered him to move on, whereupon Jesus said: "I will stand here and rest, but thou shalt go on until the last day." This man's story was subsequently published on the authority of a Lutheran clergyman, who claimed to have met the Jew in Hamburg.

British Royal Palace

The present site of Buckingham palace, at London, was occupied during the reigns of Charles I and II by Mulberry gardens, a fashionable resort. It was then bought by the earl of Arlington, and Arlington house erected. This was demolished in 1703, and the ground bought and the original Buckingham palace built of red brick by John Sheffield, the first duke of Buckingham. He bequeathed it to his widow, who was a natural daughter of James I. It was bought for the British royal family by George III and settled by him upon his Queen, Charlotte.

"Push" Brings Success

Hustle is the real secret of a better job. And by hustle is meant preparation, diligence, industry, and trustworthiness. Too many men imagine that it's lack of pull that is holding them back, whereas in reality it is lack of push.—Grit.

Welcomed End of Edict Against Highland Dress

A Highland exhibition, illustrative of olden times and life in the Highlands, held in Inverness, Scotland, attracted many hundreds of visitors. There was among the many "relics" of the '45 a rare copy of a Gaelic proclamation permitting the use of the Highland dress after it was banned. The proclamation was sent by Rev. R. L. Ritchie, Creich, Sutherland, and the Gaelic spelling is in parts phonetic. The English translation is as follows: "Listen, men! This is bringing before all the sons of the Gael that the king and parliament of Britain have for ever abolished the act against the Highland dress that came down to the clans from the beginning of the world to the year 1746. This must bring great joy to every Highland heart. You are no longer bound to the unmanly dress of the Lowlander. This is declaring to every man, young and old, gentles and commons, that they may after this put on and wear the trews, the little kilt, the doublet, the small plaid, along with the tartan kilt, without fear of the law of the land or the jealousy of enemies."

Honor Well Bestowed on Chief Justice Taft

One day, along about midwinter, Joseph Tumulty, former secretary to President Woodrow Wilson, was taking his constitutional across the million-dollar bridge on Connecticut avenue when he saw a well-known and gigantic figure striding ahead of him. Before Mr. Tumulty had a chance to quicken his own stride and catch up, as he usually did, a stranger in a muddy, small auto bearing an Ohio license drew up beside the huge figure ahead.

"Say, guy! Could you tell me how to get to 700 California avenue?"

The large man stopped, smiled, went to the side of the muddy flivver and explained carefully and in detail how the stranger could reach the desired destination.

As he finished, the man from Ohio started his engine and called gratefully to the polite Washingtonian:

"Thanks, Chief!" and drove away.

Little did the stranger know how nearly he had hit the truth when, in his impersonal gratitude, he had called the late Chief Justice William Howard Taft "Chief."—Collier's Weekly.

Spider's Wonderful Web

The first thing that a spider does in weaving his web is to lay the foundation line. He attaches a line at the point of departure and crawls along spinning it as he goes and holding up the newly spun thread by the claws of one of his hind feet until it reaches a considerable length. He then draws in the slack and makes it fast. The spider then goes over the line several times to strengthen the foundation, after which he spins the other lines of the web. In the case of lines of webs appearing great distances apart the spider emits a thread, which is cut by the air current from its spinnerets until it becomes entangled in the surrounding branches. This power of emitting silk some little distance and allowing the wind to draw it out is frequently exercised in the early life of many spiders.

"Budget's" Original Meaning

The word "budget" can be traced back to the Latin word "bulga," but it is believed that this was itself an adaptation of a word from the Celtic language of old Gaul. It meant a "leather bag;" and from it we have the old English "bouge," "a bag," and "budget," "a little bag," which was in slang used to mean something like "a bag of tricks." In 1733 a pamphlet on Sir Robert Walpole's forthcoming excise bill was published entitled "The Budget Opened," the phrase being used as equivalent to "the cat out of the bag." Henceforth a chancellor of the exchequer making his statement of proposed taxes was said to "open his budget;" and soon the word "budget" was used without jocular intent of the statement itself.—Montreal Family Herald.

Transporting Criminals

In England, under a statute of 1597, "dangerous rogues" might be banished by justices, but no system of transportation of criminals can be said to have arisen until the time of Charles II, when justices were empowered to send certain offenders to America instead of inflicting the death penalty. In 1717 transportation was authorized as a substitute for other punishments than hanging, and the contract system, by which individuals agreed to transport convicts in return for their labor during the period of sentence, was established. Protests from America were frequent, but unavailing. Most of the colonies received some of these criminals.

Carbonated Waters

Artificially aerated waters had their inception in Priestley's success in 1772 in producing aerated water in imitation of a naturally aerated mineral spring water. Large scale manufacture of aerated water was commenced by Paul at Geneva in 1790 and shortly after by Schweppe in London. In the United States, Priestley's experiments interested a Philadelphia physician, Dr. Philip Syng Physick, and he induced a chemist, Townsend Speakman, to prepare carbonated water for his patients. Speakman added fruit juice as a flavor, and the soft-drink industry in this country started at that time, 1807.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

SEASONABLE HINTS

The crisp, invigorating days of autumn somehow inspires one with renewed courage and faith in the things about us. The appetite becomes keener, the breathing deeper; the morning walk in the open drives away the fatigue of mid-summer. The machinery of digestion takes on a new hum; in short, we "feel better all over."

The rural housewife finds much for her capable hands to do. Think of the canning of pears, the preserving of late plums, the pickling, canning, catsuping of the luscious fall tomato! Such substantials for the winter-day dining table! How we anticipate, as we carry out autumn details!

I am in direct touch with the National Canners Association of Amerika, and with great benefit to myself as an advisor to the public in the interests of more and better health. I find the great canning industry striving, with every improved facility known, to give our people the best in sealed provisions, employing the most skilled scientists in laboratory tests, in order t provide nutriment of unparalelled flavor and pdrity for our people. The winter fruit-can holds the juices, vitamines, proteins, so acceptable to sight living. Our canned products reach outward to the four corners of the earth.

In time, the housewife will escape the exacting duties of canning fruits; they can be put up fresh by the great and expert technicians, cheaper more convenient to handle, and can be obtained ready to use with little outlay, compared with the drudgery of home canning.

We are well past the age when copper was used to color the glass jar of commercial pickles. Poisons are no longer used as bleaches or preservatives. The tin can is used where such employment is scientifically appropriate I hear of little or no illness caused by the impure canning of fruits and vegetables. The summer, with its host of invaders of the partially-eaten canned food is gone. The "culture season" is over. But I am horribly afraid of the parsly-used, hot-weather can of pigs' knuckles and other potted meats!

OPEN FRONT POULTRY HOUSE IS BEST HERE

The open front poultry house is the best type for Kentucky conditions, according to Howard Matson, farm engineer for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Such houses equipped with muslin curtains to use in severe weather have been found satisfactory on hundreds of Kentucky farms.

In the usual Kentucky weather, Mr. Matson sees little use for glass, glass substitutes or muslin over the front of the house. With the front open, the birds are assured good ventilation and direct sunlight. During storms, muslin curtains can be let down, and still enough air will get through to provide ventilation.

The College's circular No. 107, "Housing Farm Poultry," contains complete plans and a bill of material for the 20 by 20 shed-roof poultry house.

BIG DIFFERENCE IN COST OF BUTTERFAT

A striking comparison in the cost of producing butterfat is furnished in a year's testing of 28 herds in the Ohio-Kentucky Valley Dairy Herd Improvement Association. The feed cost per pound of butterfat in the highest producing herd was 24 cents, while in the lowest producing herd it was 46 cents.

In farming as in other industries, the battle goes to the man who can produce at the lowest cost, according to farm management experts. High producing cows, well fed and carefully managed, may be expected to return a profit, but there is little hope for the farmer who spends 46 cents for feed for each pound of butterfat he produces.

Twenty-eight herds containing a total of 515 cows were tested in Carroll, Gallatin, Henry and Trimble counties. The year's average butterfat production was 235 pounds.

Forty-four cows were weeded out as unprofitable. Eighteen members of the association fed grain, 17 fed silage and 22 fed alfalfa hay. Thirty-three cows produced more than 350 pounds of butterfat in the year. One herd averaged 353 pounds, and one cow produced 596 pounds.

Ted S. Bess, field agent in dairying for the College of Agriculture University of Kentucky, in reviewing the records of this association says: "The results of the year's testing shows the value of keeping records of all farm enterprises and that profits can only be made when good sound principles of dairying are practiced. The association has begun its second year and members are trying to profit by information gained during the past year, so that they will be able to produce their product at a lower cost."

EXTRA VIRTUE FOUND IN COLD STORAGE EGGS

The cold storage egg, long considered inferior to the fresh egg, is coming into its own.

Scientists of the agricultural experiment station at the University of Kentucky have discovered that the yolk of the egg laid in the spring and kept in storage until the following fall and winter is superior to the yolk of the fresh-laid fall or winter egg, from the standpoint of preventing rickets.

The anti-rachitic health-giving properties of the cold storage egg yolk lie in its richness in the sunshine vitimin D, which also is found in cod liver oil and butterfat. The experiments conducted here indicate that yolks of eggs laid in the spring, when there is an abundance of sunshine, have stored up within them a considerably greater amount of this essential vitamin than those laid in the fall and winter, when sunshine is at a minimum.

KENTUCKY FARM RADIO PROGRAM

The College of Agriculture will broadcast the following farm radio program from the University of Kentucky extension studios of WHAS the week of January 12. Each program will begin at 2:45, central standard time.

IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM FOR SIMPSON COUNTY

A Simpson county association of farmers cooperating with County Agent H. W. Whittenburg has adopted a community and county improvement program containing the following planks:

Sufficient acreage of legumes to furnish hay for all livestock; a lespedeza seed association and the production of certified seed; pasture improvement; a corn production contest; increased strawberry growing; improved hog production; demonstratins in better dairying and poultry raising; 4-H clubs and older boys and girls clubs. Attention also will be given to increased use of limestone, fruit growing and marketing.

Father of Postage Stamp

It is not generally known that a blind man gave the world its postage stamp, says an article in Popular Science Monthly. In 1840, Sir Rowland Hill, head of Great Britain's postal service, suggested the idea which has since spread to all parts of the globe. The first American stamp appeared in 1847 and bore the portrait of Benjamin Franklin.

Synchronous Clocks

The bureau of standards says a synchronous clock, operated on a circuit for which it is designated, can neither gain or lose, nor be set. It must be kept in exact step with the generator in the power house. However, if the current stops, the clock will stop unless it has some auxiliary attachment to keep it running.

Simultaneous Discovery

Chloroform was discovered in 1831 by Leibig in Germany and Soubeiran in France, and their reports were published almost simultaneously.

Books Kept on Chains

In public libraries during the middle ages books were often chained to their shelves. It is said that the volumes in the library at Oxford were secured in this manner.

Scientists of the Smithsonian Institution have selected Table mountain, 100 miles from Los Angeles, as the location of their solar observatory because the mountain is believed to be the sunniest spot in North America, although not the hottest, says Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Relative Strength

It has been proved that the common snail can draw a load which is fifty times heavier than itself. If an elephant were as strong, in proportion to size, it would have to move nearly 270 tons.

Idea of Franklin's

Benjamin Franklin devised an implement for reaching books on high shelves. A long wooden handle had two hinged clasps affixed. They were controlled by a pull of the strings held in the hand.

Harvard's Early Purpose

Harvard college came into being in 1636—then with the high purpose of fitting doughty fellows to carry on the Puritan civilization of Massachusetts bay.

Early Game Laws

New Jersey passed legislation akin to present game laws in 1679, when it prohibited the export of any dressed deer skins from deer killed by Indians.

Power of Reason

The mind is invincible when it turns to itself and relies upon its own courage. If this is so when only obstinacy is your defense, what must the strength of a mind be when fortified with reason?—Marcus Aurelius.

"Karnak has done me such a wonderful amount of good that I believe every rheumatic sufferer should give it a trial.

"No one will ever know the tortures I have gone through with rheumatism during the past three years. I ached all over. At nights the pains were so great that I walked the floor, and I've gotten out in the middle of the night to go to the doctor for a hypodermic. I tried every thing in an effort to get relief. Even serum treatments failed to help me. My relief finally came when a friend advised me to try Karnak. To my surprise this medicine went right to the roots of my trouble, and brought complete relief. Every ache and pain has disappeared, and I am now in condition to resume active duties once more, thanks to Karnak."

The community was grieved to hear of the death of Ira Linn Walton which occurred Sunday Dec. 21st, 1930. He was born June 15, 1886, aged 44 years, 6 months and 6 days, and was one of five sons of the late James Harvey and Lou Bradford Walton, the surviving brothers being Allie and Phelps Walton, of Hebron, Hazel Walton, of Ludlow, and Elvin Walton of Dayton, Ohio. He was born in the Pt. Pleasant neighborhood and at the age of 14 united with the Christian church there. About the year 1907 he was married to Miss Agnes Tanner, oldest daughter of Angus Tanner and wife, she having passed to her reward about eight years ago. In July 1925, the deceased was married to Miss Mabel Tanner, youngest sister of the first wife. Funeral services took place at the beautiful funeral home of Philip Taliaferro Wednesday Dec. 24th, at 2:30 o'clock. The pall-bearers were Hubert Grimsley, Howard Tanner, Carl Clutterbuck, Perry Allen, Carl Johnson and Leroy McGlasson. The service was conducted by Rev. Clayton, of Ludlow, after which the remains were laid beside those of the first wife in Hopeful cemetery. The deceased left many friends who regret his going, as he was a friend to every one, always patient, and ready to do a kind act. We extend sympathy to the grieved ones who survive.

Ambrose Easton is contemplating a trip to New Orleans where he has some horses to put on the track.

T. C. Bonar and wife visited relatives in Covington, New Year's day.

Dr. L. E. Rouse, of Ludlow, and Frank Rouse, of Erlanger, were the guests of their mother Mrs. Mary Rouse and son Carl, during the holidays.

Miss Ruth Kelly has returned to Washington, D. C., after having spent a very pleasant Christmas vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Kelly on the East Bend road. Miss Kelly is employed in the U. S. Census Department.

OBITUARY

James Andrew Utz was born near Milan, Indiana, on Nov. 25th, 1856, and passed away at his home here on Dec. 21st, 1930, aged 74 years and 26 days. Deceased lived all his life near the place of his birth, and we lay his body to rest in the Craven Cemetery not far from where he spent a good many useful happy years. He was united in marriage on August 8th, 1888, to Catherine Smothers, who, together with their only son Roy Utz, survive him. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Utz—one child dying in infancy.

Deceased suffered much and patiently, and continued to go about at his daily tasks, till not long before his death. He was a good loyal husband, a kind and loving father, and a fine, generous, congenial neighbor.

He leaves to miss him and mourn for him, besides the widow and son Roy, four sisters, Mrs. Lavina Kirkpatrick, of Burlington, Ky., Mrs Louise Tanner, of Milan, Ind., Mrs. Dora Armstrong of Milan, Ind., and Miss Victoria Utz of the same address; also one brother, Wm. Utz, of Cincinnati, Ohio, together with many beloved nephews and nieces, and innumerable friends and neighbors—all of whom join with the bereaved family in this their hour of grief.

So we who wait and mourn till the call comes for us—as come it must—look up and whisper in the words of the poet,

And so beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled roar;
No harm from him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air
I only know I can not drift
Beyond his love and care.

OBITUARY

A large circle of friends in Boone county mourn the recent death of Mrs. Nancy Jane Page, on Christmas eve, at her home in Ludlow. After a short illness she passed to her eternal home at the age of eighty-three years.

She was the daughter of James and Sarah Clayton and for many years she lived in the vicinity of Hebron. She is su vived by her husband A. B. Page, one daughter, Mrs. W. C. Houde, and two sons George and Robert Popham, and by two sisters and four brothers.

One brother, Wm. Clayton, now of Charlotte, C. H. Va., is remembered here for his active interest in Grange work. Another brother E. L. Clayton a prominent lawyer of Cincinnati, is Vice-President of the Nash Clothing Co.

At the early age of seventeen Nancy Jane Clayton was united in marriage to Wm. Popham. To this union was born five children. The family moved from Boone county to Dyersburg, Tenn., where the husband died during a severe plague of yellow fever. The family returned to Hebron to make their home.

In 1904 she was united in marriage to Mr. A. B. Page, of Ludlow, where she lived during the latter part of her life.

She retained her membership in the Hebron Lutheran church for nearly fifty years, but a few years ago she united with a church near her home where she could render a more active service. Her pastor, the Rev. Miller, of the Immanuel church, Bromley, conducted the funeral service at the home Dec. 27. Mr. J. Gardner, of Bromley, sang two appropriate songs.

A large number of friends paid their last tribute to their loved one and friend as her body was laid to rest in the family lot at Hebron.

She had often said she was ready if her Master called her, and we know that our loss is but her gain. Her pastor's text, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching," typified her whole life of Christian love and service for her Saviour.

A grandson and granddaughter, Rev. and Mrs. V. L. Stephenson, reside at Union, Ky.

Thos. Ross bought for his father J. V. Ross, of Big Bone, a 9 year old black mare and delivered her to him New Year's day. This mare was bought in Indiana.

News of the death of Mrs. J. H. Reed, of St. Louis, reached friends here Wednesday morning. Mrs. Reed formerly was Miss Rose Demprey, who was well known here and related to many Boone county people.

The only Boone county New Year's baby as yet reported to this office was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Tunning, of Constance. It was an eight pound boy and was christened James William.

Proof of "Growth Ray" Gains, Scientist Says

The existence of "Growth Rays," by means of which the growth of human beings, animals and plants could be stimulated, has yet to be proved, but evidence of its existence is increasing daily, according to Prof. A. M. Low, British scientist.

"I believe it is still too soon to announce the discovery of what one might describe as 'Mitogenetic' rays, although research work in this direction so far only confirms the belief which I myself have held for many years—based on my fermentation experiments—that life may be affected by both known and unknown rays."

In an interview in London with the United Press, Low discussed the possibility (suggested in an article in the scientific weekly, Armchair Science) that certain rays may stimulate growth.

"The existence of 'Growth Rays' has been suspected for many years past," he explained, "and experiments have been conducted and are being conducted which would tend to confirm the suspicion. Several years ago, for instance, it was shown that the growing root of an onion gave off something which could travel through air and increase the multiplication of cells in another onion root."

The effect of the suspected rays is all the more remarkable, he continued, because, he said, even if a plate of quartz is placed between the roots the action persists. Nor does water interfere with the progress of the rays, thick glass or gelatin being the only thing which seems to affect it.

Olive Always Symbol of Richness and Peace

The wood of the olive tree is strong and durable though hard to work, and takes a beautiful finish when polished. By divine command the two cherubs above the ark of the covenant, and other decorations of the first temple were made by Solomon's workmen of olive wood, as were also some of the pillars, doors and posts.

All was symbolical in that glorious temple and no doubt the use of olive wood was not without reference to the prosperity and richness of which the olive was a symbol, as well, of course, as the peace which it has represented ever since the days of Noah.

No other oil than that of the olive is referred to in the sacred Scriptures, although it is certain that the people of the Holy land were well acquainted with mineral oil, which is found plentifully in the lower Jordan valley.

Dyeing Living Trees

Scientists have dyed living trees with different aniline dyes for more than 30 years in order that they may study the flow of sap, and many different methods of injection have been attempted. Several attempts have been made to put this scheme on a commercial basis. The companies working with the material have been particularly concerned with the coloring of birch, beech and maple, particularly the sapwood. One of the difficulties of the process is that it is almost impossible to get an even color throughout the tree. As a consequence, the material has been cut up into small articles such as colored wooden buttons, umbrella handles, cigarette cases, candlesticks, etc.

Goethe and Carlyle

Goethe is not only one of the supreme poets of the world; he has the distinction of being the author of the best German novel, William Meister. The best translation of this was written and published by Thomas Carlyle more than one hundred years ago. In reading this translation, therefore, one is reading in the same book the works of two men of genius. Carlyle had almost no opportunity to hear spoken German; he was largely self-taught. But it was characteristic of his honesty, industry, conscience, as well as his literary gifts, that he should have done his difficult work so well that no one has been able to equal it.—William Lyon Phelps, in "Essays on Things."

Helium Unique

Helium is an inert gas discovered by astronomers and physicians in the sun more than twenty-five years before it was isolated in the earth's atmosphere. It is very light and is continually escaping from the earth's gravitational field. It is non-inflammable and non-explosive. Four parts in each million of the atmosphere are helium. Helium is non-corrosive, and will not combine with any other chemical element even at extremely high temperatures. It is the product of the disintegration of radium, and is found in many rocks and minerals in small quantities. As it is an element it cannot be made from any other combination of gases.

Muckross Abbey

All impressive is the desolate majesty of Muckross, no matter what the time it is visited. "But the gay beams of lightsome day gild but to flout the ruins gray." Muckross abbey was founded in the Fifteenth century by Donald McCarthy for Franciscan friars. The towers and east window are fairly well preserved; yet the mouuments within the ruined pile tell us that it "contains in death's embrace McCarthy Moore's remains." At night the reflections of the moon on the lake and the mountains shrouded in shadows lend a solemnity to the scene that surpasses any that can be found in Ireland.

Found It Impossible to Locate Man-Eating Tree

There are undoubtedly plants which entrap and devour insects, and one from India which lures mice by an odor and traps and consumes the rodent, but no one has been able to prove the existence of the "man-eating tree of Madagascar." This story was started about half a century ago by a traveler who wrote a letter to a friend in Europe of having witnessed a sacrificial ceremony where a woman was made a martyr, forced to meet death in the embrace of one of these trees. The story traveled around the world and persisted to such an extent that many travelers and scientists who have visited the country since have made efforts to verify the story. Dr. Ralph Linton of the Field anthropological expedition spent two years in Madagascar and tried to locate a man-eating tree. He encountered several persons who believed that such a thing existed, but the tree was always in some other part of the country, and he arrived at the conclusion that the story was a myth.

No Method Yet Found of Squaring the Circle

The problem of squaring the circle is not a problem of drawing a square around a circle. The latter is easily done by making the side of the square the same length as the diameter of the circle. As stated by all recognized authorities, the problem is to describe a square which shall be exactly equal in area to a given circle. Since the area of a circle is a little over 3.14 (pi) times the square of its radius, and since the length of side of an equal square is the square root of this area, it will be seen that the only problem of quadrature or the squaring of the circle is to get the exact value of this fraction "pi." It has been worked out by various mathematicians to at least 707 places of decimals, which is far more exact than is required for most practical purposes, though theoretically it is impossible to determine it exactly. A geometric solution of the problem; that is, to describe a square equal in area to a given circle, by means of rules and compasses alone, has also been shown to be impossible, though approximate results can be obtained by various methods.—Detroit News.

Marathon Contest

A marathon race is run over a distance of 26 miles and 385 yards. The marathon race of 1908 was one of the most memorable. It was run from Windsor castle to the Olympic stadium at Shepherds Bush, London, England. Dorando Pietri, the chief representative of Italy, was forced to abate his pace when approaching the stadium and collapsed, for the first time, at the entrance to the track; first aid was rendered, and he arose to totter on around the arena. Fifty yards further he went down again and was again helped up. He fell a third time and was then carried past the winning post. Complaints were lodged by J. J. Hays of the United States and C. Hefferon of South Africa, who had finished second and third, respectively. They claimed that Pietri could not have reached the tape alone and he was disqualified. Queen Alexandra, however, presented the plucky little Italian with a gold cup.

Wine for Wistaria

There are 3,200 species of flowers in Japan. The white plum blossom tells of the coming of spring, then follow the cherry, wistaria, azalea, iris, peony, lotus, chrysanthemum and the camellia. The cherry is monarch of all and it is celebrated by fetes and processions. The chrysanthemum is queen, and is on the crest of the emperor. It has been cultivated for 2,500 years. The Japanese often enrich the roots of wistaria with rice wine, while their peoples are sometimes nine inches across, and its 80 varieties, when cared for after cutting, will last three weeks.

Historic Crusades

The Crusades were wars undertaken for religious purposes, specifically those waged by the Christians for the recovery of the Holy land. Toward the close of the Eleventh century the Byzantine empire was in great danger of becoming conquered by the Seljukian Turks, and the Emperor Alexis Commenus appealed for help. At the council of Clermont, November 1095, Pope Urban II asked for aid to reconquer Jerusalem. The first Crusade was from 1096-99; the second, 1147-49; the third, 1189-91; and the fourth, 1201-04.

Long Trip for Clay

The first whiteware made in England was the product of the Wedgewood pottery and it was necessary to send to America for the special white clay needed. The leader of the expedition left a diary which is extant, and from this it is learned that the expedition landed at Charleston, S. C., in 1767. The party forced its way into the heart of the mountainous Cherokee country of North Carolina, mined several tons of kaolin, and transported it in the dead of winter to the seacoast and thence by ship to England.—Detroit News.

COW TESTER

STATES THAT HIGH PRODUCING COWS PAY—SURVEY OF RECORDS SHOWS THAT GOOD COWS PAY SPLENDID DIVIDENDS

The high producing cows in the Northern Kentucky Dairy Herd Improvement Association are paying a profit according to Mr. O. W. Moore, tester. Mr. Moore points out that the average cow in the high producing herd in December paid a return of $23.75 above total feed costs while the average cow in the whole association paid a return of only $5.82 above total feed costs.

A survey of the records shows that the average cow in the high producing herd produced 1054 pounds of milk, 37.7 pounds of butter fat product valued at $26.62, total feed costs $12.87 and return above total feed costs $13.75. The average cow in the whole association consisting of herds in Boone, Kenton and Campbell counties produced only 573 pounds of milk, 24.4 pounds of fat, $15.32 value of product, $9.50 total feed costs and $5.82 return above feed costs.

"Can I Afford to Feed my Cows at the present Feed and Milk Prices?" This is the question that dairymen are asking every day.

The above figures show that the cow producing 37.7 pounds of fat is making over twice as much profit above feed costs as the cow that is producing only 24.4 pounds of fat per month. The above question can better be answered by first answering the following questions: Would not it be foolish to cut down the feed to where the high producing cow would produce only $24.0 lbs. of fat? Would it not be more profitable to cull out the lowest producers, even though they can be sold only at a very low price, and then feed the remaining cows for maximum production. If you owned a six foot mowing machine would you ploy cut a four foot swath?

Deaths

HENRY BROWNING

Henry Browning, aged 83 years, passed away Wednesday evening at his home on Kentaboo Ave., Erlanger, Ky., after a long illness. The remains were taken to the Taliaferro Funeral Home, from which establishment services were held Saturday at 2 p. m., by the Rev. Henry A. Allen, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist church, Covington, Ky., after which he was laid to rest in the Florence cemetery. Six sons acted as pall-bearers.

Mr. Browning is survived by his widow, ten sons, Ben, Tom, Earl, Walter, Ott, John James, Nelson and Elmer, two daughters, Mrs. Fred Ficke, Jr., and Mrs. Charles Durain, several grandchildren and a host of friends.

MRS. MARY BROUGHTON

Mrs. Mary Broughton, aged 79 years, widow of C. L. Broughton, Sr., passed away early Thursday morning at the home of her son John Broughton, Thomas St., Erlanger, Ky., after a few days illness with pneumonia.

Funeral services were held Saturday morning at St. Henry's church at 9 a. m., by Rev. Geo. C. Bealer, pastor, with requiem high mass, after which the remains were taken to St. Mary's cemetery for interment by the side of her husband who preceded her to the grave five years ago.

The pall-bearers were Wm. Cox, Wm. Moss, E. C. Victor, Joe Nusbaum, Gus Gebhard and Cliff Miller.

Mrs. Broughton is survived by one son John, several grand-children a sister, Mrs. Batty Long, Florence, [illegible] had charge of the funeral arrangements.

CHARLES ROBINSON

Charles Robinson, beloved husband of Laura Robinson, formerly of Boone county, died at 2:30 a. m., on the 14th of this month. Funeral services from the home of his sister Mrs. S. Williams, Columbus, Ohio.

FARMERS COMMUNITY MEETINGS HELD

Leading farmers and others interested in farm work met in three meetings held at Constance, Florence and Grant the past week to discuss farm problems of their respective communities. Community programs of work including meetings, improvement and demonstration work in new farm activities were planned for 1931.

Farmers who had made success in their various lines of farm activity lead in the discussions at these meetings. Experiences in farm work were exchanged profitably to all who attended. Similar meetings will be held in each of the fifteen communities of the county according to the county agent.

The following schedule of meetings has been arranged:

Union Masonic Hall—Jan. 13th.
Walton Town Hall—Jan. 14th.
Beaver School House—Jan. 15th.
Burlington, Court House—Jan. 17.
Hebron Bank—Jan. 19th.
Hamilton School House—Jan. 20.
Petersburg Bank—Jan. 23rd.
Verona Bank—Jan. 24th.

All of the above meetings except Verona will be held at 7:00 p. m., slow time. The meeting at Verona will be held at 1:45 p. m. Meeting in other communities of the county will be announced in the near future. All who are interested in the planning of the community program of work for 1931 are invited to attend.

MINSTREL AT ERLANGER

Boone Post No. 6 American Legion will exhibit its Minstrel Show at Union on Friday night of this week, while Monday night of next week, January 19th, will find them at Erlanger. The show will be staged in Lloyd Auditorium under the auspices of Simon Kenton Post No. 20 and will be given for charitable purposes.

Mrs. A. G. McMullen, wife of County Clerk A. G. McMullen, has been ill for the past few days.

BERT CLORE

PASSES AWAY AT HIS HOME IN UNION AFTER WEEK'S ILLNESS OF CEREBRAL HEMORRHAGES — WIDOW, MOTHER AND BROTHER SURVIVE

After an illness of only one week Bert Clore, well known and popular citizen of Union, passed away at his home there last Saturday. Cerebral hemorrhages caused his death.

The deceased, at the time of his death, had been employed for several years as U. S. Mail carrier on the Union star route from Erlanger. Prior to that he had been a farmer and was born and reared in Boone county. No one knew Bert Clore but to like him. He is survived by one brother, Lon Clore, of Florence, his mother and his widow, Mrs. Grace Clore. He was 52 years of age.

Funeral services were held at the Big Bone Baptist church Tuesday morning at 10:30 with interment in the church cemetery there.

C. Scott Chambers, Walton funeral director, had charge of the funeral arrangements.

WINTER SCHOOL

FOR POULTRY BREEDERS TO BE HELD AT FLORENCE ON FRIDAY JANUARY 16—SPECIALIST TO SPEAK

Mr. J. E. Humphrey, poultry specialist from the College of Agriculture will lead in the discussions of [illegible] be held at the Court House in Florence, Friday, January 16th. Mr. Humphrey is widely known among leading Boone county poultrymen, having taken an active part in extension work during the past nine years.

The poultry school will be of special importance this year according to county agent H. R. Forkner. Raising chicks up to six months of age free from disease and parasites will receive special study. A number of practical poultrymen will lead in the discussion of this subject.

The school begins at 9:30 a. m., and closes at 2:30 p. m., slow time. The noon hour will be from 11:30 a. m., to 12:30 p. m. The meeting is strictly educational, there will be no attendance charge and everyone interested in poultry work is invited to attend.

UTOPIA CLUB MEETING

The meeting date of the Boone County Utopia Club has been changed to Thursday of the third full week of each month. The meeting place is the County Agent's office in Burlington and the time is 7:00 p. m., (slow time).

Utopia club enrolls boys and girls between 19 years and 25 years of age or older. Farm and home improvement are set forth first in the organization. It also carries on social, recreational, economical and educational features for the members of the organization. There are no dues and all who are interested in Utopia are urged to be on time at the next meeting date, January 22nd.

FARM AND HOME CONVENTION

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Huey, County Agent H. R. Forkner and a number of other Boone county farmers are making plans to attend the 19th annual Farm and Home Convention at the University of Kentucky, Lexington, January 27th to the 30th.

Those who are interested in going down with the Boone county group are urged to get in touch with the County Agent at Burlington.

Solon B. Ryle and sons, who recently moved to the farm of W. T. Carpenter on the East Bend road, raised more than 12,000 pounds of tobacco last season. This tobacco was housed in fine condition, has been stripped and was sold last week for a gross sum of more than $2,400.00. This achievement was quite a tribute to the industry of Mr. Ryle and his sons in a season hampered by a notorious drouth.

MAIL DELIVERY

WILL BE MORE PROMPT FROM BURLINGTON TO HEBRON UNDER NEW ARRANGEMENT—BURLINGTON STAR ROUTE TO LIMABURG ALSO TO BE ELIMINATED

Postmaster Everett Hickman announced Wednesday morning some very important changes in mail service in this section and which will take place immediately.

Rural Carrier Elijah Stephens on Route three henceforth will have the delivery of mail that heretofore has been delivered on what has been termed the Burlington Star Route between Limaburg and Burlington.

Mr. Stephens also will deliver the Hebron mail sack direct from this office to the Hebron office. Subscribers of the Recorder in Hebron thus will receive their papers several hours sooner than under the former arrangement, when it was necessary for them to make the trip to Covington and back to Hebron.

A portion of the boxes on the route of R. C. Lutes, carrier on Florence R. D., also will be served by Mr. Stephens, in the future, it was announced.

In all the change will add some three miles to route of Mr. Stephens, making a total of thirty-seven miles instead of thirty-four.

Henry Parsons, for many years an absentee from Boone county haunts, was a very entertaining caller at the Recorder office last Saturday morning. Mr. Parsons has "trotted the globe" almost from end to end since last he set foot on [illegible] World War found him enlisted in the British Army. He has many friends in this section of the county, all of whom were very much pleased to see him and to hear of his experiences. Howard Kirkpatrick, our Linotype operator, enjoyed a lengthy wag of yarns with him on experiences of their younger days.

Friends of R. H. Carter, who abound throughout Boone county, were very much grieved to learn of the death of his mother, Mrs. A. Carter, which occurred at Williamstown last Saturday. Funeral services were conducted by Mr. Carter on Monday, January 12th, the same service he has performed for both his father and a brother, Julius, prior to his mother's death. Mr. Carter is now located at Butler, Pendleton county, where he is pastor of the Christian church.

J. Harlan Muntz, of Frankfort, Ky., was in Burlington for a time on business on Tuesday of this week. Mr. Muntz is well known throughout this section, where he was principal of Belleview High School and assistant principal in both B. H. S. and Aurora (Ind.,) High Schools. Mr. Muntz was in Burlington in 1916 and 1917. Mr. Muntz makes no "bones" of the fact that he still has a soft spot in his heart for Boone county. He now represents a nationally known publishing house, which caters to the needs of schools and school libraries.

George W. Terrill, Jr., from down Garrison way, was in Burlington Tuesday carrying a very lame right arm. While sawing wood last Thursday afternoon young Mr. Terrill's glove caught in the saw, drawing his hand instantly into the teeth. Before he could extricate it the blade had almost severed the thumb from the hand, in fact it went clear thru the bone leaving only a thin piece of flesh and skin. What made the wound the more painful was the fact that the blade passed thru the most fleshy portion, close to the hand.

William Burns, of near Lawrenceburg Ferry, and J. H. (Mac) Mannin, of Hebron, were business callers at the Recorder office last Saturday morning when they placed with us an advertisement for the sale of some very fine Jersey cattle in order to settle a partnership. It might pay prospective purchasers of cattle to consult this advertisement.

NEW BOARD

ELECTED FOR BOONE COUNTY NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATION—VACANCIES NECESSITATE NAMING OF NEW MEN

At the annual meeting of the members of the Boone County National Farm Loan Association, which was held at Burlington on Tuesday of this week, the following Directors were elected:

E. A. Martin, W. H. Eggleston, B. E. Aylor, Karl Rouse, and J. M. Grimes. The board will meet at a later date to elect officers.

The meeting for the election of directors was made necessary on account of two vacancies on the board caused by the death of C. H. Youell and the ineligibility of O. E. Rouse, the latter being caused by the fact that Mr. Rouse recently disposed of his farm.

REPORT OF RED CROSS NURSING SERVICE FOR DEC. 1930.

December bringing the work of 1930 to a close, as our custom for the past five years, the officers of the Boone County Chapter of the American Red Cross went before the county Fiscal Court with our year's report of Health work, accomplished and undertaken for the past year, which was read to the assembled commissioners, after which Mr. L. T. Utz, Chapter Treasurer read the Financial Report of the cost of the service and balance on hand in treasury, the chapter then made a request for an appropriation of the [illegible] Red Cross.

92 school children were given physical inspection at the Hebron school finding that 21 had obtained some correction of defects since last inspected. I secured admission for 2 children for operation of tonsils and adenoids at the Children's Hospital and carried them in for this.

Requested by the Director of the training school of St. Mary's Hospital in Cincinnati, I made a talk on Rural Public Health Nursing on the evening of Dec. 10th for one hour and fifteen minutes telling the story of our work in Boone county directed by the Red Cross. Our attempts, our failures and successes as best they can be evaluated. I grasped the opportunity to do this for several reasons, chief among being that both the Director of the training school and the instructor there are woman of outstanding influence in the Nursing Association of Cincinnati and as my people patronize and are received and cared for by the institutions of that city, it was an opportunity to interpret the living conditions and the need of health teaching, which the nurses of the hospitals where my people are patients have a big opportunity to supply to them during their stay in said hospitals. Chrismas brought me greetings from those present that night thanking me for opening an avenue as they termed it for them to do Public Health work, so now even though I was in Ohio that night, I was, I believe sowing seed for my Boone county people to reap some fruit. After all there is no circle big enough to include the ends of our duties in this work.

Again this December as the past two year "Santa Claus" left with me a budget to use in bringing to the hearts of the very needy the Spirit of the First Christmas and to their hearthstones, the warmth of Human understanding—this year the Girls of the Reserve Clubs of Hebron and Burlington schools joined our Boone County Santa in this service of Xmas love and cheer.

And now we come to the New Year with high hopes of making 1931 a year filled with the unfolding processes for the building of Health and the knowledge of its benefits and assets to the extent that all of our citizenry shall join in such personal practices, and in making possible public means that shall undoubtedly raise the general health to a higher rate than we have yet attained.

INDEPENDENCE

TO PLAY BAPTIST FIVE HERE SATURDAY NIGHT JAN. 17—PETERSBURG HI SCHOOL TO PLAY HERE IN PRELIMINARY—FATS AND LEANS PLANNING GRUDGE CLASH NEXT WEEK

The Burlington Baptists seem to have discarded the cardinal virtue of basket ball, namely—to win—and to have adopted a more divine ideal on the hardwood. They seem to have decided that after being "slapped on one cheek that they should turn the other." At any rate that is just what they have been doing recently.

Last Saturday afternoon they played a bang-up defensive battle against the Union M. E. five at Covington, but lost 13-9 and then returned to their home court and "turned the other cheek" to Petersburg to the dirge of 23-20. This, incidentally, was the second time that they had practiced this principal against Petersburg. However, it must be said that they have been playing a "fighting" brand of basket ball of late in spite of the suggestion in the above allegory.

Next Saturday afternoon they will oppose the fast Ludlow Christians in the Covington "Y" league at 3:00 o'clock (slow time) and they are showing promise in practice this week of returning to their winning form displayed earlier in the season. The bus will leave Burlington at 1:45 (slow time).

Returning to Burlington they will welcome the fast Independence five on their home court. The Independence boys have a fast aggregation and will put up a stiff battle. Local base ball fans will recognize the face of [illegible] On Saturday night, Jan. 24th, the "fats" and "leans" are planning to resume hostilities on the local floor as preliminary to a game to be announced next week. The "leans" won the first encounter between these two teams, but never have been satisfied that they were the better five. Plan to see this great game.

TESTING WORK

FOR BOONE COUNTY DAIRYMEN WILL CONTINUE IN 1931—RESULTS OF D. H. I. WORK HAVE BEEN GOOD.

Leading Boone county dairymen who have been carrying on dairy improvement work thru the Northern Kentucky Dairy Herd Improvement Association for one, two and three years will continue this work during 1931 according to O. W. Moore, tester. This is proof that the D. H. I. is not a one year proposition and is worth while.

The following dairymen have already enrolled for 1931: R. B. Huey and Son, Burlington R. D. 1; O. R. Russ, Florence, R. D. 1; Joel Gray, Burlington; E. G. Cox and Sons, Petersburg; and Kite and Purdy, Burlington R. D. 2. The majority of the 1930 members have not been surveyed on this question as yet and in all probability more than as many again will enroll for a second, third and fourth year's work. This will be R. B. Huey and Son's and E. G. Cox and Son's fourth consecutive testing year. O. R. Russ' third year and Joel Gray and Kite & Purdy's 2nd year. These dairymen have found that it pays to know the returns from the individual cow in the herd and that dairy herd improvement association work offers the best reliable means of building up profitable herds.

The Northern Kentucky Dairy Herd Improvement Association will be reorganized during the next two weeks and will begin work for the new year on February 1. While the membership in a large part will be made up from old members the association will be enlarged and there will be a place for those who are interested in carrying on this work. These dairymen who are interested are urged to get in touch with the county agent at Burlington.

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

The Burlington High School Tomcats and Kittens outclassed the two Verona teams here last Friday night with the Kittens defeating the Verona girls by the largest score they have made this year. If you can remember in the early part of the season these two teams met on the same floor and the score was so close that it was said they were equally matched, but through the careful attention they had been given by Coach Lamb during the past month and the way they played last Friday night proved that they outclassed the Verona girls very much. Again Phillips was the high scorer for the Kittens, making 15 of 38 points. A Burton the center, and E. Akin running guard made a nice showing. F. July was high scorer for the Verona girls but when the game ended the score was Kittens 38 and Verona 7. The Tomcats won from the Verona boys by a score of 22 to 13. Ogden, the center for the Tomcats was high scorer this week, making 8 of their 22 points. Schree, a new man on the Tomcat squad, proved to be of value, being his first game he made 3 points and looked like a star for the future. Next Friday night, Jan. 16th, you will find the Tomcats and Kittens on the Piner floor, where they will challenge the Piner teams for two games. Let's all go to Piner and see old B. H. S. shine.

A rather heated debate on the Chain Store question was held on Thursday evening at the court house between the high school teams of Florence and Burlington.

Marvin Moore, Harold K. Clore and Martha Blythe upholding the affirmative [illegible] by Mary E. Laubisch, Lawrence Taylor and Alta Fogle.

Both teams are to be congratulated on their splendid showing. Due to the fact that we are entering the field of debate for first time, and that this was our first public appearance, it was very encouraging to see so much interest manifested by townspeople.

Other debates are to be held soon.

David Williamson was absent from school Monday morning.

Emily Cason was not able to meet her classes Monday.

Librarians are now busy working on our New Accession Book. We are having a general checking up on all of the old books and we feel that after our new rules are posted our library will be up-to-date. We are very thankful for the twenty-five new books recently added and which were made possible by our P. T. A.

The Girl Reserve received an invitation this morning from the Hi-Y Club to join them in a social to be given by boys on Saturday evening.

Mr. Ewald, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of this district met with Hi-Y boys on Wednesday of last week.

Our next chapel program will be Friday January 16th, conducted this time by Mrs. Lallie Eddins. Every one is welcome.

We were glad to be the host of the Hebron and Erlanger basket ball teams when they played two games here last Wednesday evening. Erlanger won both games.

THE GRADES

5th and 6th

Virginia Shinkle and Marvin Lee Murray have been absent for the last week.

Lee Etta Aylor, who was absent from school last week, has returned.

Kenneth and Emmett Griffith are back in school after a few days absence.

7th and 8th

Pauline Holbrook was absent from school Monday on account of illness.

The traveling library which we ordered several months ago was sent back last week after having been enjoyed very much.

Boyd Snow was absent Monday.

Mr. J. J. Tanner of the Burlington and Florence pike, was a business caller at the Recorder office last Saturday morning.

Correspondent "Roasts" Sen. Caraway's Relief Measures

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

No. 1

(By Fred Holmes)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder)

WASHINGTON—There is said to be a lure about the smell of printer's ink which soon or later brings back to editorial and reportorial rooms as well as to composing and press rooms all who forsake occupations therein for the promise of a competency in some other field. An equally alluring siren, it is asserted, is "the glare of the footlights," by reason of which "once an actor, always an actor." And doubtless there might be added to these enticements that of the deliberations of "the greatest deliberative assembly" which seems to be able to exist only for the purpose of deliberation. A Senate without deliberations. To what end election or re-election to "the greatest deliberative assembly" with deliberations eliminated?

Unbelievable as it may appear, during the day or so which preceded the holiday recess the Senate laid off deliberating long enough to do a few things. Observers here rubbed their eyes and looked again. Yes, the victim of chronic hysteria undoubtedly was better. Was it due to Big Stick Tonic, to Constituency Invigorator, or to Public Opinion Sedative? Was it a permanent cure or merely temporary relief? Skepticism prevailed. It can't last, they said. And it didn't.

No sooner had a seemingly cured Senate reassembled after its recuperative layoff than another spasm manifested itself, shortly followed by one even more severe, with evidence of frequent recurrences throughout an indefinite period. By attaching to the $45,000,000 drought relief measure a $15,000,000 item for the purchase of food the Senate again imposed delay upon this emergency legislation, and that was spasm No. 1. Then that august body by vote of 44 to 37 reconsidered its confirmation of three members of the Federal Power Commission and requested President Hoover to return the papers in the case to the Senate. That was spasm No 2.

It was Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, who proposed the dangerous experiment of Federal purchase of human food. He referred to the dramatic incident of last week when 500 Arkansas farmers (the number cannot be confirmed as exceeding 40) marched to the nearest town and demanded food for their starving families. This was sufficient to convince the Senator that the Red Cross had "fallen down on the job," that there are 500,000 "destitute" persons in his State, and that he reason why the Administration opposes "human food loans" is because it is hard-hearted and niggardly.

Whether the Senate conferes, if they recede on the Caraway amendment, can persuade their branch of Congress to pass the drought relief bill without the provision for "human food loans" remains to be seen. The Senate tried to increase the sum to $60,000,000 before the holidays and finally accepted a compromise on $45,000,000. By the time the conference is over the opinion of Arkansas' own Governor may give the Senate sufficient courage to resist the unwise legislation proposed by her Senators.

Mr. Caraway threatens to demand $75,000,000 for the farmers of his State. Other Senators with designs on the Federal Treasury may follow suit. The evect would be to hold up interminably the reasonable measure of relief recommended by the President which has already been passed by the House. The expression "playing politics with human misery" is as applicable as ever to those Senators who insist upon loading relief legislation with amendments that should not and cannot be adopted.

Undoubtedly when a community is facing starvation is no time to indulge in quibbling about the source of emergency relief. But when starving communities become so numerous that governmental relief in all cases would bankrupt the richest nation particularly when there are well to do neighbors not insensible to the situation or averse to evidencing a neighborly spirit in a practical manner, possibly it might be best to pause and consider before establishing a manifestly disastrous precedent.

The concern of the Arkansas Senators over conditions in their home State is natural and creditable. But other States—notably Virginia and Kentucky—were as badly afflicted by the drought. Metropolitan bread lines are growing no shorter, and there is as much distress in the cities as in the country. If the Government starts making loans too farmers for food there would seem to be no reason why the hungry of the cities should not have an equal standing as applicants. Every one deplores the lack of food whenever and wherever it exists But, as Governor Parnell indicates, the State government can care of suffering within its borders and, as Judge Payne of the Red Cross has just reported, that that organization has $4,500,000 ready to be used. "If we get down to the bottom of the barrel," Judge Payne declared, "we will let out a yell and I have no doubt whatever that the American people will respond."

Of course there were several inconsequential twitches between the first and second major spasms, although the latter followed on the mandate that the President shall reheels of the former. It is now daturn to the Senate the notification of confirmation of the three commissioners in question, in order that the Senate may cancel the confirmation and reject the nominations, thereby making the offices vacant. This action is taken in spite of the fast that the Senate notified the President that the men had been confirmed, following which notice they took the oath of office, organized, and proceeded to transact official business. They acted in obedience to the law, which provides that the new commission shall be deemed to be organized when three commissioners take office. The Senate by its vote attempts to nullify this act of Congres.

Assuming that the Senate is acting in good faith and unselfish in the interests of the people, the question arises, if these men were unfit for the positions to which they were appointed why did the Senate wait for their official installation before discovering that fact? Why did it not make proper investigation of qualifications and fitness at the time the appointments were submitted and decline confirmation? In asserting its right to reconsider its own judgment and in manifesting a desire to reverse its decision the Senate majority certifies to its own carelessness, procrastination and incompetence.

After the unexpected and noteworthy brace which the Senate took just before Christmas, it is disappointing as well as unpleasant to have recount that it has begun the new year with a relapse. The House can strike out the Caraway food dole and once again give the Senate a lesson in the art of government, but unfortunately the lower branch of Congress is powerless to interfere in the Power Commission situation. The President and the Senate will have to fight it out by themselves.

Production of Tung Oil New American Industry

The United States Department of Agriculture has, after experimenting for more than 20 years, developed a new industry in this country that promises much for the nation as a whole, and for Florida in particular.

Tung oil is an essential element in the manufacture of the better grades of paints and varnishes. In the past, tung oil has had to be imported from China, the only country in which tung nuts were grown. Now China is in time, to lose its best customer for this product, for the Department of Agriculture has demonstrated that the tung tree can be successfully cultivated in this country, and especially in some sections of Florida.

The actual experiment on a commercial scale started in Florida in 1923. Whole groves of tung trees were planted, and these groves are now producing to the extent of close to 1,800 pounds of tung oil to the acre, a greater production than has been possible in China. The experiment has proved that the tree will mature to a profitable bearing state within four or five years. The life of the tung tree is about 30 years, with a maximum production stage reached at nine years. No insect or blight of any kind attacks the trees or nuts, and no animal or bird will touch them. The trees are hardy and require only normal cultivation, less, it is said, than citrus fruits. The oil from the Florida nuts is said to be superior to that imported from China.

Idea of the Lifeboat Credited to Englishman

The first lifeboat to be stationed on any coast in the world is said to have been a cobble converted to the purpose by an English coach builder, Lionel Lukin, in 1786. The year before he had taken out a patent for an "insubmergible boat" made out of a Norwegian yawl. The second boat was stationed at Bamborough, on the Yorkshire coast of England, where by permission of Archdeacon Sharp a portion of the castle was set aside as a watchtower, from which Holy island could be signaled whenever a vessel was seen to be in distress. Lukin's boat did good service and saved many lives. After an appalling shipwreck a quarter of a mile from the coast at South Shields, in 1789, a committee of South Shields inhabitants offered a prize for a model lifeboat, and Mr. Greathead built the first actual lifeboat, naming it the "Original." When in 1790 another ship was wrecked in almost the same spot, the Original brought every one to safety, whereas in the shipwreck of 1789 all had been drowned in sight of helpless onlookers.

Handball Irish Pastime

Handball originated in Ireland about 1,000 years ago, and is often considered one of the national games of that country. It is now played by more men in America than anywhere else in the world. The first scientific handball player was really developed about 1850, when William Baggs of Tiperary originated new ways of hitting the ball in curves, low drives and screw tosses. The first international match ever played was the Lawlor-Casey match, in 1887, with the prize of $1,000 for the best of 21 games, 10 in Cork and 11 in the United States. Lawlor won 6 games to 4 in Cork, and Casey won 7 straight in New York. Casey retained his title against all comers until 1900, when he retired. Since 1900 the game has developed in two separate games, a one-wall game and a four-wall game, both of which are played by amateurs in singles and doubles.

Royal Succession

According to the practice now prevalent in monarchies the wife of the reigning king does not succeed to the throne in case of the later's death. The succession passes through either the male or female line, but does not pass from one to the other. Likewise if a reigning queen dies her husband does not succeed to the throne. For instance, if a queen of the Netherlands should die her eldest child would become sovereign, not the queen's husband. Catherine the Great of Russia succeeded her husband Peter III, but the proceeding was revolutionary.—Exchange.

Beyond Belief

The professor had been dining out, and, as most of the guests were ardent fishermen, he had had to listen all the evening to stories of the size of their catches.

He was extremely short-sighted, and as he was crossing a field on his way home he came across a scarecrow with arms widespread. Memories of the "tall" stories he had heard that night floated back to him, and he halted in front of the scarecrow.

"My dear sir," he exclaimed, "I simply refuse to believe you; there never was a trout that length."

"Bobby" Burns Memento

Ayr, in Scotland, today contains very little that Burns ever saw, but he probably passed or entered many times the old inn on High street, now called the Tam O'Shanter inn. The real "auld" attraction there is "the auld clay biggin," the ancient cottage of two small rooms, built by Burns' father in 1757, which a tramcar rides takes you to in a few minutes. It is now a Burns museum and about it are the fields the plowman poet tilled and where he sang [illegible]

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

WINTER EPIDEMICS

I claim originally in this saying that, "infections work behind closed doors." I carry the thought with me daily as I go about my work. The first duty, if you would dislodge the enemy, is, open the door, be it of wood, glass, or human tissue; get at the unwelcome invader and destroy his works.

The worst epidemics—small-pox, measles, diphtheria, scarlet fever, and infantile paralysis, take place at a season when our houses are tightly fortified against winter inclemencies of weather. One of the worst epidemics of small-pox that I ever experienced, ceased promptly when spring breezes were permitted to enter bed-rooms and living-rooms to "air out" residences in every remotest corner.

The worst case of small-pox I ever attended was in a family that kept every crevice of the dwelling plugged for fear outside air would enter. The patient recovered—but it was an accident!

It follows then, that if free ventilation ends the epidemic, it must be valuable as a preventive of diseases of infectious nature. I instruct my families to see that the residence from top to bottom, is thoroughly aired at least once a day; if the sun is shining, an hour or two is not too long for the internal air-bath. I do not like to enter a dwelling where the first thing to greet my nostrils is the odor of meat and vegetables cooked at yesterday's dinner. Yes, it's "old stuff" I'm writing, but it's daily experience in this advanced age—and I don't live in the backwoods either—so there!

The family doctor must be just as dead against foetid air indoors, as he is against the deadly stream of night-air, pouring through an open window, over the bed where children and aged folks sleep.

Common-sense is my rule. Keep the house sweet, pure, and comfortable. It is not so, if foul with the odor of beef, cabbage and tobacco-smoke. Heathen? No; just average Americans all over the land.

FAYETTE COUNTY MAN TO DISCUSS FEEDING AT FARM CONVENTION

Reuben Clark, a prominent Fayette county farmer and one of the largest cattle feeders in Central Ky., will discuss baby beef production at the annual Farm and Home Convention to be held at the Experiment Station January 27-30. Due to the difficulty of buying good feeders, Mr. Clark several years ago decided to raise his own. He therefore established a good herd of Angus, now owning more than 100 head of fine breeding cows. He has established an enviable reputation as a feeder and producer of high-class cattle. He also raises purebred sheep and saddle horses and grows blue grass seed and tobacco.

Another prominent farmer on the program is R. R. Giltner, Eminence, Ky., noted cattle breeder and grower of lespedeza and blue grass. He was one of the pioneer growers of korean lespedeza and long has been one of the most extensive growers of lespedeza in Kentucky. He was for two years president of the Shelby County Seed Growers' Association, which was the forerunner of the Kentucky Seed Improvement Association, of which Mr. Giltner is president. Mr. Giltner has 1,000 acres of land devoted to cattle raising.

Charles M. Meacham, Jr., will come from Union county in Western Kentucky to discuss the production of korean lespedeza, of which he has 137 acres. He produced 18,000 pounds of seed from 30 acres of korean lespedeza in 1929 and more from the same acreage of volunteer stand in 1930. He produces high-grade seed, much of it being 98 per-cent pure.

MASTER FARMERS TO SPEAK AT FARM AND HOME CONVENTION

Kentucky's eight new Master Farmers, recently chosen by The Progressive Farmer and Southern Ruralist and the College of Agriculture University of Kentucky, will discuss their experiences Wednesday January 28th, at the annual Farm and Home Convention at the Experiment Station at Lexington.

Smith D. Broadbent, Trigg county, owns 2,200 acres of land. Practically all of the cultivated land has been limed, and some twice and three times. He grows 200 acres of tobacco, striving for high yields and good quality. He raises 400 to 500 hogs each year, and owns 100 to 150 head of good cattle.

George W. Davis, Owen county has a farm of 210 acres. He grows tobacco and raises all kinds of livestock. His farm produces nearly all of his feed. Complete accounts and an inventory each year are features of his farming.

C. L. Drysdale, Fulton county, rented for 18 years before attempting to buy land. He now owns a well-esuipped and highly fertile 140-acre farm. Milk from a good dairy herd is sold in Fulton. Hogs and chickens add to his income.

R. B. Huey, Boone county, is a dairy farmer and dairy cattle breeder. His herd averaged 329 pounds of fat last year. He also finds sheep highly profitable. He has records of sales, expenses, crop yields and other farm activities for years back.

Jacob A. Robinson, Garrard county, owns 722 acres of land, grows 60 acres of tobacco, 200 acres of corn, 65 acres of alfalfa, 75 acres of wheat, 80 acres of rye, 35 acres of lespedeza, and considerable acreages of other crops, and maintains extensive pastures of blue grass and clover. He is a large livestock operator, owning 250 breeding ewes, 140 cattle and a large herd of hogs and flock of poultry.

O. C. Whitfield, Hopkins county, raises purebred cattle, sheep and hogs. He produces fine crops on 300 acres of bottom land which he redeemed by tile drainage. His farm is well improved and returns a profit every year.

John C. Robinson, Boyle county, owns 300 sheep, 45 purebred cattle, a herd of purebred hogs and a big flock of hens. He is a member of farm organizations and civic and public bodies.

W. F. Wilson, Pulaski county developed the Wilson's White Dent corn, a white corn with a red cob, of which he sells several hundred bushels of seed a year. He owns a commercial orchard which is profitable.

$200.00 PAID FOR ONE COPPER CENT

J. D. Martin of Richmond, Va., is the proud possessor of a check for $200.00 paid him for an old copper cent. The Numismatic Company, Dept. 659, Fort Worth, Texas, who purchased this penny from Mr. Martin, says there are numerous old coins, bills and stamps in circulation for which they will gladly pay big cash premiums. So that you will know the value of old coins and stamps and what to watch for in your change, the Numismatic Company will send for only 4c to any reader of this paper who writes them a large illustrated coin folder describing some of these wanted articles and the big profits to be made. Better write them today for this large folder so you can post yourself and know just what to look for. Remember that Mr. Martin's knowing the value of his penny meant a difference of $199.99 to him. Without knowing its value that penny might still be in circulation, passing thru the hands of thousands until someone like Mr. Martin, who knows old coins, recognized its value. It pays to be posted. Send 4c now for the illustrated coin folder. You have nothing to lose, everything to gain.

Freed From Pain After Suffering Two Years

"For two long years I was in agony, the pains were so severe I lost much sleep and became very nervous, my limbs were swollen—I carefully followed advice rendered me by people who were supposed to know. I took medicine daily, but none seemed to affect my condition.

"As time went on I became desperate, my kidneys were bothering me more than ever, my bladder had become weak, and I was compelled to arise many times during the night. Karnak was recommended and I decided to find out just what it would do. I have used several bottles and just what a glorious change, no one can ever realize. I have no pain whatsoever, my system is gradually becoming normal and I feel better than I have in years. I shall always praise and advise Karnak to anyone suffering from rheumatism."

Now, Here's Good Advice: Get That Half Century

In becoming rich, it is the first million that is the hardest. In fact, it is so hard that many are exhausted at $50,000 and stop there. After the first million is banked it multiplies itself automatically. A fat million has only to sit down and grow in adiposity. It is like a magnet drawing dollars.

But $50,000 has to be taken care of like a helpless baby. It is subject to many infantile, juvenile, adolescent, mature and senile ills. "Fifty thousand" is never very well, but is always a pleasant companion. To know it is there, intact and rearing a crop of modest dividends each year, inspires a restful state of mind. You never will be reduced to the extremity of cracking rock. "Fifty thousand" nurtured and cherished will last a lifetime, will last for eons if it doesn't have to be split up among heirs.

It is a wand to summon the less ambitious satisfactions of life, and it does not suffer from being overshadowed by the leviathan fortunes of multimillionaires. Its revenue is as sure as theirs.

Young man, get $50,000—not too hastily, but year by year.—F. H. Collier in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Prussia Long "Spruce" According to Vizetelly

"A word that has a very interesting history is spruce with its double meaning (1) 'smartly or finely dressed' and (2) 'the fir tree' known as spruce fir," writes Frank H. Vizetelly in a New York paper.

"On its face, this word does not bear any resemblance to Prussia, yet on special occasion it was the custom among our forebears to deck one's self out in the dress of other countries. Men who adopted the particular dress of Prussia were arrayed in a style to which the epithet spruce might have been applied with perfect propriety. They were appareled after the style of Prussia, or, as it was commonly known and spoken of in those days, Spruce.

"The reason that Prussia should have been called Spruce instead of Pruce is to be attributed to the English fondness for initial S, which may have been drawn, in this case, from the German das Preussen.

"That Spruce really meant Prussia and was used instead of Pruce may be found in 'Piers Plowman,' where we read Spruce for Prus, although Chaucer used Pruce in his 'Canterbury Tales.' Prussia was called Sprucia as late as 1614."

Breaking Rock by Powder

The bureau of mines says that the amount of powder necessary to break one yard of rock ranges from 2-10 pounds per ton to three to four pounds per ton, depending upon the kind of rock, its hardness and toughness; the number of free faces exposed, and the tightness of the opening from which it is to be blasted. A smaller amount is necessary in proportion for large quantities of rock. The percentage of powder would depend also upon the rock. On some rocks a better breakage is obtained on lower percentages, as some rocks require a slow-acting explosion. From 40 to 60 per cent powder is used for ordinary blasting.

Chestnut as a Food

In some of the French provinces the robust peasants subsist to a great extent on chestnut bread made by roasting and finally grinding the kernels into a meal or flour, to which is added milk and salt. A toothsome dish, tasting not unlike sugared almonds, is the sweetmeat, marron glace, made by dipping the nuts into clarified sugar and then drying. An old English dish is chestnuts boiled soft and served with sugar, juice of lemon, cinnamon, nutmeg and rose water. Chestnuts are also made into cakes and porridge and are boiled and mashed like potatoes.

Effect of Blown Salt

How salt, blown 20 miles from the sea, causes a breakdown on insulators of a 33,000-volt power line in south Wales is described in Nature Magazine. A series of breakdowns due to "surges" on the lines had attracted the attention of electricians who, on careful examination of the porcelain insulators, discovered that they were covered with a thin deposit of salt. The insulator nearest the sea had the thickest salt deposit and broke down more frequently than others.

Brother Knew

Little Dorothy believes the quickest way to find out anything is by asking questions. Sometimes mother thinks she has not time to answer all of them, so brother tries to help her out. When mother, who generally makes pies with one crust, decided to make an apple pie, using a top crust, Dorothy wanted to know what she did that for. After asking three times, brother answered:

"To keep it warm, Dorsie."

Changes in Letter "S"

The change from the long "s" which looks like an "f" to the one in use today began to take place about the time of the American Revolution. Of course the transition was gradual. It is supposed that John Bell of London, publisher of the British Theater, printed about 1775, was the first to discard the long "s." In 1786 Benjamin Franklin wrote, "The round 's' begins to be the mode, and in nice printing the long 's' is rejected entirely."

Six Simple Principles for the Argumentative

The six principles of effective argument might be worded in many ways, but stated in very simple terms they are:

1. Don't try to do all the talking. Remember your opponent wants to talk just as badly as you do. Give the other fellow a chance.

2. Don't interrupt your opponent's talk with a counter-argument.

3. Do not assume an argumentative, dogmatic attitude. Don't wear boxing gloves.

4. Ask questions in a pleasant, inquiring tone of voice during the first half of the argument.

5. Restate clearly and fairly in a very few words of your own the gist of each argument your opponent advances as soon as he advances it.

6. When you reply, stick hard to the subject. Bring out the key issue and stick to it. Don't digress and don't let your opponent digress.

In explaining the application of these principles I wish to emphasize first of all that the only way you can get their full benefit is to paste them on your mental hatband and use them consciously, deliberately. Most persons who use them at all apply them unconsciously. And most persons who violate them are unaware that they are doing so. If you do not practice them until they become a habit, you will forget and will not use them at all.—Albert E. Wiggam in the American Magazine.

Horns of Moses Traced to Medieval Painters

It was the custom of medieval artists to depict Moses with horns. The colossal figure in the church of St. Pietro in Vincoli at Rome, regarded as Michelangelo's masterpiece, shows the Israelite leader with horns. It is described as a representation of the wrath of Moses when he came down from Mount Sinai, and found his people worshiping the golden calf. It has been explained that the horns were used to give an effect of strength, and this is supported by the fact that horn is frequently used in the Bible to mean strength. Bible scholars believe, however, that the mistake arose from a wrong translation of Exodus 34: 29, 30, where it is stated that "the skin of his face shone." In Hebrew, the word for this is qaran, meaning "rays of light darting out," while the word for horn is qeren, and it is believed that the first translators of the Bible into Latin confused the words, thus giving currency to the horn tradition.

Blooms for Danger Signal

The hibiscus is the flower which is seen everywhere in Hawaii, and it is estimated that there are about 2,000 varieties. In Honolulu bunches of flowers are to be seen at every hand. In the office of the governor there is always to be seen a great floral ball one yard in diameter consisting of 900 blooms. These are picked and arranged each day by a long-term prisoner who is also the gardener, and this bouquet has been there every morning for many years. The common red hibiscus, which grows wild, is frequently made use of as a danger signal. It is not uncommon to see a great bunch of these flowers in the street where laborers are at work on the highway. The flowers are also often seen dangling from the rear of a truck with an overhanging load to warn pedestrians to keep away.

Burns Musical Genius

As for Burns, his genius fed upon daily and hourly, the floating Highland airs that lived among the people. He was a musician born. Some wind would blow him a wandering line of verse, some ancient tag of a ballad, and a strain of an entrancing Celtic melody. While he drove his plow . . . he would whistle and chant till he had woven them into something that made all the world in love with him for ever.—Grace Rhys, in the introduction to "A Celtic Anthology."

Mark Twain

One day, when Mark Twain was very busy writing in his study, his little daughter asked where daddy was, and was told she must be quiet and not disturb daddy because he was upstairs writing an anecdote.

Not long after the doorbell rang and the little girl ran to answer it. The caller asked if Mr. Clemens were in, to which the little miss proudly replied:

"Yes, sir, he's in, but you can't see him 'cause he's upstairs riding a nanygout."—Exchange.

What Would Happen?

"You know," said old Bill Tomaine, president of the Spit and Argy club and a philosopher of wide renown, as he slumped downtown to get a good seat on a sunny curbstone for the parade, "you know, I have often wondered why I like parades so much, and at last I know. It's because when the fire trucks are in the parade I am always wondering what will happen if an alarm comes in."—Emporia Gazette.

English as She Is Spelt

When Britishers find fault with our way of spelling "color," "labor" and similar words without the "u," we can reply that we prefer to be purists and follow the original Latin. Research reveals that the "u" crept in via low Gallic, the language of the uneducated Roman soldier.—Collier's Weekly.

LOCAL HAPPENINGS

J. B. Arvin made a trip to Pittsburg for Summe & Ratterman Monday with a truck load of butter.

Cal Cress made a truck bed for J. B. Arvin's new Studebaker truck last week.

Albert Pettit took a load of tobacco to Lexington Sunday. The load was estimated at 10,000 pounds, and was the crops of Bob, and Harry Gulley and Samue' Pettit.

County Jailer Elmer Kirkpatrick killed hogs last week, which is one of the best safeguards we know against breaking jail. That is, against breaking from the inside. The biggest problem now for the keeper of the local calaboose will be to keep a lot of us from breaking in.

The announcement of the marriage of Miss Mary Walton, of Petersburg, to Perry C. Carver, also of that town, came as a distinct surprise to their host of friends in and about Burlington. The bride is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Walton, of Petersburg while the groom is the only son of Robert and Eva Carver. Mrs. Walton, mother of the bride, was a popular Burlington girl, while the Carver family made Burlington their home before moving to Petersburg several years ago.

A good natured critic inquired of us last week as to the meaning of the term—"alibitum." Frankly, we do not know. In our tribute to the recent book of Prof. Lloyd last week we employed the expression "philanthropist ad libitum," but the eccentricities of the Lynotype machine caused it to go into print "alibitum," which of course was not intended.

In this issue of the Recorder will be found the delinquent tax list for Boone county, as ordered published by the sheriff Herbert Snyder. It is by far the largest list this editor ever has published and said to be one of the largest, if no quite, that ever has been advertised in Boone county. During the past seven or eight years the list has run as low as sixty or possibly less, while it never has run over ninety in all that time. This year, however, there are one hundred and seventy-nine taxpayers who have found it impossible to meet their tax payments before the time for advertising.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Berkshire observed their crystal wedding anniversary on Monday January 12th. Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Berkshire of Petersburg, were their dinner guests that evening. The same day also was the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Tolin, of Burlington and Cincinnati.

Podge Alloway, of Waterloo, paid the Recorder office a visit last Friday morning. Podge was all smiles, having just disposed of his crop of "the weed" at better than a 22 dollar average, a very good price this year.

Since the publication of our story last week relative to Prof. John Uri Lloyd's work entitled "Felix Moses, The Beloved Jew," we have received inquiries from several distant cities in quest of the name of the publishing house at which the book might be obtained. One of these came from a curio book shop in Chicago. For the benefit of any other of our readers who might be desirous of the same information we state that the book is now being published by the Methodist Book Concern, in Cincinnati.

HENRY P. McMURRAY

H. P. McMurray, son of the late Samuel and Sarai McMurray, was born May 28, 1875, and passed away at his home Sunday Dec. 28, 1930, aged 55 years and 7 months.

He had been a patient sufferer of heart trouble for many years.

Funeral services were conducted at the home Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock by Rev. J. W. Campbell, after which he was laid to rest in the family cemetery.

Mr. McMurray leaves to mourn his loss his wife Mrs. Ida McMurray, two daughters Mrs. Stella Kippler and Mrs. Mabel Kippler, two sons Wm. and Thomas McMerray, one brother, three grandsons and many other relatives and friends.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our many friends and neighbors who so kindly labored or assisted in any way during the illness and death of our beloved husband and father Mr. H. P. McMurray. Especially do we thank Dr. Nunnelley for his untiring efforts and Rev. J. W. Campbell for his words of comfort.

TWO GREAT MEN

There will be few who will scoff at the award of the prize of $10,000 for the greatest achievement in the field of science to the two eminent medical men who discovered the cure for pernicious anemia. Only three years ago physicians knew that every victim of that terrible disease was doomed to early death as certainly as if he had been sentenced to the electric chair. In the best hospitals only two or three out of every hundred cases of pernicious anemia admitted ever left the hospital alive. Now the whole picture is changed. Many physicians have reported 100 per cent of cures; some of the hospitals have had a similar experience.

The man or men who makes a discovery like that, which lengthens life and relieves suffering, is surely entitled to honor above the mere inventor of a machine, no matter how useful the machine may be. He is doubly to be honored, for his work is unselfish and without pecuniary reward. Under the code of the physician, he may not take money for his discovery, except as it may come in such form as the prize just awarded to Dr. Minot and Dr. Whipple. The medical man may not patent his discovery, or take a fee or percentage from its sale, directly or indirectly. He must publish it to the world, for the benefit of his fellow-practioners and the public whom he serves.

The inventor of a new machine is entitled to make all the money he can from its development and use. It may revolutionize the world, but the motive back of the invention was a selfish one. He is entitled to honors, but not to the degree to which the medical discoverer is entitled to them.

UNCLE SAM GETS AFTER RACKETEERS

The word "racketeer" is a comparatively new one, but the thing itself is as old as any other form of robbery. The racketeer preys upon legitimate business by threats of damage to life or property if his demands for tribute are not met. He levies an illegal tax upon the privilege of doing business.

In the big cities the racketeer who sets fire to a store whose owner has refused to pay for "protection" is usually organized in gangs, and so far police and citizens organizations have been powerless to curb him. Few men will risk their lives for the sake of their dollars, and enough business men have been murdered by racketeers to make others fearful of resisting their demands.

The Federal Government is taking steps to curb some forms of racketeering, which can be reached by Federal laws and agencies. Every shipper of farm products to the larger markets is a potential victim of the racketeers who prey upon the commission house and dealers. The Federal laws requiring every commission merchant perishable foods in interstate commerce to have a Federal license, and giving shippers a remedy in the Federal courts if they do not obtain the proceeds from the sale of their shipments, have already had a wholesome effect in putting many crooked commission houses out of business, or holding them to the straight and narrow path.

Now the Government proposes to follow this up by making it a Federal offense to interfere with interstate shipments in any way. The gangs which demand that their friends and they alone shall have the privilege of unloading and trucking produce at certain terminals, and who beat up and sometimes kill those not members of their gangs, who try to handle produce at terminal markets, would come under the inhibitions of this law.

Every move which will reduce the toll taken by middlemen between producer and consumer is a good move. And when that toll is an illegitimate one, as in the case of the racketeer, it is essential to the welfare of the nation that it be eliminated. All of them are good dependable sorts to use except in gardens whose soil is infected with the "yellows" disease. The evidence of this trouble is the rotting off of the plant stems just when heading should begin. The only way to circumvent "yellows" is to use varieties resistant to it. These are Iacope and Marion Market. These are not as early as the list just given but they will produce cabbage in "yellows" infected gardens. The best cauliflower vadieties are Erfurt and Snowball. In gardens when cabbage "yellows" is present, cauliflower may be affected, too, but to a lesser degree. There are no "yellows" resistant sorts in cauliflower, yet.

As for lettuce, several sorts should be used to provide succession. In their order of bolting to seed, these are the heading sorts: Big Boston, Hanson, New York, or Wonderful. Grand Rapids is the most dependable of the "leaf" types.

Cabbage and cauliflower are subject to the Black Rot disease. The symptom is lopsided, small and blackened heads, if, in fact, heading takes place. Old plant beds are sometimes responsible, and so is failure to "rotate" the crop in the garden, and sometimes the seed itself introduces the trouble. To guard against Black Rot, use only new bed soil, and select a new location in the garden, and, to guard against introductios through the seed, disinfect it with bichloride of mercury. The procedure is:

1. Dissolve a 7½ grain tablet of bichloride in a pint of water, in a crockery ware or wooden vessel.

2. Immerse the seed (in a cloth bag) in this solution 30 minutes.

3. Spread it to dry quickly, in room temperature, but not in direct sunlight.

URGES CARE TO KEEP OUT BORER

An appeal to farmers to help keep the cornborer out of Kentucky is made by Prof. W. A. Price, state entomologist at the Experiment Station, University of Kentucky. He fears the pest will be imported in corn from Ohio or Indiana. The Government is endeavoring to maintain a quarantine against regions known to contain the borer, and Prof. Price urges farmers to assist by not buying corn from infested sections of the country.

The region known to have the cornborer consists of north-eastern Indiana and practically all of Ohio excepting the southern counties along the Ohio Rived.

LIVESTOCK WORK AT EXPERIMENT STATION ATTRACTS ATTENTION

The Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky has attracted world-wide attention through its work on livestock diseases, and is recognized as the leading institution in the study of diseases of horses incident to breeding, according to Dr. Gustaf Danelius, Sewish veterinary surgeon and scientist, who is spending a few weeks investigating the work of the Station and visiting horse breeding farms in Kentucky.

Mr. Danelius said that he made these statements about the Kentucky Experiment Station because of its reputation abroad and after investigation of its standing among other similar institutions in this country.

He was emphatic concerning the leadership of the Kentucky Experiment Station in the study of sterility in mares, a trouble which has cost breeders here and abroad vast sums of money, and for which a solution long has been sought. He pointed out the work that Dr. W. W. Dimock, Head of the department of animal pathology, was known and had been watched with interest in almost every country.

Record of 3,000 barren mares including 6,000 examinations made by Dr. Dimock and his co-workers in an effort to determine the cause of sterility is considered of great value. The publications of the results of these observations attracted much attention abroad, according to Dr. Danelius, and established the leadership of the Kentucky institution in this particular field.

Dr. Danelius, who was formerly connected with the University at Stockholm, but is now a district veterinarian and practioner in Sweden, is much interested in the work in this country in the prevention and eradication of animal diseases. He is impressed with the progress in eradication of bovine tuberculosis in this country, which he thought might be fully accomplished in 10 to 15 years. In Sweden and other European countries the policy of dealing with tuberculosis is one of prevention based on the elimination only of advanced open cases from the herds. Eradication will probably never be realized in Europe, or at least for many years.

The general policy followed for the control of animal parasites also attracted his attention, and he commended the Kentucky Experiment Station for its work both in preventive medicine and its policy with animal parasites on a basis of ultimate eradictaion.

Dr. Danelius expressed appreciation for the courtesy shown him by the owners and managers of the horse breeding farms and practicing veterinarians in Kentucky. He is studying in this country on a Swedish-American Foundation scholarship and confining his work to the three states of New York, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky, also visiting Ohio State University. This is his second trip to America, having spent the year 1926 here on a Rockefeller scholarship.

The Family Garden

RAISING "COOL VEGETABLE" PLANTS

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture)

The "cool" vegetables are cabbage, cauliflower and lettuce. They are so named because they are set in the garden while the weather is still cool, and before the spring frosts are past. The date they are set in the garden ranges from February 20 or a week earlier in the southern part of the state, to as late as April 1 in the northernmost counties.

At the time of setting, cabbage and cauliflower plants should be no less than six weeks old, and lettuce plants, about four, if early crops are sought. In order to have plants of this age, preparations should begin soon.

The means employed to grow these plants is a hotbed to start the seedlings, and a coldframe in which to harden off the plants in preparation for their being set in the open garden. Strictly speaking, a coldframe is not needed for a hotbed whose heat is spent will serve, but because the hotbed will be needed for tomatoes and other "warm" crops later, a separate coldframe is a valuable adjunct.

A hotbed is a wooden enclosure, covered with glass sash especially made for the purpose, the soil within warmed by fermenting manure, by hot air or make flues, by steam or hot water pipes or even by electric heating coils, but the means most commonly used is fermenting manure. The Kentucky Experiment Station has prepared a circular dealing with the detail of making and managing a hotbed. Its number is 120 and a copy will be sent for the asking.

Now, to return to the growing of the plants of the "cool" vegetables.

The early cabbage varieties are Early Jersey Wakefield, Charleston Wakefield, Golden Acre and Copenhagen Marpet. The latter two sorts are roundheaded; the other pointed.

Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

ONLY A FEW IDEAS

Twenty years ago I heard a famous editor talk on advertising before the Chicago advertising club. I was just out of college and had seen very few great men, so the talk made a deep impression. I remember the editor said that "reputation is repetition," and he told some stories to illustrate the point.

The other night in New York I heard the same editor speak on the same subject. To my surprise it was the very same speech.

Another speaker was a celebrated banker whom I had heard on two previous occasions He, also, repeated himself.

As we left the dining room one of my friends who had noted the repetitions remarked on them gloomily.

"Rather discouraging to see that even the big minds have so little in them," he said. 'Makes you wonder if human ingenuity is coming to an end."

"They say that though the stars appear so numberless, you can not count more than a thousand," he said. "Well, there are few thoughts. Count the books and you would think that there was immense wealth; but any expert knows that there are few thoughts which have emerged in his time. Shut him in a closet and he could soon tell them all. They are quoted, contradicted, modified, by the amount remains computably small."

It is a good thing for humanity that this is so. Nature apparently designed the game of human progress to last a long time, and provided that only a mall advance should be made in any one generation. Suppose one mind should suddenly discover everything. How it would take the zest out of the game!

Moreover, it is decidedly heartening to us average folks to know that only a very little difference separates us from the smartest. Lincoln remarked on it. "I have talked with great men," he said, "and I can not see wherein they differ from others."

Generally speaking, the great achieve greatness by industry rather than by mere brilliance. The editor whom I quoted is said to be the highest paid in the world. But if you divide his salary by the more than two hundred newspapers which print his editorials, he is the lowest priced worker whom each of those papers employs. He produces more than any body else and works longer hours to do it.

I was glad that I went to that dinner. It reminded me how little wisdom and genius really rule the world; how far industrious effort can stretch the few ideas, or even one idea.

Charity

True charity is spontaneous and finds its own occasion; it is never the offspring of importunity nor of emulation.—Ballou.

Impractical Device

A solar heater is one that creates energy by using the sun's rays to make steam or vapor from water. There have been numerous attempts to perfect this heater; however, they have not proved practical.

The Real Concern

I am not concerned that I have no place; I am concerned how I shall fit myself for one. I am not concerned at not being known; I seek to be worthy to be known.—Confucius.

Education Worth Anxiety

Education is the only interest worthy of deep, controlling anxiety of the thoughtful man.—Phillips.

Try It

The harassed husband of a wife whose mouth is always in active eruption complains to the Florence (Ala.) Herald that he "can't get a word in edgewise." "How," he asks, "can I make her listen to me?" "Easy!" informs the editor. "Talk in your sleep."

Sunday School Lesson

THE CHILDHOOD OF JESUS

Luke 2:40-52

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Just a few weeks ago we had the fascinating details about the birth of Jesus at Bethlehem. We followed the Shepherds from the fields near Bethlehem to the manger cradle and worshipped with the Wise Men as they brought their gifts. Herod wanted to kill the Child who in time would become a King but this was prevented when Joseph obeyed the command from God to flee to Egypt with the Babe and Mary the mother. When all was safe another message told the carpenter to go back to Nazareth, their home.

At the age of thirteen the Jewish boy became BAR MIZVAH, a Son of Commandment. Then he was of age to take his place before the law and to have part in the various Hebrew feasts. When the next Passover came Jesus was taken to Jerusalem with the family. During those twelve years He had been taught as other Hebrew children. Parts of the Old Testament Scripture rolls had been His study books.

People usually traveled in groups in caravan fashion in those days and it was supposed that the lad Jesus was somewhere in the company until bed time came, the first night out from Jerusalem on the way back to Nazareth. Then there was consternation because of this Boy for the first time in His life. Haste was made to return to Jerusalem and the parents searched everywhere. At last they found Him in the Temple asking questions of the learned priests. He showed surprise that any search had been made for Him for they should have really known that He would be in just one place in the house of His Father. The Golden Text describes the next 18 years: "Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man," Luke 2:52.

FINNEY OF THE FORCE By F. O. Alexander

From Our Early Files

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Conner & Hogan received considerable tobacco last week.

N. E. Riddell and wife entertained Al Rogers and wife, of Belleview, Sunday.

F. Riddell is on the sick list with grippe.

Roy Clutterbuck has been very ill for several days.

Mrs. Annie Clore and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Clirt Weaver and son Lloyd, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Eddins Sunday.

The Rouse boys had bad luck at their mill, Monday, a band flying off, demolishing the crusher. They will be ready to do crushing again in a few days.

Limaburg

Sam Conrad has the grippe.

L. S. Beemon has a carbuncle on the side of his face.

Born, on the 9th inst., to William Davis and wife, a girl.

Chas. Garnett's 25-year old family mare died the other day.

S. Gaines, candidate for County Attorney, was the first candidate to visit this place

D. M. Snyder, candidate for Superintendent of Schools, was here Monday.

Hathaway

David Clements is quite poorly.

Joe Huey has gone to housekeeping on R. L. Huey's place.

Lafe Presser entertained with a corn husking, last Thursday.

R. L. Huey was on the Louisville tobacco market one day last week with his tobacco.

Tobacco strippings are all the go around here. Oath Hubbard entertained with one last Tuesday. B. D. Adams on Tuesday night, Robert Clements on last Wednesday, and Wm. Moore, last Thursday.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Assessor Brady says he will stay at home a while now with his family.

J. M. Lassing visited Petersburg Thursday.

Last Friday morning a house in the Locust Grove neighborhood, containing about 1,500 pounds of tobacco belonging to John Sebree, was destroyed by fire, evidently the work of an incendiary. We understand that Mr. Sebree had no insurance.

Thomas Cowen has disposed of his interest in the dry goods business at Belleview—his partner, Johnny Huey being the purchaser.

The Boone County Sheep Fund is a victim of too much legislation.

The business done by the Boone County Deposit Bank last year was very satisfactory to the stockholders.

Petersburg

Geo. Theetge fell and broke one of his legs the other day.

Will Casey is not expected to live—he has cancer of the stomach.

James Theetge had one of his eyes knocked out the other day by being struck with a stone.

Walter Green, son of Ellen Green, died of typhoid fever at the residence of Geo. Allen Sunday week, aged 21.

Locust Grove

Last Saturday W. B. Kelly, who lives down on the East Bend road lots a tobacco house and about 2,500 pounds of tobacco by fire. He had been stripping tobacco that day and had a fire in the building to work by, and it is supposed that that was the origin of the fire. Did not learn whether he had any inssurance or not.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

Mr. Dudley Rouse is invoicing his goods this week.

Mrs. O. P. and Mrs. Lewis Conner since the first of January, 1880, have sold to one grocery firm in this place 1,200 pounds of butter, their own manufacture. Every pound of this butter was of the very best quality, and it sold readily at twenty-five cents per pound retail.

A LIE

The legal business is booming.

Tim Westbay has gone south.

Joe Reed will take a position at the Grand.

R. C. Green is glad the entertainment is over.

The jail is the finest building in the county.

Joe and Tim went to the city Saturday to see Rip Van Winkle.

Hebron

Albert Crigler has gone south for his health.

John Clore has the finest horses and sleigh in this community.

Charles Baker has returned to his home, Shekeyville, Indiana.

Owen Gaines had the misfortune of losing one of his valuable horses a few days ago by driving it too fast.

Plattsburg

Sidney Gaines met with quite an accident the other day. His horse ran off with him and threw him out of a sleigh, and crippled him badly.

Gov. Stith received the boss price for his tobacco, $13 per hundred.

Mayor J. A. Tolin is talking of moving to Burlington.

Jake Niffer, the boy that got his hand torn off in the straw cutter, at Petersburg, died from the effects of his wounds, Saturday.

IN MEMORIAM

In memory of my daughter Mrs. Beatrice Snelling (nee Bradford) who passed away Jan. 16th, 1930.

Just one year ago today since my daughter passed away; O Lord keep green the grave that lies beneath the wide and starry skies; Keep sweet with sleep and give her rest whose hands are folded on her breast. A lovely daughter true and kind; no friend on earth like her I find.

But in my heart she lingers still and she moreever will; For me she always did her best and may God grant her eternal rest; too soon, yes too soon, death had to sway. I miss her each day, each day. I've a picture in my memory that will never fade away, and as I gaze on it it seems nearer each day. Watch and wait for the dear daughter for I know it won't be long until we meet again reunited in a land of sun and song.

A precious one from us has gone
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given,
Altho the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in Heaven.

Precious one she has left us,
Left us, yes forever more,
But we hope to meet our loved one
On that bright and happy shore.

Lonely the house and sad the hours
Since our dear one has gone,
But oh, a brighter home than ours,
In Heaven is now her home.

Sadly missed by Mother, Father and Brother.

Hen's Best Years

Poultry specialists have found that the typical hen makes her best egg-laying record in her first laying year, and drops off 15 to 20 per cent each succeeding year.

Unromantic

Most couples get married without the girl knowing how the man looks with a three-days' growth of whiskers and the man doesn't have the faintest idea of how she'll look in hair curlers.—Ohio State Journal.

"Colonial Days"

It is customary to reckon colonial days from approximately the time when the English colonies settled in Jamestown, Va., in 1607, to approximately 1770.

Origin of Expression "That Beats the Dutch"

"An American Glossary," by Thornton, gives examples of the use of the expression "That beats the Dutch" as early as 1775, the line "Our cargoes of meat, drink and cloaths beat the Dutch" appearing in a "Revolutionary Song" by Bartlett of that date. In the Philadephia Public Ledger of February 6, 1837, occurs this statement: "That beats the Dutch, saith the proverb; meaning that, as the Dutch beat Old Nick, it is something of an exploit to beat them. Vizetelly and De Bekker's Deskbook of Idioms states that the phrase originated in the days when bitter enmity prevailed between the Dutch and other nations. In this connection, however, it is worthy of notice that most of the expressions that arose out of the struggle between the English and the Dutch in the Seventeenth century were derogatory or derisive; among these are "Dutch courage; to talk double Dutch; Dutch comfort; Dutch concert; I'm a Dutchman if I do; Dutch treat; Dutch gold; talk like a Dutch uncle." The saying "That beats the Dutch" is not derogatory and is an American and not an English one, so that it possibly expresses admiration for the fighting qualities of the Dutch in their long struggle with Spain and later with England. Again, as the name "Dutch" is also applied to Germans, it may be a reference to the German mercenary troops of Colonial days.

Vergil More Than Match for "Devylls of Hell"

There are several stories telling how Vergil became acquainted with the "devylls of hell." According to one German legend, Vergil was one day digging in his garden when he came upon a glass filled with what appeared to be wriggling earthworms. But a voice came from the glass begging Vergil to open it and promising to teach him many arts. "Teach me the arts," replied Vergil cannily, "and I will break the bottle and set you free." So they taught him all they knew, and when he opened the bottle, 72 devils crawled out and disappeared.

In another version, a single devil promised to give Vergil the magical book of Solomon if he would release him from the bottle. Vergil did so, but, frightened by the size of the liberated spirit, tricked him into returning to the bottle in the same way as the fisherman in the "Arabian Nights" tricked the jinn. "Surely you can't make yourself as small as the bottle again," said Vergil. "Easily," replied the devil, and to prove it, returned to the flask. Vergil promptly put in the stopper and kept him prisoner forever. —Baltimore Sun.

Early American Colonist

Edward Maria Wingfield was an English merchant and colonist in America. He was born at Stoneley, Huntingdonshire. He served in the English army, both in Ireland and in the Low countries. Becoming interested in schemes for American colonization, he was one of those to whom the patent of Virginia was granted, April 6, 1609. He was the only one of the patentees who sailed to America with the first colonists, and was named in the sealed instructions a member of the council, of which he was elected the first president. He quarreled with the other members of the council, and with Capt. John Smith in particular. His Catholicism threw suspicion upon his loyalty and he was soon deposed, both from the council and governorship, in September, 1607. In 1608 he returned to England.

Posters Long in Use

Actually the poster or placard can trace its ancestry back almost to the dawn of civilization. Egyptian wall paintings, mural decorations and inscriptions, produced more than 3,000 years B. C., have been discovered by archeologists. The modern poster began with Jules Cheret, a Frenchman, born in Paris in 1836, self-taught as a draughtsman. He served his apprenticeship as a lithographer in England, and when thirty years old became interested in announcements of theatrical managers and placards put out about that time urging recruiting for armies. In 1867 the world saw the first modern poster of Cheret's, an announcement of a play enacted by Sarah Bernhardt, then twenty-two years old. The poster announced a fairy play, entitled "La Biche au Bois."

Stage Tragedies

The word "tragedy" is from Greek words meaning goat songs. There are many explanations of the reason for this. Possibly "goat songs" was applied to the chants used by the men clothed in goatskin, who represented the satyrs in the festival of Bacchus. Tragedy took its rise from these songs. The Greek developed it to a high point, especially in the dramas of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides. Aristotle gave as the reason for the existence of tragedy "the purification of the passions through the arousing of fear and pity."

Revised Version

Twelve years ago a certain author announced that it was his wife's brains, not her beauty, that attracted him. "But now," he writes, "after twelve years of marriage, I imagine it must have been her beauty, because I don't see the brains." — Collier's Weekly.

World Pays Tribute at Shrine of Bobby Burns

Many places have been "made" by the genius of a great writer. Scott has done more for the tourist agencies and the railways of England than any of his countrymen, because his range was so wide. He discovered the Trossachs and Loch Katrine, and even made the Peak of Derbyshire world-famous. But there are no more hallowed spots than those which dot the Burns country.

The country town of Ayr lies in the center of a fine sandy coast, with wonderful sea view across the great firth. There is no house in the kingdom, no palace or castle or great mansion, that has half the attraction for the world as the little thatched biggin at Alloway where Robert Burns was born. In its visitors' book are inscribed the names of men and women famous in literature, art and statecraft, the names of peers and peasants and of kings, all come to worship at the shrine of genius.

Close by is the Auld Brig o' Doon, leaping in a single gray and graceful span the little stream whose name has gone round the world. Close by, too, is the haunted kirk, where Tam o' Shanter saw witches and warlocks holding revelry in its churchyard. In the town itself can still be seen the Auld Brig of Ayr, the theme of one of his finest poems, whilst the river Ayr is forever associated with the ode.

Twins in Class Mean Trouble for Teacher

"Twins," complained the young teacher; "they're more trouble! It's fun for them, but for us—"

There were Evelyn and Elinor, for instance, small twins, whose great similarity was the despair of the young kindergarten teacher. If only their mother would dress them differently or put some distinguishing mark on them! Should she ask them in the morning which was which and put labels on them? Or what should she do? They were adorable, blue-eyed, fair children with soft, light hair. If only the hair of one were straight and the other curly! But, no; even their ringlets were exactly alike. What should she do?

One morning they came to school and, O, joy! One had a tooth out, right in the middle of her upper jaw! The teacher ascertained that the lacking tooth was from Elinor's set of pearls. Now her problem was solved and when she looked at Elinor and called her by name Elinor, and not Evelyn, would answer. One less worry, she rejoiced.

But the next morning when they appeared each child was minus a tooth and each gap was right in the middle of the upper jaw!—New York Sun.

Windsor Chairs

Should you have a Windsor chair, writes Catherine Shellabarger in the Brooklyn Eagle Magazine, remember it was brought into vogue by King George I of England. King George, talking to one of his farmer subjects, admired the bumble seat on which he sat, the back of which was made of slender spindles. He thought so much of the chair that he ordered a set made for his palace at Windsor and so established the popularity of the Windsor chair. Among famous Americans who were partial to Windsor chairs was Thomas Jefferson. On this chair, with wide arms that served as a writing desk, and which also had a double seat, he is said to have written the first draft of the Declaration of Independence.

English Poppy Fields

The poppies not only bloom in Flander's fields. There is a great poppy-land in England. Right beside the cold North sea, stretching for miles and miles between and about ruined church tower and ancient manor house, encircling the villages about the Norfolk broads and near to the city of Norwich, you will find the warm colors which would make a Californian envious. It has been called the Holland of England, for it has inland seas, windmills, dykes and poppies. This great poppyland, like others that we know, is in the most restful sense, the most charming sense, a garden of sleep and its silent fields and fens are beautiful.

Division of Virginia

The social conditions in western Virginia were entirely unlike those existing in the eastern portion of the state. The rugged nature of the country made slavery unprofitable, but as time wore on the social, political, and economic differences between the eastern and western parts, that were then Virginia, became more pronounced. In 1776 a petition was presented to congress for the establishment of "Westsylvania" on the ground that the mountains made an almost impassable barrier between the west and the east. The Civil war finally furnished the occasion for separation of West Virginia from Virginia.

Jungfrau Mass of Flowers

Whether you are ascending or descending the Jungfrau from Interlaken, you will be amazed at the wild flowers, many of which are anything but wild when they grow in our sheltered gardens and hothouses. Right up to the snow line and the rim of the glaciers you will find alpenrosen, as they call our azaleas, violets, forget-me-nots, foxgloves, thistlebloom, anemones, gentians, clover and cornflowers, if that is what you call "bachelor buttons."

Critic and Author

A critic, wrote Lander, is never too severe when he detects the faults of an author. But he is worse than too severe when, in consequence of this detection, he presumes to place himself on a level with genius.

LIFE'S STORY BOOK

A new year lies before us,
Like a new Book clean and white,
It is, each one's choice my brother
Just what we are going to writ

Shall it be deeds of kindness
Done in His holy name?
O pray let us walk in His footsteps,
His honor and glory proclaim.

Take heed how the years are passing
Make good use of each golden day,
To each one you Be a Blessing
Speak words of good cheer while you may.

You can be an angel of mercy
For freely its given to you,
Then speak the good word to a brother
You know not the good you may do.

Let it each page be a story of service,
Service to your fellowmen,
Living as Jesus would have us,
Forgetting our own selfish gain.

Then some time in realms of glory
When life on this plane is o'er,
They shall read our golden story,
And welcome us ever more.

Deaths

CHARLES GURNEY DEAD

Friends of Charles Gurney, of Erlanger, in Boone county were sorely grieved to learn of his untimely death, which occurred last Saturday morning at 10:30. Mr. Gurney was 50 years of age and leaves a widow and two children. He was very well known in this section of Boone county and had many friends here. Ulcer of the stomach caused his death.

MRS. MABEL CLORE

Mabel Clore, daughter of Mabel and Perry Beemon was born May 12, 1886, and departed this life January 13th 1931.

On December 14, 1904, she was united in marriage with Everett E. Clore. To this happy union was born one son, Lloyd Alton, who preceded his mother in death more than four years ago.

She confessed her faith in the Lord October 18, 1910 and united with the Belleview Baptist church in which she kept her membership until her death.

She was a loving devoted wife and mother. She will be grievously missed by her husband, her mother-in-law, Mrs Eugenia Clore; her mother, Mrs. Mabel Beemon; her sisters, Mrs. Joe Jeffries, Mrs. Hogan Ryle and Mrs Courtney Pope; her brothers Lewis and Roy Beemon, and many other relatives and friends.

Her sweet thoughtful disposition and earnest christian character endeared her to everyone whom she met and it can truly be said to know her was to love her.

WALLLACE ALLEN STEPHENS

Word was received by relatives in Covington last week of the death of Wallace Allen Stephens, 64, of Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Stephens was the son of Mahlon and Julia (Wiliams) Stephens, and for many years lived with his parents near Union. Since their death however Mr. Stephens has made his home in Columbus. His funeral was held on the 14th, burial in Melford Center, Ohio.

Mr. Stephens leaves a widow Edna Stephens in Columbus and many relatives in Boone and Kenton counties.

OBITUARY

The Death Angel has once more entered our midst and removed therefrom another of our beloved citizens. On January 3, 1931, at 3:30 o'clock a. m., God in his love and wisdom called to her eternal reward Miss Lamora Bradford, who was born in Boone County, Ky., November 7th, 1856. At the age of seventy-four years 1 month and 27 days.

She was a daughter of Ambrose and Nancy Bradford, being the 10th child in a family of eleven. Of this large family there now survives but one brother Robert Bradford, where she made her home for years. She became a member of the Bellevie Baptist church many years ago and lived a faithful member as long as her health would permit.

Aunt Mora, as we affectionately called her, was an invalid for almost two years. Always had a good word and a smile for everyone, and always bore her sufferings and pains patiently.

She has gone home to meet loved ones who have passed before, and to await the coming of others.

There is never a day so sunny,
That a little cloud appears,
There is never a life so happy
But it has its time for tears.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank all who were so kind and helpful in the sickness and death of our dear sister Miss Lamora Bradford, and also the Undertaker Mr C. Scott Chambers, also Bro. McMillan for his consoling words.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bradford

Last Tuesday afternoon L. C. Beemon received the very sad news of the death of his sister, Mrs. Mabel Beemon Clore at Rising Sun. This very sad death recalls a tragedy of more than four years ago when Lloyd Clore the only son of deceased and her husband, Everett E. Clore, was killed in an automobile accident near Rising Sun. The surviving husband has the sincere sympathy of Boone county relatives and friends. An obituary will be found in other columns of this issue.

P. E. Bruce, of Belleflower, Illinois, who has been visiting relatives in Petersburg for the past few days, was in Burlington to attend the funeral of his uncle Asa Cason Tuesday. Mr. Bruce called at the Recorder office and made arrangements for the Recorder to continue its weekly visits to his Western home.

Wilford Aylor, of East Bend, made the Recorder office a call last Saturday afternoon. Mr. Aylor, who is one of the most progressive young farmers in his section of the county, is leaving the farm and has accepted a position with the Early & Daniel Co., of Chillicothe, Ohio. His brother Howard Aylor, is located there and has been with the same company for several years.

CALIFORNIA

TO VISIT LOCAL GYMNASIUM FRIDAY NIGHT WITH BOTH BOYS AND GIRLS TEAMS—HI SCHOOL TEAMS ARE SHOWING IMPROVEMENT IN GENERAL PLAY, WHILE ADDITION OF TWO NEW PLAYERS STRENGTHENS TOMCATS

Local basket ball fans are all peped up over the prospects of an improved ball team in their Hi School Tomcats.

Under the astute tutelage of Coach C. G. Lamb their general play has undergone a great change for the better during the past few weeks And, in addition, two new players were added to the squad at the close of the first semester in the Williamson brothers, both of whom are fine players of experience, and who will add greatly to the effectiveness of the 'Cats.

The Kittens also have shown a great change for the better in every game lately. So the home games for the balance of the season should draw some splendid and enthusiastic crowds.

One of the best games on the home card for the entire season will be the one here on Friday night of this week with Jolly Memorial, of California. These two teams met earlier in the season wher 'Cats and Kittens each suffered a loss.

The California fives both are very strong and have been setting a hot pace over in the Campbell county region. The fans who venture out to these games Friday night at the high school gym will really see some fast and interesting basket ball. The line-ups follow:

Burlington	Girls	California
Phillips	F	Priffle
Jarrell or E. Ryle	F	Daniel
A. Burton	C	Parker
Akin	G	Farcas
L. Ryle	G	Schneider
	Boys
Ogden	F	Copenbeker
Maurer-Stephens	F	Pointers
D. Williamson	C	Ling
Greenup (C)	G	Rouse
J. R. Williamson	G	Trumper

INDIAN FIVE

WILL DISPLAY BASKET BALL WARES HERE ON THURSDAY NIGHT OF THIS WEEK—ALL ARE FULL BLOODED AND REAL STARS OF THE HARDWOOD — HAVE WON FIFTY GAMES OF 58 PLAYED ON TOUR OF COUNTRY

War whoops and war dances of the Navajo, Seneca, Cherokee and Winnebago Indian tribes well serve as a forerunner to the fastest basket ball that ever has been shown on the local floor Thursday night when the First Americans, a team composed of full blooded Indians will take the floor against the Burlington Baptists.

This game was not booked with any idea that the Baptists rank in the same class with the Indians, for the latter rank with the best teams in the country, but to give he local fans an opporunity to witness real topnotch basket ball. Then, of course, in addition to the exceptional basket ball displayed, a chance of seeing a real honest-to-goodness troup of thoroughbred "First Americans" is a unique treat in itself.

This high class team has played 53 games up to this writing and against all-comers. They have not dodged the good ones, in fact they cater to the best engagements. They have defeated Y. M. C. A. and college teams in some of the largest cities in the south west and intend to continue an attempted nation-wide tour. On Wednesday night of this week, the night before their appearance here, they will play the crack Eastern Kentucky Normal team, at Richmond. The latter five is leading the S. I. A. A. in Kentucky.

The chance to engage this team for an appearance in Burlington was indeed a chance and one which was literally "gobbled up" by the local management, although the guarantee was a pretty stiff one for a locality such as this. The price of admission has been raised to 25 cents for children and 35 cents for adults as a safe guard against a loss on the guarantee, as the treasury of the Baptist five already is "in the red."

The red skins are due to arrive in Burlington some time before school adjourns Thursday afternoon and will appear in each room of the local school immediately after their arrival. Then prior to the start of the game, which will be at 8 o'clock they will put on a war dance on the basket ball floor while attired in tribal costume.

By way of an introduction to the First American team the following names and positions, together with the name of the tribe to which each belongs and his home town, are listed: Forwards, Red Fox, a Seneca, of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Huston Teehee, a Cherokee, of Miami, Okla., Young Eagle, a Winnebago, of Wichita, Kansas; Center, Hook Haynes, a Cherokee, of Commerce, Arizona; Guards, Sam Legah, a Navajo, of Fort Defiance, Arizona; Kee Kinsel, a Navajo, of Gallup, New Mexico, and Lloyd Burton, also a Navajo, of Alberquerque, New Mexico.

Against this array the home team will play its regular line-up and the boys have promised to try to hold the score as low as possible, although they do not guarantee that the Indians won't "take their scalps."

W. M. U. NOTES

The W. M. U. of the Belleview Baptist church held their regular monthly meeting on Friday of last week at the home of Mrs. Lou Maurer. Twenty-two members and four visitors were present.

We sent out quite a few cards the past month to the sick, and we made arrangements to send clothing to the Orphans Home. Our next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Bernard Rogers on the first Thursday of next month.

We urge all members and visitors that can to be present.

We hope to have a good meeting.

MRS. FRANCES BUFFINGTON,
Chairman.

Rev. and Mrs. Victor Stephenson of Union, were in Burlington on business Tuesday and made the Recorder office a call.

PICNIC GROUNDS

WILL BE DISPOSED OF AT MASTER COMMISSIONER'S SALE ON MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2ND —ONE HUNDRED ACRES IN LOT OF LAND TO BE SOLD— SALE TO BE MADE SUBJECT TO LEASE THAT EXPIRES IN 1937.

The old and historic Harvest Home grounds will be disposed of at public auction by Master Commissioner R. E. Berkshire at the court house door on Monday, February 2nd.

This sale is made necessary in order to settle the estate of the late H. W. Rouse, but will not affect in any way the present status of the picnic grounds as the present lease does not expire until 1937. The land on which the dancing pavilion and other buildings are located will be sold subject to this lease, which provides for the payment of one hundred dollars a year.

The plot of land to be sold, and on which the pavilion and buildings are located, contains approximately one hundred acres.

FIRE SWEEPS DINE-SCHABEL FURNITURE CO., WAREHOUSE

Losses of Stock and Building Estimated at $100,000.00

Blackened ruins now represent high class furniture that was in the warehouse.

Firemen of four cities, Covington, Newport, South Fort Mitchell and Ludlow were called and fought the raging blaze more than four hours before they were able to bring it under control. The building stood alone and firemen were able to pour water into the blazing structure from all sides. However, they were hampered greatly by the vast amount of furniture stored in the building and which blocked the windows allowing the smoke to puff upward into the skies.

The blaze which reddened the skies for miles around attracted thousands of spectators to the scene. The Suspension Bridge was lined clear across with watchers while many thousands stood on the Cincinnati side of the Ohio River to view Covington's most spectacular blaze in years. Firemen played lines of hose on the structure thoughout the night and day.

The entire remaining stock in the building is being adjusted by the insurance company and as fast as possible is being moved to their store at 521 Madison Ave., and turned over to the KAY'S MERCHANDISING AND SALES COMPANY who are preparing to sell the stock as soon as all arrangements are complete.

Our representative was in Covington this week and from what he reports there will be some real furniture bargains as very little of the stock was burnt but most all slightly damaged by smoke or water. He also learned that The Dine-Schabell Furniture Co. are going to offer for sale in this gigantic fire sale the entire stock of new furniture contained in the Madison Ave., store at prices that will be even less than ordinary fire sale prices. We are advised that the next week's papers will have full accounts of what wonderful values they are going to have.

Ezra Aylor, of East Bend, was business visitor at the county seat Saturday, and while here investigated several pieces of residence property. It is said that Mr. Aylor plans to retire from active farming soon. We certainly would like to see him locate in Burlington.

There will be an oyster supper in the hall over the Peoples Deposit Bank Saturday night of this week beginning at 5 o'clock. The supper will be given by the M. E. Sunday school. Everybody is cordially invited and urged to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Aylor and Mrs. Helen Methven and little daughter, of Cincinnati, were dinner guests of Henry Selkman and family last Sunday.

DIES AT NINETY-ONE

ASA S. CASON

FINAL SUMMONS

COMES TO ASA S. CASON, ONE OF BOONE COUNTY'S FEW NONAGENARIANS — PASSES AWAY LAST SATURDAY NITE, BURIED TUESDAY AT BURLINGTON— WAS NINETY-ONE YEARS OLD, FATHER OF THE LATE COUNTY JUDGE P. E. CASON

Death came to one of Boone county's rare nonagenarians when Asa S. Cason, of Bullittsville neighborhood, answered the final summons last Saturday night. General infirmities caused his demise. He would have been 91 had he lived until February 5th of this year.

Mr. Cason was one of Boone county's best known and admired citizens. Although he was not a native son, having come here from Harrison co., when but a lad, yet his loyalty and devotion to Boone county and her people were unquestioned.

Most of his years in Boone county were spent on his farm located near Burlington on the East Bend road and which farm still shows evidence of his thrift and careful management, although it has been quite a few years since he sold the home place and retired from active life.

The late County Judge P. E. Cason, one of the most popular and valued citizens this county ever had, was a son of the deceased, having been born of the first union of Mr. Cason with Polly Ann Smith. One daughter was born to this union, but who died in her infancy.

To his second marriage, which was to Gertrude Graves, were born three daughters, Mrs. Leslie Goodridge, with whom he lived at the time of his death and Mrs. Elbert Roberts, of Covington. The third daughter preceded the deceased to the grave. He also is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Marion Bruce, of Petersburg, the other the name of whom is unknown to this writer, residing in Cynthiana.

Mr. Cason died a member of the Baptist church and of which he had been a member for forty-seven years having united under the ministry of Rev. Dickman. Funeral services were held for him in that church here on Tuesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, after which the remains were interred in the I. O. O. F. cemetery.

C. Scott Chambers, of Walton, had charge of the funeral arrangements Rev. Newton Powers, of Erlanger, was the minister in charge.

The Recorder has been informed that the funds for the Burlington street lights have been completely exhausted and that additional money for the lights for the ensuing year must be raised. A meeting for this purpose will be held at the Peoples Bank on Monday evening, January 26th. All who are interested in a continuance of street lights should attend.

Herman Wingate and family were week-end guests of Edward Easton and wife.

Ransom Ryle and family entertained a number of Burlington friends for dinner at their home near Limaburg last Sunday.

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

The Burlington High School basket ball teams broke even with the Piner teams last Friday night January 16th with the Kittens losing to the Piner girls by a score of 27 to 14, and the Tomcats winning from the Piner boys 24 to 10. The Kittens were outclassed in size and by playing on a small court they were not able to get going until the last half which proved to be too late. E. Akin, the smallest running guard in Northern Kentucky, proved that she was high point maker, making 9 of the Kittens 14 points. Armstrong for the Piner girls was their high point maker, making 15 of their 27 points.

The Tom Cats had two new members to join their squad who were not eligible, the first semester David and James Russell Williamson, who proved to be a value to make the team stronger. D. Williamson was high point maker for the Tomcats, making 11 of their 24 points, but James Ogden was so close behind him with 9 points that it made David know that he wasn't the only basket ball player for Tomcats. Ecker, for Piner, was their high point maker, making 4 of their 10 points. Next Friday night January 23, California, known as "Jolly" will play the Tomcats and Kittens here on the local floor. Come out and root for your team.

Marie Snelling was absent four days last week due to a sprained ankle.

Charles Hughes was absent Friday afternoon.

The High School spent Monday morning arranging the schedule for the next semester with few changes.

J. J. Kirkpatrick cleaned the school rooms last week.

"THE ADVENTURES OF GRANDPA"

The first High School play will be given next Wednesday night Jan. 28, at 9:30 p. m., by the Freshmen and Sophomore. Be sure and come prepared for you will laugh from the beginning to the end. This play is a three act comedy with an all star cast including nine characters. The author of this play is Walter Ben Hare Look in the Recorder for ad.

7th and 8th Grade

Edgar Griffin was absent from school Monday.

Several Declamations arrived Monday which are used for a try-out which will decide who is to represent 7th and 8th grades in the county tournament.

Hazel Burton was also absent Monday.

Officials of the Kentucky Central Division of the Texas Louisiana Power Company were in Burlington on Tuesday of this week in conference with Supt., of Schools D. H. Norris. Prof. Norris is endeavoring to have the power company run its lines along the new Feceral Highway to the new Hamilton Consolidated school building so that that structure might be serviced by electric current No definite agreement was reached, although the company officials promised to make a survey of the territory.

Reginald Ryle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Boone Ryle, of Woolper Heights returned home Tuesday of this week from Broken Bow, Nebraska, where he has been for the past several months. He plans to remain in Boone county this summer, he says.

P. E. Bruce, of Belle Flower, Illinois visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Bruce, of near Petersburg, a few days last week. Mr. Bruce made the Recorder a very pleasant visit Tuesday.

E. S. Ryle, of Florence, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Sullivan, Sr., Saturday.

Russell Craddock and family, of Erlanger, and Elmer Bolington were Sunday guests of W W. Craddock and wife.

OVERPRODUCTION ON THE FARM

In some parts of the country farmers have taken seriously the warning of the Feacral Farm Board against overproauction. In other parts they have paid no attention to it, and have sowed more winter wheat than last year.

It will take a long time, before farmers are so well organized and information about crop conditions and production so well understood by all of them, that they will not plant too much. But it is true as anything ever said from a pulpit that the principal trouble with agriculture, insofar as agriculture can do anything about it is that too many farmers are growing too much of the same commodity, not only in America but all over the world.

Chairman Legge of the Farm Board pointed out the other day that Nebraska has cut down the winter wheat acreage twelve per cent. If all of the other wheat-growing regions did the same thing, and kept their spring-sowing down in the same proportion, the result would certainly be vastly larger returns for every wheat grower. But every farmer who plants as much to wheat this year as he did last year is reducing his own income and causing all of the other wheat-growers to olse also. Nobody makes any money on wheat when it is as low as it has been for the past year: everybody would make money on it if there were only half as much of it grown and in the market.

Missouri and Arkansas have some excuse for sowing more winter wheat than a year ago. The drought hit those states harder than it did most of the rest of the wheat country, and much of the winter wheat sown there is for pasturage for livestock. Wheat-feeding to cattle and hogs has proved a very successful and profitable way of using up the surplus. But all of the efforts of the Government to stabilize the production of the staple crops and to organize their marketing on an orderly basis will be futile until all farmers, everywhere, get into the habit of working together toward the same end. And that end is smaller crops of everything with higher prices per unit of production.

Better five dollars per acre profit from a hundred acres than a dollar an acre loss from five hundred acres.

THE UPTURN IS BEGINNING

Reports from all over the country are to the effect that the Christmas trade everywhere was far better than merchants had anticipated, and that stocks of merchandise have been so far sold out that the shelves are practically bare in many sections in every line of goods.

This month in the larger cities the big stores are cashing in with post-holiday bargain sales to clear off the rest of their stocks, and people are buying much more freely than six months ago.

That is the most encouraging sign of the times. It means, of course, that the retailers have got to begin buying right away from the wholesalers, who in turn have got to send their orders to the mills and factories. The wheels will begin to turn more rapidly as soon as this flood of new buying orders is under full headway. Men will go back to work, and in turn will have money to spend.

Unless something unforseen happens we cannot look for an instant return of the old prosperity. It will creep upon us unaware, as it has always done in the past, until some morning, while most of us are still croaking about hard times, everybody will realize at the same moment that the hard times are over. That is what has always happened, and there is no reason to think it won't happen that way this time.

matoes after this date, and a surplus for canning. Similar computations could be made for the rest of the list and the staple part of the garden arrived at. The total lengths of rows has determined will likely be too large to get into the garden at all but it must not be supposed that all of the vegetables occupy the garden at one time. Short-time vegetables may be replaced with later plantings of others. In fact some rows may be used 3 or 4 times in a season, by following what is called "companion" and "succession" planting. By the former is meant the grouping of those vegetables that can be grouped without harm to either; by the latter, replanting spots left vacant, with other vegetables.

So much, for his week. Next week will follow detailed description of methods to conserve garden space.

Hints for the Home

Coffee Roll

Make a dough of three cups of flour, sifted with one teaspoon each of salt and ground mace, and one half cup of sugar Add one cup of milk in which one compressed yeast cake has been blended, and work in one-half cup of softened butter. Knead, let rise in a warm place, roll out to one-fourth inch thick, cut into long strips, and twist these around the outside of a well-greased pan cylindrical in form, joining the strips where necessary by moistening the edges. Let rise again; bake in a moderate oven, and when nearly done brush over with sugar and water and sprinkle the top with fine-chopped almonds, mixed with dry sugar and cinnamon.

Hot Water Sponge Cake

Beat three egg yolks light and add one cup of sugar and continue beating until well mixed. Now add one cup of flour that has been sifted with one teaspoon of baking powder and a quarter teaspoon salt. Add two tablespoons of very hot water then the whites of three eggs beaten stiff and a tablespoon of lemon juice. Bake in patty tins.

Japanese Lemon Pig

Just why Japanese, we don't know. But that is the name of it, and it is the delicious speciality of a friend. Boil together the juice of a small lemon, the grated rind, four tablespoons of water and four of sugar. Cool and add the yolks of three eggs well beaten. Cook in double boiler until creamy, stirring constantly. Beat the egg whites, three of them and beat in three tablespoons of sugar. Fold the hot lemon cream into the sweetened whites. Have ready a baked crust. Pour in the filling and brown in the oven. This makes a nine-inch pie.

Three-fourths of the milk shippers in the Louisville territory will market their milk through the Falls Cities Cooperative Milk Producers' Association.

The county agent and an agricultural engineer from the College of Agriculture assisted in laying out a drainage system on the farm of L. P. Tudor in Madison county.

With 95 per cent of the bulls pure-bred, Elliott county may this year join the list of counties having pure-bred sires only.

The Way of Life

by BRUCE BARTON

WHAT DOES YOUR BUTCHER SAY?

One day last winter I was riding with the gentleman who runs a livery stable and provides food and lodging for my horse. It was some weeks after the stock market unpleasantness

"How is business"? I asked him.

He answered that he had never known it to be worse. "Only a few of our horses are saddle horses," he said. "The others are owned by the butchers and bakers and candlestick makers who supply the fashionable people on Park and Fifth Avenues. And do you know that those little merchants can't collect enough even to pay my oats bills? It is terrible."

A little later I was repeating the conversation to a friend who makes his home in a fashionable suburb. He has ample means but, compared with some of the multi-millionaires whose estates are in the same community, he is comparatively poor.

He told me that he had been protesting mildly to the butcher about the steady increase in his meat bills. "I do not understand," he had said. "We always pay promptly on the first of the month. We do not eat extravagantly, and yet our meat seems to cost us more all the time."

The butcher confesses that the bills were high. He shrugged his shoulders helplessly. "What am I to do? You and the other people of moderate means are the only ones who pay your bills. The rich men on my lists keep me waiting for six months or even a year. Everybody's meat costs more in consequence."

I suppose the percentage of four-flushers in the Park Avenue district and in the New York suburbs is very high. There must be thousands of families struggling to "keep up with the Jonses." But all over the country the same thing occurs to a greater or less degree. It is due not merely to the fact that people are living beyond their means. Much of it is nothing more or less downright thoughtlessness.

I used to be a great believer in reforms. I enrolled in Causes and supported high grade Candidates and was generally loud and vigorous.

In my old age I have come to feel that most of our troubles would be washed away if we would only be just reasonably courteous and decent to one another.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS THE GREAT PHYSICIAN

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Jesus is now well started in the second year of His public ministry and the work centers in Galilee. During the year, following the Temptation. He wrought in Judea. One incident is remembered by all: the conversation with Nicodemus which gives us the great truth in John 3:16. The rejection by His fellow townsmen in Nazareth caused Jesus to make Capernaum the center of activity.

The months that follow cover the period of popular favor. In the language of today, the Nazarene was first page news. This was due in part to the frequency of His miracles. People were alert to see what He would do next.

Simon Peter had been called as a disciple, and later as one of the apostles. As Jesus entered that home in Capernaum He learned that the mother-in-law was bedridden with a prostrating fever. With a word of divine power the almighty spoke her into health which was so complete that this woman could at once assist in the hospitality made necessary by the guests. Likewise salvation and the forgiveness of sins is an act rather than a process. When conditions have been met, Jesus speaks and it is done.

Modern medical missions are prothesied in the marvellous work of the Healer that afternoon. When people learned that the Great Physician was in their midst and was ready to help any, kindly friends hastened to bring the sick of all that community into His presence.

Even the dread disease of leprosy was subject to His word of power. From that miracle Jesus withdrew that He might maintain His spiritual strength through personal prayer unto the Father.

The Family Garden

THE GARDEN CAMPAIGN PART I

(By John S. Gardner, Ky., College of Agriculture)

Gardeners and major generals are alike in this, that both wage campaigns. While it is true that there is less visible bloodshed in the course of a garden campaign, the spirit of warfare is there nevertheless. Gardeners have this advantage over army commanders in that victory is always assured if the campaign is properly planned, and that planning a garden campaign is easy.

First, the size of the garden should be learned. It should be measured and a plat of it made on paper. On this plat the rows should be laid off, preferably in an east and west direction. The width of the rows depends on whether the garden is to be worked by hand or with horse-drawn tools. Thus, the exact capacity of the garden is known, and space for each vegetable may be allotted.

Next, get a seed catalogue, not perhaps with the idea of ordering seed from it, but to have a complete list of the vegetables that a garden should include. In his way, no vegetables will be forgotten, as is the case when putting in a garden is hazardly done. From the seed catalogue select the vegetables it is desired to grow and determine how many times a week they are to be served in their fresh state, and canned or stored or dried, during the winter, and multiply those numbers by the amount that constitutes a serving. Just how much a serving is depends on the individual family, but, assuming that the family consists of five persons for whom a serving is a quart of canned vegetables or the amount of fresh vegetables it takes to can a quart the list that follows will serve as a guide.

Vegetable	Space	Servings
Beans	30 feet	10-12
Tomatoes	20 plants	50
Cabbage	20 heads	20
Carrots	50 feet	30
Beets	50 feet	30
Parsnips	75 feet	50-60
Corn	100 hills	25

If beans are served five times a week, for example, 30 feet plantings should be made every two weeks up to August 1, and the plantings made in June and July should be doubled to assure beans for canning. Early tomatoes will last until September 1; an additional planting should be made about April 1, to furnish to-

FINNEY OF THE FORCE

By F. O. Alexander

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

HEREDITY

Thinking people evolve theories, based on a more or less extensive period of observation; but theories are not always facts. It is a common deduction among people to believe that, because a parent was afflicted with a certain fatal disease, his child or children were in line for the same terrible calamity; and, many distress themselves in this belief.

The fact is, the TENDENCY, not the disease, may be inherited. Human tissue differs in certain families, much as the plants about us differ in individual texture. Certain woods decay quicker than others; this is true of the human structure as well.

Perhaps the most tenable theory today is, that mental disorders are strongly hereditary. Within a certain limitation this seems to be true; yet, it does not always prove out that insanity is positively hereditary; I have known several instances where parents that died insane, left children of brilliant and lasting mentality. Dear Reader, if you have had the regrettable fact of an insanity among your immediate ancestors or near relatives, the very best thing for you to do is, forget it right now. In other words, you may work an unspeakable harm to your own sensitive nervous system, by torturing yourself constantly with the thought of when you must in all liklihood, go the same way.

Your tendency, if any, can be overcome by self-discipline. Do not over-tax a delicate nerve structure. Your nervous system will last for full time, if you do not urge it beyond its strength to bear. The sheet on which I am writing may outlast the strongest sale-leather, if it is taken care of for what it will stand.

The overcoming of tendency is possible always. Keep away from the causes of break-down, whether it be body or mind. Worry is one of the most potent causes of insanity. The man with a "tendency" mustn't worry—remember that, and, live out your full expectation.

PLAN FOR LARGE ATTENDANCE AT FARM CONVENTION

Alexander Legge of Federal Farm Board Among Speakers at Lexington Meeting

The University of Kentucky at Lexington is arranging for a large attendance at the 19th annual Farm and Home Convention to be held at the Experiment Station Jan. 27-30, inclusive. Alexander Legge, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, will be one of the speakers.

Separate sessions will be held throughout the four days for farmers and farm homemakers, while breeders' associations, bee-keepers, veterinarians, seed growers and other organizations will meet during the week.

Alexander Legge will speak the opening day. Another prominent speaker that day will be Ralph Sams, manager of the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank at Louisville. Livestock problems will be among the subjects discussed the first day.

A feature of the second day will be talks by eight Master Farmers. Miss Elizabeth Dyer, of the University of Cincinnati, will address a combined session of men and women Wednesday morning.

Dr. Frank L. McVey, president of the University of Kentucky, and Dr. O. E. Reed, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture are among the speakers on Thursday, Jan. 29. The subject of dairying will feature the program.

Dr. C. J. Galpin of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and R. R. Giltner and Charles M. Meacham, Jr., prominent Kentucky farmers, will speak Friday.

FIVE WOMEN NAMED MASTER HOMEMAKERS

In recognition of their work in their homes and communities, five women will receive the title of Master Homemaker during the 19th annual Farm and Home Convention at the Experiment Station, University of Kentucky, January 30th.

They are Mrs. Lydia S. Lynch, of Lexington; Mrs. Ed. C. Ray, of Mayfield; Mrs. Morgan Davidson, of Fulton; Mrs. P. M. Reese, Hopkinsville, and Mrs. S. C. McConnell, Danville.

This is the fourth year that homemakers have been so recognized in Kentucky, through the cooperation of The Farmer's Wife, national farm women's magazine of St. Paul, Minn., in cooperation with the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

That these women have not confined themselves to housekeeping, but have engaged in homemaking in its broader aspects, is proved by the testimony of the women who nominated them, by their own answers to more than 500 questions, and by the type of homes and families the judging committee found in visiting them.

Mrs. Lynch has continued successfully to operate her farm for five years following the death of her husband. Mrs. Ray is planning to educate her five children, is active in community affairs, and owns a profitable flock of poultry. Mrs. Davidson has sent her two children college, is active in community affairs, and maintains a well balanced program of home and community work.

Mrs. Reese has satisfied her ambition to see her children educated and established in business, and herself possesses a modern farm plant free from debt. She continues to make $800 or more a year from her poultry and dairy products. Mrs. McConnell, a native of Ireland, likes the farm so well that she is determined to make it so attractive that her children will not want to leave it for other business.

The address by the Hon. Alexander Legge, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, is expected to attract one of the largest crowds ever assembled at a farm meeting in Kentucky. This is the second year that a prominent member of this famous board has appeared on this program. James C. Stone, noted Kentuckian, and vice-chairman of the board, spoke last year. Mr. Legge will speak at 11 o'clock, Tuesday, Jan. 27. The homemakers will adjourn their special session to hear Mr. Legge.

As a result of several meetings to encourage fruit growing it is estimated that 100 acres of strawberry plants will be set in Pulaski county this spring.

126 ATTEND BUSINESS FARMING CONFERENCE

The organization of farms on a basis of enterprise and combination of enterprises calculated to give the best net returns was the central theme of a business conference attended by 125 to 150 farmers at North Middletown in Bourbon county.

Dr. V. B. Hart of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and Dr. H. B. Price and Z. L. Galloway of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, discussed 1931 farming prospects, and Dr. W. D. Nicholls discussed the data obtained in a business survey of 64 Bourbon county farms.

The 64 farms surveyed contained an average of 539 acres, with investments averaging $38,477. Receipts in 1929 averaged $11,577, and expenses $6,350, leaving an average income over expenses of $5,227. After allowing 5 per cent interest on the investment, the average net income per farm was $803. The farmers received in addition to this amount, produce, house rent and other items of living valued at $1,053, making their net earnings for the year $1,856.

The 10 best farmers received an average of $6,20 above expenses and 5 per cent interest, this sum including garden, dairy and other food, house rent, etc., while the poorest 10 farmers failed to pay interest on their investment.

The farms surveyed were representative livestock and tobacco farms found in Bourbon, Clark, Montgomery and other central counties.

Pretty Name for Room

A sitting room in the early days was known as the keeping room, because the family treasures were kept there.

Won't Stand Storage

Bulbs that become dried out or overheated in storage produce plants that go "blind," that is, they never flower.

Summing It Up

Always there is a black spot in our sunshine, it is the shadow of ourselves.

Six dairy cattle feeding schools held in Calloway county were attended by 110 farmers.

Fur From Karakul Sheep

Karakul sheep are the source of three kinds of fur, known commercially as caracul, broadtail and persian.

Advice to Cotton Growers

Thickly planted cotton is recommended on all soils by Arkansas experiment station officials.

Rheumatism So Bad He Walked the Floor in Pain

"Karnak has done me such a wonderful amount of good that I believe every rheumatic sufferer should give it a trial.

"No one will ever know the tortures I have gone through with rheumatism during the past two years. I ached all over, and the pains were so great that I walked the floor, and I even got out in the middle of the night to go to the doctor for a drink. I tried every thing in an effort to get relief. Even serum treatments failed to help me. My relief finally came when a friend advised me to try Karnak. To my surprise this medicine went right to the roots of my trouble, and brought complete relief. Every ache and pain has disappeared, and I am now in condition to resume active duties once more, thanks to Karnak."

DOUBLE VICTORY SCORED BY BAPTISTS LAST WEEK

Just by way of doing a complete about-face the Burlington Baptists chalked up a double victory last Saturday instead of a double loss, as on the previous week end. In the afternoon game at Covington they pulled a thriller from the fire when Lamb sank a long field goal in the last few seconds of play with the score tied. The final score was 21-19. The Ludlow Christians were the opponents. Lamb was high point man with 12 points, though his supporting caste played bang-up ball to assist in the victory. Ray Rickman, running guard, was unable to play on account of detention at work in Cincinnati.

In the evening game at home the Baptists surprised their supporters by handing a severe lacing to the Independence five by the score of 38 to 15. This was by far the "biggest" basket ball team that has opposed the locals this season, but the home boys showed enough fast floor work and sharp-shooting ability to overcome the size of their opponents. Robert Utz and Frank Maurer, who seems to have regained his eye for the rim, tied for offensive honors when they sank the leather for a total of seventeen points each.

The Baptists will play the Erlanger Christians at Covington on Saturday afternoon of this week at 3:00 o'clock (slow time), the bus leaving at 1:45, as on last Saturday. The game here with the Indians Thursday night will be the last chance to see the Baptists play at home for the next several weeks, as all Covington games are scheduled for later hours. So, fans, follow the boys to Covington each week for a change.

In the afternoon the fast Petersburg High School five swamped the second team 23 to 5. Ralph Bradburn was high point man for the visitors with 8, while Arthur Maurer made 4 of the second team's five markers.

The Sixth Congressional District of Ky. P. T. A. will be entertained by the Alexandria P. T. A. on Friday Jan. 30th, at the school building. The meeting will start at 10 o'clock fast time. Mrs. Geo. Weaver, President of the District will open the meeting with salute to the flag. Song America by the audience. Welcome address by Mr. H. M. Wesley; song by the children of the school; Business meeting: Report from the District Chairman. District Historian Mrs W V. Mrs. Jennie Jones, aged 41 years, passed away Wednesday at Booth Memorial Hospital, Covington, following a major operation. Funeral services were conducted at the Florence Christian church Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock by the Rev. H. C. Runyan, pastor, assisted by Rev. Simmerman, of Hughes Chapel, in the presence of a concourse of relatives and friends that filled the church to overflowing, after which the remains were taken to Hopeful cemetery for interment.

Mrs. Jones is survived by her husband Harmon H. Jones, one daughter Virginia, and three sons, her mother, Mrs. John Aylor and two sisters besides a great host of other relatives and friends to mourn her untime end.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

MRS. WILLIAM AFTERKIRK

Mrs. William Afterkirk, aged 27 years, passed away Saturday evening after a short illness. Funeral services were conducted at the Elsmere Baptist church Tuesday at 2 p. m., by Rev. Johnson, after which the remains were taken to Hopeful cemetery for interment.

Mrs. Afterkirk is survived by her husband, a three week's old infant, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Allen, and several brothers and sisters, besides a host of other friends and relatives.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

GEO. EDWARD BRICKING

Geo. Edward Bricking, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bricking, passed away at the home of his parents on Rosebud Ave., Erlanger, Ky. After a short service Tuesday morning the remains were taken to St. Mary's cemetery for interment.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro hda charge of the funeral arrangements.

MISS EFFIE ASHCRAFT

Miss Effie Asheraft, aged 28 years, nurse at the Branch Hospital, Cincinnati, was shot and killed Monday afternoon by a rejected admirer, who then turned the gun on himself and ended his life.

The remains were removed to the Taliaferro Funeral Home in Erlanger, from which establishment services were held Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, interment following in Hamilton, Ohio, cemetery.

Miss Effie is survived ly her parents and one brother.

ALEXANDER BUCKNER

Alexander Buckner, aged 80 years, passed away Sunday at his home in Seattle Washington. The remains arrived in Cincinnati Wednesday afternoon and were taken to the home of his sister Miss Alice Buckner, Erlanger Road, Erlanger, Ky., where services were held Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock by the Rev. R. D. Martin, pastor of the Erlanger Baptist church, interment following in Highland cemetery.

The pall-bearers were Harry Buckner, Brent Spence, James Fisher, H. F. Childress, Alex. Sandford and Robert Squair.

Mr. Buckner is survived by two sons Dr. H. T. Buckner and Almar Buckner and one daughter Mrs. Jos. Sullivan, all of Seattle Washington besides one brother H. G. Buckner, and one sister Miss Alice Buckner, both of Erlanger.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

CHAS. W. GURNEY

Chas. W. Gurney, aged 50 years, passed away Saturday morning at his home Commonwealth Ave., Erlanger, after a short illness.

Funeral services were conducted at the Taliaferro Funeral Home Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock by R. D. Martin, pastor of the Erlanger

TWO DEFEATS

HANDED OUT TO LOCAL TEAMS BY FIRST AMERICAN (INDIANS) IN GAMES HERE LAST WEEK—PLAY TO CAPACITY HOUSES BOTH NIGHTS

Just to demonstrate that they were thoroughly modern a band of Indians swooped down upon our peaceful little community last Thursday, but only after having previously announced their coming. They proved that they were modern by making the announcement, though they reverted to ancient and uncivilized customs by "taking the scalps" of two local basket ball teams ere they departed from our community.

On Thursday night they hooked up with the Baptists and took off a victory by a 26-21 score after a rather stubborn resistance from the locals. For a time early in the first quarter the locals led 8-4, but the redskins left the floor at the half leading 10 to 8. In the second half, however, they came back with some of the fastest dribbling from their two crack guards, Kinsel and Legah, that ever has been witnessed here and drew away with a comfortable margin. Red Fox, a forward, who was substituting at center for Haynes, executed one of the most scintillating shots in this game that it ever has been he pleasure of the writer to witness when he slipped an overhead flip straight thru the net from the extreme corner of the floor. Teehee and Young Eagle also displayed some very fast and beautiful work.

Also Defeat Petersburg

On Friday night the Aurora Ind., team cancelled a game with the First Americans so that it became necessary for them to search in other fields for a game. The Petersburg five earlier in the week had evidenced a willingness to lock horns with the Indians, but, as they had no floor, it was at first thought to be impossible to book hem. However, local school authorities consented to allow the two teams the privilege of the home floor immediately following the high school games here that evening, which was gladly accepted by both fives. A free will offering was taken up for the redskin team, as they did not participate in the regular receipts.

The result of the game was approximately the same as that of the Burlington game, the score being 25-19. A sad incident occurred in this game when Deck, of Petersburg, collided with Klopp, of the same team driving Deck's head into the stage. He was assisted to the sidelines, where he was given first aid and the game went on. A few minutes later, however, it was noted that he had lapsed into unconsciousness. The game was stopped while he was taken out of the gym and revived after several minutes. He was able to leave Burlington after the close of the game.

Indians Lose Center

The effectiveness of the Indian five was greatly impaired by the loss of the crack center, Hook Haynes, who left the team to enter Haskell University just before the local game. As their entire offensive had been built around this gigantic center they appeared all at sea without his services. No doubt the two Boone county fives were fortunate to come as close as they did.

The Indian boys proved to be a very affable bunch and the Burlington community will be pleased to welcome them on another visit, which they have promised to make. From here they went to Dillsboro, where they played on Saturday nite. Conflicting reports have come from that town as to the result, Dillsboro claiming a victory by 35-34, while a letter from one of the Indian boys announces that they won by 35-33, with two regulars out of the line-up and a white lad, a new man, in the line-up. The latter, who was recommended by the local management, was "Brit" Monroe, of Erlanger, who accompanied the Indians and who still was with them at last reports.

The two largest crowds ever to jam the local gym atended the Thursday night game, while one comparatively as great was there on the following evening.

LOCAL TALENT ON AIR

Winfield Waters, nine year old fiddlin' marvel of Limaburg, this county, will display his wares on the air at 12:30 (fast time) next Saturday night. The broadcast will come from Station WKRC, Cincinnati, and will be the first effort of this lad on the radio. Boone county folks are thoroughly familiar with the merits of this boy and no doubt will be "tuned in" in great numbers to hear him. The editor of the Recorder was instrumental in getting this youngster "on the air" and joins his host of admirers in hoping that he makes good.

REV. RUNYAN

TO OBSERVE 29TH ANNIVERSARY AT LATONIA SUNDAY—CONGREGATION HAS GROWN FROM 22 TO 1200 UNDER HIS MINISTRY

Rev. Harlan C. Runyan, pastor of the Latonia Christian church, will celebrate his twenty-ninth anniversary as the head of that institution with his next Sunday's service.

Very few ministers of the gospel enjoy such prestige in the community in which they have lived and worked twenty-nine years as does Rev. Runyan. This congregation has made a truly wonderful record during the years that Rev. Runyan has served them. Since the day he took charge twenty-nine years ago the membership has grown from a meagre 22 to more than 1200, and from a mission church to a strong congregation.

One of their aims for next Sunday is 1,000 in the Bible School, 1200 in church and 29 new members, significant of the number of years that Rev. Runyan has been their pastor.

The day's program includes the Bible School rally at 9 a. m. Sermon by the pastor at 10:30 a. m., and "Experiences of 29 Years" at 7:30 p. m.

Rev. Runyan has a wide circle of friends and admirers in Boone county, many of whom probably will attend the anniversary Sunday at Latonia.

EXAMINERS

FIND PEOPLES DEPOSIT BANK IN THRIFTY CONDITION — SMALL OVERDRAFTS, NO PAST DUE PAPER AND AMPLE CASH RESERVE IS FOUND BY STATE OFFICIALS

Two Bank Examiners visited the Peoples Deposit Bank last Wednesday, the first time since last January, and spent the entire day going over the business of the bank.

They found overdrafts to be less than $50.00, no paper past due longer than 30 days that was not in process of collection through settlement of estates, no borrowed money, ample cash reserve, a good list of liquid marketable securities, and every account in balance to the cent.

The officers were complimented upon the sound condition in which they found the business of the bank.

LEGION NOTES

Boone Post No. 4, American Legion at its last regular meeting made some plans to have an open meeting on the first Monday night in February for the public, and intended to have the State Commander and other State Officers of the Legion present at this meeting, but it will be impossible to have the State officers present and we will not be able to have the open meeting at this time, but we will be able to procure the services of these State officers some time in the early Spring and will have a meeting for the public at that time.

All members of this Post are requested to be present at the regular meeting next Monday night, February 2nd, 1931.

INDIANS AT CRESCENT SPRINGS

The First American (Indian) Basket Ball Club will play Crescent Springs at Crescent Springs on Saturday night of this week. The Indians have made a loop thru Southeastern Indiana during the past week and welcomed the opportunity to return to Northern Ky., where they spent such an enjoyable visit last week. They have lost but one game since leaving here and that to Greensburg, Indiana. Prof. J. A. Caywood cordially invites his Boone co. friends to attend this game.

Earl Smith and two sons are on the sick list.

FARM BUREAU

HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS HERE TUESDAY—L. A. CONNER RE-ELECTED MANAGER AT BURLINGTON, WHILE MARK COOK SUCCEEDS CHESTER L. TANNER AT FLORENCE

Members of the Boone Co. Farm Bureau met here Tuesday and enjoyed a very enthusiastic meeting. Lunch was served to members and friends at noon at the local Farm Bureau building.

At the annual meeting of the members the same directors were re-elected, while L. A. Conner was again selected as the manager of the Burlington branch. Mark Cook was elected to succeed Chester L. Tanner as manager of the Florence branch.

Prof. Nugent of the State Department of Agriculture made a very interesting speech to the members at the afternoon session.

Walter Ferguson, and very interesting family, of Union, were in the county seat the latter part of last week. They came to the Recorder office for a short call and subscribed for the "old sheet" while here. Mr. Ferguson, better known as "Fergie," was a star foot ball player in his college days at St. Xavier and Kentucky and his feats on the gridiron long will be remembered by followers of these two teams. Incidentally he was a member of the U. K. team when they registered their last defeat over the Crimson Tide of Alabama. Perhaps Coach Gammage had better recall him.

L. S. Beemon, who is in his nineties, made the Recorder office a very pleasant call on Tuesday of this week when he dropped in to discontinue his paper. Mr. Beemon has been a subscriber of the Recorder since its founding in 1875, but his sight has failed him in his declining years and of course the old paper is of no more benefit to him.

PLAYED HERE LAST WEEK

Sam Legah, of Fort Defiance, Arizona, the former great all around athlete of the Alberquerque Indian School. He was the New Mexico All State guard for two years, 1928-1929. He was chosen captain of the All-State team in 1928. He was also end on the New Mexico All State football team. He is a full blood Navajo Indian.

S. J. Robbins, of Florence, and John Batchelor, of near Burlington, were pleasant callers in our sanctum Wednesday morning.

RED CROSS

MAKES PLEA FOR LOCAL CONTRIBUTIONS IN NATION-WIDE DRIVE FOR DROUTH RELIEF

No doubt most of the owners of Radios in Boone county heard the nation wide appeal for the $10,000,000 Red Cross Fund for the relief of suffering from drought and unemployment. President Hoover said in his address that situations of this sort had always been covered by voluntary contributions, and he was sure the heart of the American people would respond adequately this time.

If you have any money you wish to give toward this fund send it to the Peoples Deposit Bank, Burlington and it will be forwarded to National Headquarters at Washington, and Boone County, Ky., will get the credit.

As far as Boone county herself is concerned when we were in conference in the fall with representatives from National Red Cross we came to the conclusion that as the rains came in time to help the late pastures and make the late gardens boom, that we would try to take care of our own needy. Mr. A. B. Renaker is Chairman of the local committee and has appointed a helper in each precinct, and it is to them that application must be made for aid. Dr. A. C. McCormack did not know of this fact when he sent his letters to the local registrars, so his letters will have to be ignored. In our November Roll Call we only got 180 members. $90 of this goes to National Red Cross and how far will that go toward Disaster Relief?

CORN BORER

THREATENS LOCAL FARMERS WHO IMPORT GRAIN ON COB FROM INDIANA AND OHIO—NO DANGER IN SHELL CORN IT IS SAID

Prof. W. A. Price, state entomologist at the Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky, has appealed to farmers to burn the cobs of corn purchased in Indiana and Ohio in order to forestall the possibility of introducing the corn borer into Kentucky.

According to information received by the state entomologist, considerable corn has been trucked into Kentucky, especially into the northern counties. It is beheved that some of this corn came directly from regions in Indiana and Ohio infested by the corn borer. Since the worm passes the winter in the cob and stalk, the burning of cobs where ear corn has been purchased is the only way to be certain that this destructive pest will not be turned loose in the state next spring.

Prof. Price has appealed to the federal government to strengthen its quarantine in Indiana and Ohio and to place guards at Ohio River bridges and ferries to prevent ear corn crossing into Kentucky.

County agents have been active in endeavoring to keep out ear corn from Ohio and Indiana. There is no danger from shelled corn, since the corn borer winters in the cobs and stalks.

TAX LIST IN ERROR

The delinquent tax list was printed this week before Sheriff Snyder had an opportunity to strike the names of those who had settled during the past week. Consequently there are some 28 or more names published this week whose property will not be sold next Monday for delinquency.

F. I. Conrad, who owns a large farm on the East Bend road near Burlington, is planning a sale of farm personal property, which will be announced in our next issue.

Friends and relatives of Cave Clore will regret to learn that he passed away Monday at his home a few miles south of Burlington.

The Recorder is late this week due to the fact that there was no electric power Wednesday afternoon.

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

The Burlington High School Tomcats and Kittens broke even last Friday night with the California basket ball teams representing Jolly Memorial High School. The Kittens lost their game by two points, but both teams were equally matched, and it was a fight from the beginning to the end. Good guarding by both teams is what made this game so close, but as luck would have it one of the California girls made an unconscious shot and the ball went through the basket, making the score two points ahead. When the final whistle blew the score was California 16, Kittens 14 The Tomcats won their second straight victory by nosing the California boys by a score that was not too much to brag about, and one that was not too close to worry over. Good guarding by both of these teams was the main event of the evening. In the first half of the game the Tomcats were able to get but ten points while the California boys made 6. In the last half the Tomcats did not go over their ten point mark but the California boys were fortunate enough to make 9 points. When the final whistle blew the score was Tomcats 20, California 15 Next Friday night Jan. 30th, you will find the Tomcats and Kittens on the Dry Ridge floor where they will challenge the High School teams of Dry Ridge for two games. As you know in the early part of the season these two teams met, the Kittens winning by one point and the Tomcats losing to them by a big score. As both teams have strengthened these should be two good games So lets all go.

A surprise Chapel program will be given Friday afternoon Jan. 30. Everybody welcome.

We are glad to have James Vice back with us after a week's absence.

Elmer Aylor was absent from school Monday.

Mary Phillips and George Cook also were absent Monday.

The school cistern had a large amount of water put in it last week which was a life saver.

We enjoyed a visit from two Indians last Thursday afternoon.

7th and 8th Grades

We are preparing for our program which is to be given about the middle of February.

A program was given by the Lincoln Society Wednesday morning.

Wilford Fleek and Joseph Rouse were absent Monday.

5th and 6th Grades

Kathryn Sebree is back in school after a week's absence, due to chicken-pox

The 5th and 6th grades have finished their reading book and have purchased a new Story Hour Readers for immediate use.

Mr. Norris gave an Arithmetic test to the 5th and 6th grades Friday. This test will be a county-wide test.

All pupils are busy this week with monthly examinations.

County School Supt., D. H. Norris reports that the school board received some very gratifying encouragement from representatives of the Kentucky Central Electric Company relative to the construction of an electric line to the new consolidated school at Hamilton, when they met at Burlington last week. It appears highly probable that the service may reach that entire community if the citizens will cooperate in the movement. A definite report will be made within two weeks.

There will be an Old Time Dance given at the Hebron Hall on Wednesday evening, Feb. 4th. Everyone invited.

Uncle Ed. Rice, who still is on the sick list, is holding his own.

DIG THE NICARAGUA CANAL

There could be no better time than the present to begin the work of constructing a canal across Nicaragua, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. It would provide work at good pay for tens of thousands of workers for years to come, and it would benefit every part of the United States.

The Panama Canal has proved a great success. It is earning more than its upkeep, and in time will have repaid its cost. But it is already being used almost to capacity and shipping men are wondering how long it will be before it is inadequate. Some people are talking of a plan to dig the Panama Canal deeper, to make it a sea-level passageway. But that would take as much time as to build a new canal across Nicaragua, and would cost as much money.

Under a treaty between the two nations, the United Staes and Nicaragua, ratified in 1916, we have the perpetual right to construct the Nicaragua canal and to operate it, as well as to fortify its approach. Army engineers who have been surveying the route have finished their task and will shortly make a report which will indicate that it is entirely feasible. As soon as that report is in its hands, Congress should authorize the beginning of construction.

The Nicaragua Canal will be 350 miles shorter—a whole day's steaming—than the Panama route between New York and Pacific ports. It will save 5550 miles and two days time between New Orleans and Los Angeles. It will further reduce the cost of transporting passengers and merchandise between our two coasts, and will expedite the transfer of our naval forces from one ocean to another in case of war. Moreover, it will bring the five Central American republics into closer touch with the United States and thereby tend to remove much of the ill-feeling, born of ignorance, which exists toward us in those regions.

Those are some of the arguments in favor of the Nicaragua Canal. We cannot at the moment think of a good argument against it.

The Family Garden

THE GARDEN CAMPAIGN
Part II

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture)

Last week we touched on "companion" and "succession" planting. the methods for conserving garden space, and, at the same time garden labor. All that is meant by companion planting is grouping short season vegetables with those that take a longer time to mature but that do not need their entire allotted space in the beginning. Examples are lettuce with cabbage; radishes and early greens with carrots or beets; bunch onions with mature onions. By succession planting is meant the immediate replanting of a row that has been harvested, preferably with a vegetable that is of another botanical family, for this reduces the danger of disease accumulation. Examples are late cabbage after spinach; beans after early peas; late greens after early potatoes. An example that partakes of both companion and succession planting is setting early tomatoes in the rows of early peas; the peas will be done before the tomatoes even begin to need the space. It should be kept in mind that when each new planting is made the ground be fertilized. This will be described in a later article.

It is obvious that in order properly to group the crops the length of time they occupy the garden should be known. Any gardener who has kept studying his garden will have a general idea, but, for the benefit of those persons who have perhaps not kept records, the following list is submitted:

Beets—30-60 days.
Beans—50-70 days.
Carrots—50-70 days.
Peas—40-60 days.
Tomatoes—80 days.
Peppers—All Season.
Early Cabbage—90-120 days.
Early potatoes—120-150 days.
Corn—50-60 days.
Radishes—25-40 days.
Lettuce—30-40 days.
Lettuce—30-40 days.
Early greens—40-50 days.
Parsnips—All season.
Late greens—From Aug. 1, on.

Thus beans planted April 2 on should be gone by June 30; the ground could be used for late beets. Peas planted April 1 could be succeeded by late beans June 1, and so on.

The other way to save garden space. "companion" planting, includes sowing rows of early greens or radishes between early cabbage, to come out before the cabbage needs the space. Another example is sowing radish seed mixed with that for parsnips and salsify, the slow-growing parsnips are not affected by the competition from the radishes. That is to say, the number of "succession" and "companion" planting schemes is endless, in the hands of a studious gardener. So much, for space saving schemes.

Next week will be given the tables, in length of garden row, of a complete variety of vegetables, to assure a family of five at least twenty servings a week of fresh vegetables in season, and at least twelve servings a week of canned, stored or otherwise preserved vegetables, during the season in which fresh vegetables cannot be had.

Producing 779 pounds of butter fat and 13,745 pounds of milk in a year, a purebred cow owned by T. A. Jones in Calloway county has set a new senior 4-year-old Jersey record for Kentucky. Her butterfat production is equal to 974 pounds of butter. She produced 80 pounds of butterfat in her best month, and during the year averaged more than 50 pounds a month. Her record supercedes one made by a cow owned by J. C. Askew in Todd county. The test was supervised by the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

NORTHERN KENTUCKY DAIRYMEN HOLD MEETING

The Northern Kentucky Dairy Herd Improvement Association consisting of dairymen from Boone, Kenton and Campbell counties were scheduled to hold their annual improvement association organization meeting at the Farm Bureau in Florence Tuesday afternoon January the 20th at 1:00 p. m. Mr. Ted Besh, field agent in dairying from the College of Agriculture will be present to assist in the meeting.

Both new and old members feel the importance of dairy herd improvement association work as a sound economic basis for increasing the dairy profits thru efficient feeding breeding, culling management practices.

COMPLETE FARM ACCOUNT RECORDS

Mr. R. E. Proctor, field agent in Farm Management from the College of Agriculture will be in Boone county on Friday and Saturday, January 30th and 31st to assist farmers who kept complete farm account records during 1930 to summarize and make an analysis of their farm management problems.

All farmers who are interested in keeping complete farm account records for 1931 will be furnished farm account books and help in keeping the farm account book all free of charge provided they get in touch with county agent H. R. Forkner at Burlington before January 30. Complete farm account records are highly important in finding the strong and weak points in the farm business.

FARM BUREAU PLANS FOR ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Boone county Farm Bureau will be held at Burlington, Tuesday, January 27th. A special morning and afternoon program that will be of interest to all attending has been planned. A free lunch will be served at noon.

The program will include discussions by Mr. N. B. Nugent, executive secretary of the State Farm Bureau, a representative from the College of Agriculture and reports from the county Farm Bureau. Directors, officers and managers of the activities for 1931 will also be elected at this time.

All farmers of the county and others who are interested in Farm Bureau work are cordially invited to attend the above meeting.

KENTUCKY FARM RADIO PROGRAM

The College of Agriculture will broadcast the following farm radio program from the University of Kentucky extension studios of WHAS the week of January 26. Each program will begin at 2:45, central standard time.

January 26—What farmers are going to sow for pasture in 1931.—Ralph Kenney.

Glass and glass substitutes—Howard Matson.

Burley tobacco market—Mr. L. C. Brewer.

January 28—A Master Farmer looks at the College of Agriculture—John C. Robinson, Danville, Ky.

How farming appeals to me—Geo W. Davis, Owenton, Ky.

Burley tobacco market—L. C. Brewer.

January 30—What farm folks are asking—L. C. Brewer.

Burley tobacco market—Mr. L. C. Brewer.

One hundred farmers living in the vicinity of Beaver Dam in Ohio county have organized a strawberry growing and marketing association.

Edwin Burton of Warren county reports receipts from eggs of $87 more than the cost of feed, from a flock of 252 hens in a month.

The Way of Life

By BRUCE BARTON

TRYING TO GET MORE THAN THERE IS

This is the story of two men who are now about forty-five years old.

They graduated in the same class at college. One of them came to New York and took the first job he could get, which happened to be in the stock room of a large corporation. He lived in an attic, did his own washing, and fought tooth and nail. After a while, as the business grew, and older men dropped out, he was promoted, until he is now a vice-president. He has a home in the suburbs, and a fine family, and is accumulating a comfortable fortune.

The other young man was equally attractive and talented, but he had a different idea.

Said he: "I'm not going to be tied down. Why waste the best years of life in a stuffy office? I'll wander around and see the world while I am young; there will be plenty of time for work later on.'

Well, he has wandered around the world. He has been to interesting places, had romantic adventures, met unusual people. Now he is thru with his travels, and at forty-five wants to settle down.

But though the other man has tried to help him, it is almost impossible. He knows no trade, has mastered no tools, has no business experience to offer. He is out of life, and he can't get in.

He thinks that Fate has played him a mean trick. He envies the success of his friend, and he is tending to grow bitter.

All of which suggests that much of the trouble in human affairs comes from trying to beat the game—from trying to get out of life more than there is in it.

"The gods," said Emerson, "sell everything to men at a fair price."

They sell business success, but the price is several tough years of work.

They sell pleasure and adventure, but the price of these is also measured in years.

They sell the thrill of speculation but the price is that few win and many lose; and even the winners often sacrifice their nervous systems and their health.

They sell family life; and they sell divorce.

Any man may choose the thing that he wants to buy, but no man may choose them all.

And whoever makes his choice and then wakes up to regret that he did not choose otherwise—is in tough luck. We can be sorry for him, but we can not do much to help.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS, THE WORLD'S TEACHER
Luke 6,27-42

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

A new term had been used when Jesus proclaimed the Kingdom of God. He set forth the principles of that Kingdom in all of His addresses but especially in the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew 5,6; 7. It is thought that this great message was repeated in briefer statements in the Sermon on the Plain, from which this lesson study is taken. Give careful attention to all the items in Luke 6 for they have much to say about daily living.

Listeners must have been amazed at the nature of the teaching. In the past they had been urged to take an "eye for an eye" and if strength permitted, they would probably seek to give back with added interest when an injury had been done. Now this Positivist says "love your enemies." Such direction must have caused about as much amazement as the miracles which held the people spellbound. In fact no limit is set upon the kindly attitude and active help for all who had sought to injure them. After doing all they could, they were advised to "pray for them that despitefully use you." What we call charity was to be dispensed with real kindness. Such teachings have an application today as we are importuned by the needy and worthy who are hungry because of lack of employment.

Some profound truths are hard to understand. Jesus, however, made His meaning very clear in our Golden Text. We call it the Golden Rule. Note that it is positively stated and not in a negative form as presented by the philosopher Confucius. AS YE WOULD THAT MEN SHOULD DO TO YOU, DO YE ALSO TO THEM LIKEWISE.

Twenty Clark county farmers will keep farm accounts this year, in cooperation with the county agent and the College of Agriculture.

Ohio county farmers have organized a cooperative association to ship strawberries, which will be grown on an extensive scale this year.

The raspberry growers' cooperative association in Boyle county is planning to increase the acreage in the Mitchellsburg and Junction City communities.

Five hundred Russell county farm boys and girls will be organized into 20 junior 4-H clubs.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

MORE "HEART DISEASE"

The waves of this turbulent sea appears more appalling from day to day; "heart disease" has become the prevailing guess on sudden deaths. This very morning the paper from out our neighboring big city announces three deaths, all heart disease, or a "heart attack." Again let me remind my reader, it is time to think.

None of these deaths were over than fifty-five years old. That's too young for a man to die; it is the age for men to have their very best minds—from fifty to sixty.

Prevention is the sheet anchor in heart disorders, for cure is too often attempted when it is too late to do anything. And, now listen! An important organ, as the heart, is never becomes diseased without giving ample warning that something is wrong.

I wish I could make every one of my readers understand that, the SIX O'CLOCK DINNER is one of the surest and most deadly enemies of the heart. It works insidiously, the victim being for the most part ignorant of its depredations. A heavy meal eaten at the end of the busy tiresome day, is sure to be absorbed and taken into the circulation improperly tempered with digestive fluids—it goes through the body—heart-muscle included—utterly unfitted for its purpose; the tired body at six o'clock includes a tired stomach as well—with not enough gastric juices to properly prepare the food for its appropriation to the human need.

Excess of undigested protein will, in time, undermine the nutritive processes in the muscular system—and the heart is often the first muscle to fail. If I did not have technical evidence of the truth of what I say here, I would not offer this important advice: Cut out the six o'clock dinner today, and keep it out of your home. Make the good breakfast, the good noon meal and the light evening meal your habit. Abolish "heart disease" as a cause of death.

COUNT YOUR CHICKS BEFORE THEY HATCH

Count chicks before they hatch, says the poultry department of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. That is the only way to know the number of eggs to set, and the number of hens to put into the breeding pen.

In order to improve the flock, a pen of good hens should be selected to produce hatching eggs. They should be hens with vigor and vitality, and thrifty and of good conformation, and above all good layers. They should be penned to themselves and properly fed.

In Fact, He Won't Tell a Soul

From Our Early Files

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Edgar Berkshire, residing two miles out on the Belleview pike, has been having quite a serious time with rheumatism.

Dr. E. W. Duncan is recovering from a severe attack of grippe. Dr. Jones, of Walton, made him a professional visit Saturday.

M. F. Wingate, candidate for Sheriff, was a guest of W. J. Rice Sunday night. He was out early Monday morning hunting the voters.

Miss Laura Clore, the handsome daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clore, who lives about three miles out on the East Bend road, and Lonnie Clore, a prosperous young farmer of the Waterloo neighborhood will wed today.

Elmo Gaines, candidate for Assessor passed through town Monday morning, on a coon hunt for the nomination.

Idlewild

The smoke curled from James Brown's "stone front" a little higher than usual Thursday morning on account of his selling his tobacco the day previous, to Thompson & Wingate at 7 cents a pound. The highest price of the season.

James T. Gaines went to the Stock Yards Tuesday to purchase cattle.

John W. Gaines has sold out to Clinton Gaines and will move in the spring to his farm on Woolper.

Union

Mrs. L. H. Voshell is improving.

Misses Ella Norman and Marie Riley had to close their schools for a few days—both have grippe.

Mrs. Betsy Marshall died last week after a long and painful illness.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Patrick Burk, an old citizen of this place, died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. James Walsh, 79 Carlisle Avenue, Cincinnati, O., on the 15th inst., at 9:20 p. m. The deceased was a native of Ireland, and never had taken out his naturalization papers. He was a kind hearted and inoffensive old man, wishing everybody all good and no bad luck. He leaves two children, a son who resides at this place and a daughter who lives in Cincinnati.

Mrs. Reed is visiting her daughter Mrs. Lillie Hall at this place.

Miss Maud Kirkpatrick has returned to Indianapolis.

Bert, the youngest son of W. F. Sullivan, who lives down on Gunpowder, has pneumonia very badly.

Thomas Bruce, who lived down on Middle creek, died Sunay. He was a young man, but had been in poor health for some time.

Union

Ezra Blankenbeker has bought the farm of Mrs. M. Presser at $90 per acre, as an outlet to his large farm near it—Mrs. Presser will move to Union.

Sol Long deserves the gratitude of every housekeeper in this vicinity he killed 17 hawks in the last few weeks. Sol has an eye like the early and shoots a Winchester. Let the good work go on.

Willie Smith is building a new dwelling house.

Spencer Smith has been on the sick list for several days.

Pink Neal has about completed the addition of three rooms to his residence

Mr Perry Aylor will soon remodel his barn, as he has gone into the cattle business and needs more room.

Determined Youth Runs This "Ghost" to Earth

The natives who inhabit Ilocos Norte, the most northern province of the island of Luzon, Philippine islands, live in mortal terror of a ghost, seen at night in a marsh which borders the rice fields. This particular ghost, according to reports, carries a light of some sort, and travels at great speed. No Filipino will venture near the spot.

An American government teacher, an athletic young fellow, failing to induce any native to accompany him, went one night alone into the marsh. After a short time the light appeared in the form of a ball of fire which hung low over the ground and moved away as he followed it.

This game led the determined young man farther into the rice field, and into deeper mud and water. Finally, after many such attempts to solve the mystery, he decided to run it down. After a long zigzag chase, requiring all the speed he could attain under such conditions, he caught up with a badly winded wild hog, its snout covered with the phosphorescent mud rooted up from the marsh.—Kansas City Star.

Company Had to Pay for Trader Rat's Trick

Stories of the mischievous antics of the trader rat are received with more or less discredit by people of the East or West, but along the line of the Rocky mountains, which is the habitat of the trader rat, there is to be found ample evidence of the rat's presence and operations. His pranks are sometimes serious, and at other times they are ludicrous. The rat will carry away anything which catches its fancy, but it always leaves something in its place. The story of one man's experience appears on the records of a well-known insurance company. The victim was a movie director engaged in making a picture in the mountains, and rolling himself up in a blanket prepared to spend the night in the open. He laid his watch on a convenient stone so that he might consult it readily, but in the morning the watch had disappeared, and in its stead was a little pyramid of stems, nails and obsidian. He reported the circumstances and the insurance people were at first inclined to regard the incident as a joke, but the claimant persisted, and finally the amount was paid, but not without a protest on the part of the representative of the company.

Famous Scottish Scholar

James Crichton, commonly called the "Admirable Crichton," was the son of Robert Crichton, lord advocate of Scotland in the reign of Mary and James VI, and of Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Beath, through whom he claimed royal descent. He was born probably at Elliock, in Dumfriesshire, in 1560, and when ten years old was sent to St. Salvador's college, St. Andrews, where he took his B. A. in 1574 and his M. A. in 1575. That he displayed considerable classical knowledge, was a good linguist, a ready and versatile writer of verse, and, above all, that he possessed an astounding memory, seems certain, not only from the evidence of men of his own time but from the fact that even Joseph Scaliger speaks of his attainments with the highest praise. The epithet "admirable" (admirabilis) for Crichton first occurs in John Johnston's "Heroes Scott" (1603).

The Indian mounts his horse from the right side. The bureau of American ethnology states this custom originated in the early history of the Indian's experience with horses. The warrior carried his bow in his left hand and found it more convenient to mount from the right side. Since the bow has been discarded, the Indian continued this custom.

World's "Dark" Period

The Dark ages covered the period from the fall of the western Roman empire in 475 A. D. to the revival of learning on the discovery of the Pandects at Amalfi, Italy, in 1150. The Pandects are a collection of laws systematically arranged from Roman writings on jurisprudence, enacted by Justinian in 533 A. D. Their discovery at Amalfi stimulated the study of Roman and Greek literature, which led to the period known as the Classic age. During the Dark ages masses of barbarians emerged from northern Europe and overran the former seats of learning. Civilization was on the decline and learning in Europe was at its lowest ebb.

Altogether Too Late

As I came into the living room the other day George, eight years old, was sitting on a chair with his eyes closed and his hands folded, mumbling something, so I said, "George what are you doing?" to which he replied, "Oh, I am praying," but before he could say more Ruth, his little sister, said, "Mamma, George just struck a match in the hall." Whereupon George finished by saying, "I was praying to ask God for Ruth not to be a little tale, but it's too late now."—Chicago Tribune.

Wickersham Report Creates Issue For 1932, Says Holmes

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Holmes
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

Washington—Not in many a long day has anything so upset Washington's proverbial equanimity as did the report of the Wickersham Crime Commission on prohibition enforcement. So far as that is concerned, if the news dispatches can be given full credence, the rest of the whole civilized world was not far behind the Capital in this respect.

One of the most surprising things about the evidences of general mental disturbance was not that there was anything particularly surprising in the report itself which was largely what might have been and doubtless to many was expected. The surprising things was the marked diversity of the reactions by those of all beliefs, creeds, blocs, parties, businesses and professions. The futility of trying to please everybody is almost axiomatic. The Wickersham report certainly failed to please everybody, but it pleased some of the drys and displeased some of the wets, and it pleased some of the wets and displeased some of the drys.

As the Topeka (Kan.) State Journal puts it: "Certainly there is nothing about it to crystalize anything but continued controversy." The Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer remarks: "After all is said the country finds itself exactly where it was before." Here in Washington, Representative Florence P. Kahn, Republican, of California, comments as follows: "The whole thing leaves prohibition just like Mohamet's coffin, suspended in the air between heaven and earth." Representative Black, Democrat, of New York, says that "it's neither dry nor wet—just fogy," while Representative Tinkham, Republican, of Massachusetts calls it "an insult to the intelligence of the American people." Representative Bloom, Democrat, of N. Y., thinks that the administration wants to continue prohibition and not admit defeat, adding that "the report was what we expected and leads nowhere." and Representative Stalker, Republican, of New York co-author of the Jones "Five-and-Ten law, is "in accord with the report" and hopes that "it will end the agitation for repeal." And here you are.

Little, if anything, has occurred since the commission rendered its remarkable report to clarify the confusion it then occasioned in the public mind. Editoria attempts at explanation and the comments by professional wets and drys have still left a sense of something lacking. All the commissioners agree that prohibition has not been enforced. Some of them are convinced that it never can be. Others faintly hope that it may be, and are willing to see the experiment tried a little further., although even they concede that if an improvement is not soon noted there will be nothing for it to modify or repeal the Eighteenth Amendment.

What is of most outstanding interest in the entire report is that six out of the eleven commissioners are in agreement as to the form of modification that should be adopted, if any. In brief it is that Congress should be given power either to prohibit or to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquor. In substance that is the amendment proposed by Mr. Elihu Root. When it is considered that Commissioners Newton D. Baker and Monte M Lemann both favor outright repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, it is evident tha a formidable weight of opinion with in the commission favors a drastic change of the law.

That is the part of the report which will most impress the public. It evidently impressed President Hoover, and had the effect of causing him to differ sharply with his own commission. In his message to Congress transmitting the report, he states that he sees "serious objection to, and therefore must not be understood as recommending, the commission's proposed revision of the Eighteenth Amendment." Doubtless, it is safe to say that nearly everything else in the report will be soon forgotten. The great controversy will be centered solely upon the part which Mr. Hoover opposes. He has drawn the lines for the coming battle. In presenting the Wickersham report to Congress President Hoover at last made clear his position on the Eighteenth Amendment. He is against its revision and for its continued observance and enforcement "with all the means at our disposal without equivocation or reservation."

All doubt as to Mr. Hoover's fidelity to the prohibition cause is now removed. If the Republican party as now seems probable, nominates Mr. Hoover for a second term, it will enter the campaign as a dry party. At the same time, the probability increases that the Democratic candidate will be a wet. Therefore so far as prohibition becomes the controlling issue for 1932, there will be no excuse for ignorance as to which candidate is wet and which is dry. Mr. Hoover has done his part to make the division unmistakable. So far as he is able, he has committed the Republican party to a thorough going and unyielding policy of enforcing prohibition by the full power of the Federal Government. His own commissioners tell him that this is not possible. Millions of voters in his own party do not believe that it is. By his repudiation of the most salient thing in the prohibition report he has brought the inevitable conflict nearer.

The story is recalled of the two bold knights in days of old who fought over the color of a shield. One maintained that it was golden, the other that it was silver. Both fell mortally wounded, and in the fray the shield had been severed. "I now see that you were right," said one of the dying combatants. "No," rejoined the other, "it is apparent to me that you were right."

The application of this little parable to the conflict over our noble experiment might become apparent one of these days. The viewpoint of the western ruralite may differ from that of the eastern city dweller. Possibly each may discover that the other is right before both are annihilated.

SAYS WHOLE WHEAT IS DELICIOUS FOOD

Whole wheat may be cooked so that it makes a delicious and nutritious food, especially when supplemented with milk, eggs, fruit or vegetables. Miss Florence Imlay, field agent in home economics for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, offers the following recipes:

Cooked Wheat as Cereal—Use one cup of wheat, 4 cups of water and one teaspoon of salt. Wash the grains of wheat through several waters. Add 4 cups of water and soak over night. In the morning bring water to boiling point and boil for 30 minutes. Add the salt. Put into a double boiler and cook 7 or 8 hours or until the grains are popped and the starch is cooked. Serve with whole milk or thin cream. If a double boiler is not available, the wheat should be placed on the back of the stove or over a very slow fire, after boiling 30 minutes, and kept at simmering point until thoroughly cooked. More water, which should be boiling, will have to be added when the wheat is cooked in an open kettle. Stir the wheat gently and only often enough to prevent sticking.

Spanish Wheat—Use 2 cups of cooked wheat, 3 strips of bacon, 3½ tablespoons of chopped onion, one cup of tomatoes and a half a teaspoon of salt. Cut the bacon into small pieces and fry until crisp. Mix together the wheat, bacon, 3 tablespoon fat in which the bacon was fried, chopped onion, tomatoes and salt. Pour into a baking dish and bake in a moderate oven 20 to 30 minutes. Serve at once.

Wheat Custard—Use 2 cups of milk, 2 eggs, 4 tablespoons of sugar, three-fourths of a cup of cooked wheat, three-fourths of a sup of raisins and an eighth of a teaspoon of salt. Beat eggs slightly and add sugar and milk. Stir until the sugar is dissolved. Add the other ingredients. Pour into a baking dish. Set baking dish in a pan of water and bake in a moderate oven until firm.

JOHN HENRY TANNER

John Henry Tanner, aged eighty years passed away at his home on Friday morning after a long illness. Funeral services were conducted at the Hopeful Lutheran church Sunday afternoon at 2 p. m. by Rev. F. B. Heibert, pastor in the presence of a host of relatives and friends after which the remains were laid to rest in the nearby cemetery. He united with Hopeful church early in life and had always been a faithful member.

The pall-bearers were Ira, Roy and Arthur Tanner, Herman Meiman, Chas. Adams and Orvice Tanner.

Mr. Tanner is survived by his widow, one daughter, Mrs. Noan Zimmerman, and several grandchildren, besides many other relatives and friends.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

DAIRY ASSOCIATION ELECTS OFFICERS

The officers and directors of the Northern Kentucky Dairy Herd Improvement Association were elected at the fourth annual organization meeting held at the Farm Bureau in Florence last Tuesday afternoon. Approximately 20 dairymen from Kenton, Boone and Campbell counties were present.

Mr. O. R. Russ, Boone county, was elected president; Ed. Feldman, of Campbell county, vice-president; Alfred Eisen, Campbell county secretary-treasurer and Franklin Huey, Boone county and Geo. Klein, Kenton county as directors at large. Mr. O. W. Moore, present tester was selected to continue testing until April 1 when a new man will be put on the job.

A report of the counties showed that there would be a place for two or three more new members this year. The major portion of the association is made up of members who have carried on association work from one to seven years.

A Better Aim

"I observe," states a roguish reader of the tart and tarnished tabloids, "that 'Because I loved him so,' is becoming an everyday alibi for women who murder their husbands. How," he catechizes the Columbus Citizen, "can such loving dispositions be curbed?" "By teaching them," suggests the editor, "to control their affections."

Discovered by Accident

It is said that the value of Peruvian bark was first discovered by the fact that sick animals in Peru were observed to gnaw the bark of a certain tree. Man tried the same remedy with beneficial results, and quinine was given to the world.—Grit.

Where Quality Tells and Price Sells

OBITUARY

Mrs. Elizabeth Catherine Logemann beloved wife of Clyde Logemann and the youngest of seven daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Tobe McCarty, departed this life Jan. 16, 1931, aged 26 years. Her father and oldest sister Mrs. Hevona Sullivan and one little infant sister having preceded her in death several years ago.

She leaves behind her beloved husband and one son Clyde Junior, her mother and step-father Mr. and Mrs. Josephine Holt and a host of friends and loved ones to mourn her death, but their loss is her gain, she having made peace with God Jan. 15th and accepted her Saviour.

The depth of sorrow we cannot tell of the loss of one we loved so well and while she sleeps a peaceful sleep her memory we shall always keep.

CARD OF THANKS

We take this means of thanking all of the friends who so kindly assisted us in the death of our father and grandfather Asa Cason.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to the ones who donated the beautiful floral offerings, and to Bro. Powers for the appropriate funeral discourse and the Modern Woodmen for their services. We also thank Otto Souther for caring for him in his last illness and C. Scott Chambers for the efficient manner in which he conducted the funeral.

Art of Conversation

Good conversation requires a good listener as well as a good talker. Given a reasonable amount of brains on both sides, the requisite of good conversation, as well as of good manners in general, would seem to be consideration for the other fellow, a readiness to give as well as take, appreciation of, and responsiveness to others.—New York Sun.

"Guess Who"

Due to lack of space this feature was amitted last week. Now who is this?

BELLEVIEW HIGH SCHOOL

The Belleview Hi School students have been very fortunate in having Miss Willis, the Red Cross Nurse, of Boone county, to conduct a health class for them during the last semester. The course has been highly instructive and practical. The young ladies of our school are better prepared to meet their obligations and responsibilities of life because of this course. We appreciate the untiring efforts of Miss Willis in helping our school and community.

The basket ball teams are looking forward to the Spring Tournament. We are making our outdoor court proof against mud and freezing with sawdust and oil, so we can get a little practice by then. Hamilton and Belleview broke even last Friday afternoon at Hamilton by taking and giving a game each. Girls—Hamilton 4, Belleview 2; Boys—Hamilton 10, Belleview 19. Hensley and McNeely played an excellent game for Belleview.

The following is a list of the high school students making the highest grades during the past semester, and also the ones making the highest grades in the mid-term examinations are given second.

FLORENCE

Though our hearts are filled with sadness in the loss of our darling baby girl Ida Lee Middendorf, we take this means of expressing our thanks to our relatives and friends shown us in her sickness and death, and especially do we thank Drs. Rouse and Hafer for their untiring efforts and the donors for their beautiful floral pieces, Rev. Egbring for his consoling words and the Middendorf Bros., for the efficient manner in which they conducted the funeral.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Middendorf

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Eddins, of Chicago, were called here last week by the illness of his mother, and the death of his niece Ida Lee Middendorf.

The many friends of Mrs. Lee Eldins are sorry to hear of her being ill and wish her a speedy recovery.

Mr. John L. Rue and son Ed. were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Eddins enroute to Cincinnati to take Mr. Lutie Rue home, who has been in Christ hospital for the past two weeks.

Joe Love was visiting his daughter Mrs. J. O. Huey here Tuesday of this week.

Mrs. R. E. Berkshire has been ill for several days.

Mrs. W. P. Beemon, who has been on the sick list, does not improve.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY SCHOOL

More than thirty poultrymen attended the Boone county winter poultry school held in Florence last Friday. Mr. J. E. Humphrey, field agent in poultry work from the College of Agriculture and Mr. Fred Lowe of Kenton county led in the major discussions. Those poultrymen in attendance reported one of the best schools of its kind held to-date.

Mr. Humphrey led in the morning discussion of breeding problems. Breeding not only increased the total production of eggs but increased the number of eggs during the fall and winter months when eggs are high in price. Important experiments in breeding work were presented to show that breeding was most important in increasing production from 130 to 200 eggs per hen per year or more. This increase can best be brought about through male birds of known production records being used in a breeding pen from which hatching eggs are to be saved.

The importance of a workable clean chick program was outlined by Mr. Humphrey in the afternoon. The steps necessary to carry out such a program were listed as follows:

1. Clean Chicks (B. W. D. tested.)
2. Clean ground (ground on which no chickens habe run for at least two years).
3. Clean brooders (Brooders that are scalded, cleaned and disinfected).
4. Balanced rations (number recommended).
5. Proper management.

Mr. Fred Lowe, of Kenton county, reported to be one of the best commercial poultrymen in Kentucky led in the afternoon discussion. He outlined the plan he used in brooding some four thousand chicks each year. He recommended clean chick program was followed with many helpful and practical suggestions given. Mr. Lowe especially stressed the point of having good vigorous pullets ready to be put in the laying house early in the fall. He said that unless high production was secured through October, November, and December there could be little profit made in the commercial poultry business. At attempt should be made to hold the yearling hens in high production during August and September. The poultry school wishes to thank Mr. Lowe for the splendid practical discussion that he gave before the school.

The Boone county poultry extension program committee met during the noon hour and recommended the following poultry extension program be carried out during 1931:

1. 10 Clean chick breeding demonstrations.
2. Two spring field meetings at best demonstrations.
3. One fall field meeting or tour to be held just before the pullets are housed for winter production.
4. That the winter school be held again next year.

EASTERN KENTUCKY PIGS WIN SECOND PRIZE IN CONTEST

By winning second place in the state ton-litter contest, Harry Davis of Johnson county demonstrated that eastern Kentucky farmers can adopt improved practices with profit. He raised a litter of 11 purebred pigs to weigh 2,568 pounds when five and a half months old, and made a profit of $80.

More significant, perhaps than the weight of the litter and the profit is the fact that the pigs were made ready for market at the early age of less than six months, according to those in charge of livestock educational work at the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

It is the custom on many farms to keep hogs until they are a year old or even two or more years old. The is little effort at quick turn-over, a principle that has become almost fixed in the business world. By good breeding and scientific feeding, the College has found that it is possible to finish hogs to desirable market weight at six months or even earlier age. This method of finishing the animals also has been found the most profitable.

The development of the Davis litter was watched by farmers in Johnson and neighboring counties, many of whom were sceptical wo knew of whom were skeptical about any profit resulting. When the pigs averaged 233 pounds when 168 days old and made a profit above feed, pasture and labor of $80, most of them were convinced of the practicability of feeding balanced rations and selling pigs at an age of six months instead of a year or more.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Baker and son of Ft. Thomas, and Mrs. Geo. B. Miller, of Florence, left Sunday for Fla.

UTOPIA CLUB MEETS

Meal From Bean

Carob meal is made from a bean, which resembles the lima bean, but is of reddish brown color and tender enough to chew. The pods containing the beans grow up trees similar to locust trees which are found in Mexico and the southwestern United States. Carob meal is used in this country as stock feed.

Britain's Honor to "Unknown"

To honor the American dead of the World war the British nation decided to bury the Unknown Warrior of the United States of America, inscribed on the cross, which, by direction of his majesty King George V, was laid by Lord Beatty on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at the Arlington National cemetery near Washington on the 11th day of November, 1921.

LOWERING DAIRY COSTS

1931 is going to demand of Boone county dairymen that the cost of milk production be lowered. We all know that there should be conditions that warrant higher prices being paid for milk but there are just as many conditions that warrant the lower cost of production. Lower cost of production can best be brought about by a systematic program being planned early and executed throughout the year.

Some suggestions for lowering the cost of production are:

1. Cull closely. The low producing cow usually means a big leak. Cows in the northern Kentucky Dairy Herd Improvement Association produced from less than 3,000 pounds of milk per cow to over 13,000 pounds per cow and from less than 150 pounds of fat to ofer 500 pounds of fat. The same cows ranged from less than $15.00 per cow to $238.00 per cow above feed cost. The cow that made the largest profit consumed the largest amount of feed.

2. Be good to your cows. Care alone has often meant a 20 per cent increase in production.

3. Feed a good balanced ration to the remaining cows. Too much or too little protein or fats is expensive.

4. Plan for PLENTY of good pasture thruout the year. Pasture is the cheapest feed we prodcue. If there is not plenty of permanent pastures plan for rye, a mixture of grazing oats and lespedeza, Sudan grass and some of the other special crops. Remember if you don't plan for these crops you won't have them when needed.

5. Raise all your roughages, if possible, alfalfa, red clover, soy beans cow peas, alsike, timothy, red top, fodder, silage and many other roughage crops from which may be selected crops to fit all soil conditions can be grown. Remember that usually more than twice as much roughage as grain will be fed during the year.

6. Raise the grain if practical. One of the best dairy grain rations can be made by using 50 per cent corn. The corn in many cases should be produced at home.

7. Watch the health of your cows. Coming events cast their shadows before them. A cow off feed means lowered production. Lowered production may result in a less efficient cow.

8. Use a good pure bred bull of known D. H. I. A. or R. of M. records to sire all heifers that are to be raised. One bull in the Northern Kentucky Dairy Improvement Association increased the production of his daughters over their dams more than $540.00 the past year. The right kind of a herd sire may be worth several times $200.00 or the wrong kind several $200.00 less than nothing. Use only sires out of cows of known production records or else one that has proven that his daughters are better than their dams.

9. Test, don't guess. The dairy herd improvement association gives the most practical means of knowing what each cow in the herd is paying.

19. Study yourself, your farm and your equipment. If you find your conditions are best adapted to dairying bet about to make your farm hookup the best and most efficient possible.

The county agent realizes that too many of the above suggestions will round like so much wasted energy. However, the outlook at the present time demands that they be given consideration.

NOTICE

PLAN TO ATTEND FARMERS WEEK

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Huey, Mr. J. F. Clcek and a number of other Boone county farmers report that they are making plans to attend the 19th Annual Farm and Home Convention that will be held at the College of Agriculture at Lexington January 27th to the 30th inclusive.

Many Boone county cattle breeders will be interested in the state meetings of the Holstein, Jersey and Guernsey cattle clubs. A good farmers program for both men and women has been planned. A copy of the program may be obtained from the county agent at Burlington.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Freed From Pain After Suffering Two Years

"For two long years I was in agony, the pains were so severe I lost much sleep and became very nervous, my limbs were swollen—I carefully followed advice rendered me by people who were supposed to know. I took medicine daily, but none seemed to affect my condition.

"As time went on I became desperate, my kidneys were bothering me more than ever, my bladder had become weak, and I was compelled to arise many times during the night. Karnak was recommended and I decided to find out just what it would do. I have used several bottles and just what a glorious change, no one can ever realize. I have no pain whatsoever, my system is gradually becoming normal and I feel better than I have in years. I shall always praise and advise Karnak to anyone suffering from rheumatism."

Deaths

PIONEER PASSES

Cave Clore, aged Bulletsville citizen passed away last Monday morning at 82.

Another of the aged Boone County pioneers has passed in the person of Cave Clore, who was born January the 19th, 1850, aged 82 years and 6 days.

Funeral services were held at Sandrum Baptist Church, Wednesday at 2 P. M., in the presence of a great number of his relatives and friends and neighbors.

Rev. Johnson of Florence Ky. conducting the funeral services with W. A. Bullock of Hebron in charge of the funeral arrangements.

Mr. Clore, son of Benjamin and Lucinda Clore. He leaves one brother Yancy Clore and two sisters Nannie Hedges and Kittie Rice. He united with the Mount Pleasant Primitive Baptist Church Nov. 29, 1868 to which he has always been faithful.

MRS. ROSE QUICK

The many friends and relatives of Mrs. Rose Quick of Ludlow, were saddened by the news of her death which occured Wednesday morning Jan. 25th, following several months of serious illness.

She was born September 16, 1871, at Limaburg, Ky., and was married to Henry Quick of Hebron, Ky., August 30, 1899. One child was born to them, Louise Elizabeth.

She became a member of Hopeful Lutheran Church when a young girl. Some years later she transferred her membership to Ludlow Presbyterian Church, of which she was an active member until her death.

She is survived by her husband, Henry Quick, one daughter, Louise, two granochildren, Jock and Harry Shepherd, Jr., and a sister Mrs. Nellie Garnett of Hebron, Ky.

Funeral services were conducted at Hebron Lutheran Church by Rev. Hartman of Ludlow Presbyterian Church, Friday at 2 P. M., after which the remains were interred in Hebron Cemetery

The pallbearers were Dr. L. E. Rouse, Dr. Slater, B. S. Clore, Chester Davis, Henry Dixon and Earl Garnett.

The well filled church auditorium and the numerous and beautiful floral offerings bore witness of the

INDIAN TEAM

SPENDS WEEK-END IN BURLINGTON AFTER PLAYING AT CRESCENT SPRINGS ON SATURDAY NIGHT — REDSKINS MADE MANY FRIENDS HERE WITH GUITAR, SINGING AND BASKET BALL TALENT

Members of the First American (Indian) Basket Ball Club, who played at Burlington twice last week, made this town their headquarters over the week-end after having played at Crescent prings on Saturday night.

They went from here to Milan, Indiana, where they played on Monday night. Sam Legah, a star on both offense and defense, was unable to play at Milan and the team took one of their rare defeats.

They won their game at Crescent Springs, though the high school team at that place put up a game scrap against them. In the Milan gam ethe local team was in the van 31-11 at the half, but the Indians came back strong in the last period when Tee Hee and Red Fox "got hot" and hit the rim with a succession of impossible shots. The final was 38-31.

Kinsel, running mate to the absent Legah at guard, also cut in with some characteristic shots from back of center—something he was unable to show here on account of the low ceiling. These boys have a great team and proved to be such a likeable bunch that everyone here regretted very much to see them leave. Tee Hee and his guitar will be remembered here for a long time.

CARR CREEK

TO PLAY AT WALTON ON FEBRUARY 19TH—SHELBY STAMPER, FAMOUS ALL AMERICAN FORWARD OF 1928, WILL BE IN LINE-UP—WALTON AGAIN LANDS DIS. TOURNAMENT

The Walton Hi Bearcats have succeeded in scheduling a game of basket ball with Carr Creek for Thursday February 19, at Walton Hi Gym. Carr Creek was the team that created so much sensation in the State and National Tournament of 1928 and as Shelby Stamper, All-American Forward, is back with the team a large crowd of fans is expected to witness the game.

Shelby Stamper was that great forward that helped to put Carr Creek through in '28; after that year Stamper played professional basket ball for two years and now he is back with Carr Creek and will play at Walton, February 19. In seeing Stamper alone perform will be worth the price of admission.

As the Walton Bearcats have defeated Corinth, present State Champions, and several other good teams they will probably give the Creekmen a good game.

Come out and see Stamper and company perform at Walton Thursday night, February 19.

To Have Tournament

Walton was again chosen as site for the 21st district tournament which is made up of teams from the schools of Boone and Kenton Counties and is held on March 6 and 7

The Walton Hi School wishes to thank the other schools of the County for their votes which were cast for Walton as a site for the tournament and will endeavor to teams the best of entertainment while they are at Walton.

Last year Walton boys and Petersburg girls carried off the tournament honors, these were both Boone County Teams, so let's repeat this feat by bringing the tournament honors again to Boone County.

REMEMBER the tournament will be held at Walton Hi Gym on Friday and Saturday, March the 6th and 7th, 1931. Come to Walton and see your favorite team win.

MARRIED 62 YEARS

Do you know of a married couple in Boone county which has been married more than fifty years?

Well, here is one The accompanying photo is a likness of Mr. and Mrs. "Wash" Tanner, of near Hebron, who were united in the Holy Bonds of wedlock on the 29th day of eptember, 1869, almost 62 years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Tanner

Mr Tanner will be 84 on June 21st. While Mrs. Tanner will reach her 83rd birthday on August 23th. This picture was taken at the Aurora Farmers' Fair last fall and is evidence in itself that this couple still is hardy and active. They are among the best loved and admired people in all Boone county and have made their home in the community in which they lived throughout their long and active married life.

Their home is situated on the right hand side of the road as one drives from Hebron toward Constance just opposite the J. A. Riddell homestead, where they have lived since their marriage.

FATS AND LEANS

LOCAL BASKET BALL FLOOR FRIDAY NIGHT OF THIS WEEK —FAST HI-Y TEAMS WILL OPPOSE B. H. S. FIVES THE SAME EVENING.

Rivalry that extended over a period of several weeks will culminate in a grudge battle between the Fats and Leans in the local high school gym on Friday night of this week.

The heavies and lights will meet on the hardwood to decide the question of superiority now claimed by the Leans by virtue of a victory over the Fats earlier in the season. The game will be played as a preliminary to the high school games with the Covington Hi Y teams.

In the line-up for the Fats will be found such stars as: Yelton, Norris, Neikirk, Blythe, Ryle, Cotton and A. Pettit.

For the Leans will be seen: Ogden, Burton, S. Pettit, Botts, Huey, S. Easton and W. Easton.

The Covington teams are very strong this year and will furnish the home fans with some fast basket ball as an aftermath to the struggle between the two unique fives of "flesh" and "bones" that will head the Friday night card.

Baptists Lose to Crittenden

The Burlington Baptists, in spite of a fine battle against a team of truly higher class, lost to the Crittenden Baptists in the Covington Church League last Saurday night by a 42-23 score A large crowd of local followers saw the contest, which was spirited from start to finish. Lumb and De Moisey, rival centers, became somewhat over-zealous in their play and were ordered from the floor by reference Lampe. The judges of play claimed that they were using their elbows too freely.

Next Saturday night at 7:30 (slow time) the Burlington team will clash with Dry Ridge at Covington in a game that should be nip and tuck according to comparative dope. Due to the fact that the patronage of the buses has fallen far short of the actual cost the trip will be made this week by automobile. The bus trip has been very pleasant and convenient for both players and supporters, but, since it has cost the team treasury several dollars each week, it must necessarily be discontinued.

CASH SALES

FOR TWO FARMS IN ONE DAY ARE MADE BY A. B. RENAKER REALTY CO.—C. W. PETTIT FARM NEAR BULLITTSVILLE AND YOUELL HOMESTEAD AT LIMABURG ARE DISPOSED OF TO FT. THOMAS AND FT. MITCHELL FARMERS

Something very rare in local real estate annals occurred here last week when two farms of considerable size and value were sold for absolute cash.

Both of these deals took place the same day and were made by the same firm, the A. B. Renaker Realty Company.

The two farms which were sold last Saturday, were known as the C. W Pettit farm of 100 acres near Bullittsville on the Petersburg and Dry Creek pike and the C. H. Youell homestead on the Burlington and Florence pike near Limaburg.

Esper Peterson, of Ft. Thomas, was the purchaser of the Pettit Farm while J. L. Morgan, of Ft. Mitchell, will be the new owner of the Youell place. Both of these men said to be excellent gentlemen and Boone county wil be glad to welcome them as citizens.

Joe T. Lovett, of Murray, Kentucky, was elected president of the association, while J. T. Norris, of Ashland, was made he new vice-president

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

The two basket ball teams of Burlington High School journeyed to Dry Ridge last Friday night January 30th, and not only came back with one black eye but two this time. The Kittens losing to the Dry Ridge girls by a score of 8 points. Boswell, the center for Dry Ridge made 8 of their 18 points. Phillips was high point maker for the Kittens. In the first half of the game it looked as if the Kittens were going to give the Dry Ridge girls a good beating, but in the last half they were not able to get but four points. E. Akin and Phillips were able to score these points. When the smoke cleared away the Dry Ridge score was 18, Kittens 10. The Tomcats were given their first defeat since the starting of the second semester by letting the Dry Ridge boys defeat them last Friday night. The game was played slow by both teams. Genge, the center for Dry Ridge, was the high point maker, making 8 of their 23 points, but was followed by his team-mates, making several points each. The Tomcats played the offense good but were not able to get the ball to go through the basket, which they had more chances to do than the Dry Ridge boys. When the game ended the Dry Ridge boys were on the top with 23 points and the Tomcats were on the bottom with 15

Next Wednesday night February 4th, both Tomcats and Kittens will go to Covington where they will play the two fast Y. M. C. A. teams. The Kittens will go up against the strongest teams they have played this season, as the Y. M. C. A. girls have been defeating every thing on hand and on Friday night Feb. 6th, the Covington Y. M. C. A. teams will return our visit by playing on our court. The main attraction which will be their second game this season—the "Leans" winning the first. The games will start at 6:45 p. m., (slow time). So be on hand and watch grand-dad and dad play some fancy basket ball.

The Juniors and Seniors gave a surprise program Friday afternoon which was enjoyed by everyone.

Zena Garrison was absent Thursday morning.

Girl Reserve weekly meeting was held Monday instead of Friday.

The Sophomores are preparing to write poetry this semester.

We thank the patrons that supported us in our play. We want to express our thanks to the ones who loaned us furniture for the stage.

The W. M. U. of the Union Baptist church met at the home of Mrs. James A. Huey on January 27th for their usual monthly program. On February 11th they will meet at the parsonage, with Mrs. Victor Stephenson as hostess, for an all day mission. Study of heathen and missions.

MINSTREL AT BELLEVIEW

Members of Boone Post No. 4 American Legion held their annual monthly meeting at the court house last Monday and decided to take their minstrel show to Belleview on Friday night, February 13th. This show has made several other towns in the county with pronounced success and the boys hope that the Belleview folks will turn out for their show.

CASON WILL PROBATED

The will of Asa S.Cason was probated before County Judge N. S. PROHIBITION AND POLITICS

The long-awaited report of the Wickersham Commission on the enforcement of the Prohigition law reopens on a national scale the whole question of whether or not Prohibition can be enforced. That means that the "Wet vs. Dry" issue will be one of the biggest, if not the dominant issue of the Presidential campaign of 1932.

The Wickersham report itself is definite in the main conclusions and recommendations. It is opposed to repeal of the 18th Amendment. It is opposed to the restoration in any manner of legalize saloons. It is opposed to the Federal or State governments going into the liquor business. It is opposed to any change in the law to manufacture and sale of light wines and beer. It believes that the corporation of the states and the support of public opinion is necessary for complete enforcement of the Prohibition law, but believes that there has geen an improvement in enforcement since the forces for that purpose were reorganized, although enforcement and obedience to the law are still inadequate, as the the agencies of enforcement.

The commission recommends that more money should be appropriated for enforcement, and the organization and personnel improved and backed up by more efficient laws for the prosecution of violations and the conduct of investigations. In addition the commission recommended that "If the 18th amendment is revised" it should give Congress the sole power to regulate the liquor traffic, and not leave anything to the states.

With this last conclusion President Hoover, in his message transmitting the report to Congress, disagrees. He thinks that the burden of enforcement should not rest entirely upon the Federal Government. He has previously expressed himself as feeling that the states have not done their full duty. But with the main conclusions of the commission the agree-

All of the members of the commissions agree on the general statements of fact in regard to conclusions, although all signed the report. In separate memoranda different commissioners expressed themselves in favor of total repeal of the 18th amendment, of the Government going into the liquor business or authorizing the states to do so, of changing the Volstead law without repealing the Constitutional provision for Prohibition, and of other palliative measures.

Already the forces on both sides of the question are lining up for a great political fight next year. At present the Democratic party leadership, in the North at least is wet and getting weter, while the Republican leadership is mainly dry and getting dryer. But Prohibition cuts across all party lines, and the result of the present situation is likely to be some strange new political line-ups.

The Family Garden

THE GARDEN
The Garden Campaign
Part III
(By John S. Gardner, Ky., College of Agriculture)

This week's article sums up the past discussion of garden-cropping, by presenting a specific garden plan designed to fit a budget. The budget assumes a family of five, a program of twenty servings of vegetables during the time they can be had fresh, and twelve servings a week the rest of the year. The figures in brackets denote the numbers of servings per week; the next figures give feet of garden row required, and the last are quantities of seed needed. The whole can be put into a space 36 feet long or slightly more than ¼ acre. These are the "fresh" vegetables: Peas (2) 100, 1 qt.; Lima Beans (2) 100, 1 qt.; Snap Beans (4) 150, 1½ qts.; Okra (2) 30, ½ oz.; lettuce (?) 100, ½ oz.; greens (3) 200, 2 oz; corn (3) 400, 1 pt.; tomatoes (5) 150 ⅛ oz.; beets (1) 75, 1½ oz.; cabbage (4) 200, ⅛ oz.; radishes 2 oz.; onio nsets (2) oz) 200, 3 qts.; turnips (1) 50½ oz.; celery (?) 100, ½ oz.; potatoes (8) 800, 1 bu.; sweetpotatoes (?) 800, 2 pks.; Swiss chard (2) 30, ¼ oz.; squash (2) 80, ¼ oz.; cucumbers 20 hills (1 oz.); cantaloupes 40 nills, 1 oz.; watermelons 35 hills, 1 oz.

SMALL STRAWBERRY CROP IN PROSPECT

Drouth has damaged the 1931 strawberry crop in the midwest and eastern states, and prospects in Kentucky indicate a smaller crop than in several years.

A statement issued by Prof. A. J. Olney, head of the department of horticulture, College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, suggests extra care for fields during the rest of the winter and in the spring, as strawberries may bring good prices.

A mulch of a ton of straw to the acre tends to protect the plants from damage due to freezing and thawing. It should be raked off the rows in early spring to prevent smothering the plants.

If no fertilizers have been used, an application should be made just before growth starts, although best results have been obtained by using fertilizers in late summer. Sulfate of ammonia is suggested at the rate of 100 to 200 pounds to the acre, depending on the fertility of the soil.

There is some indication that a large acreage of plants will be set this spring, as growers tend to plant heavily during periods of good prices. A given acreage maintained from year to year would make for price stabilization, Prof. Olney points out.

The new Blakemore strawberry was introduced into several Kentucky counties last year. The plants made a remarkably good growth for an unfavorable year, and will bear their first fruit this spring.

The strawberry harvest already has begun in southern states, with prospects for a good crop.

GOOD METHODS BRING MONEY FROM POULTRY

Owners of 126 demonstration flocks of poultry in Kentucky last year made an average of $167 profit per flock or $1.47 per hen, above cost of feed and other expenses, not including labor. The flocks were managed according to the recommendations of the poultry section of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, and under the general supervision of field agents of the college and county agents. Thru them the college demonstrated the value of good management.

There were a total of 14,364 hens in the 126 flocks, representing the principal breeds. The average production was 143 eggs per hen, which is double the production of common farm hens. The flocks averaged 114 birds. The average cost per hen was $2.85. One hundred and four flock owners who kept an hourly labor income record found that they received 89 cents an hour for caring for their chickens.

Mrs C. F. Chenault, of Madison county, reported an income of $5.17 per hen above feed cost from her flock of 245 Barred Plymouth Rocks. This included the value of hens carried over in the flock.

Ingram Leslie, by selling eggs in Pike county mining camps, made a profit of $4.85 per hen on his flock of 202 Leghorns.

F. M. Collier, owner of a flock of 211 Rhode Island Reds in Muhlenburg county, reported a labor income of $3.24 per hen.

Owners of 11 of the 126 flocks lost 11 cents to $3.50 per bird during the year.

Stanley Caton, who summarized the records of the flock owners, said that success with poultry resulted from early hatching, proper brooding, strict sanitation, feeding balanced rations, and the use of good, common sense.

ATTRACTIVE SCHOOL LUNCHES IMPORTANT

During the week children eat approximately a fourth of their meals at school. It is important, therefore, that lunches are attractive, appetizing and nutritious, points out Miss Florence Imlay, of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

A variety of sandwiches from day to day helps. They may include vegetables, such as raw carrot, raw cabbage and lettuce, cottage cheese, egg, peanut butter, raisins, dates and the like. Milk should be provided in a bottle or used in soups or cocoa.

Custards and other puddings, fruit gelatins, raw or fresh fruit make a better type of dessert for the school lunch, than rich pastries.

Miss Imlay suggests the following luncheon:

Carrot and egg sandwich; raisin sandwich; baked apple; milk and graham cracker.

Peanut butter and cottage cheese; shredded cabbage sandwich; fruit gelatin and soft custard; sauce; milk and cookie.

Chicken sandwich; bread and jelly sand wich, the jelly to ge added at noon. tapioca custard, with peaches; milk.

Bocne county dairy farmers are meeting lower milk prices by economical use of home-mixed balance rations.

Plymouth Rock

The inscription upon Plymouth rock is the date, 1620. The rock split in 1774. On July 4, 1834, a part of it was removed to Pilgrim hall, Plymouth. The other half was covered with a granite canopy and surrounded by an iron fence. This part may still be seen in the harbor.

The Match in History

The word "match" is probably from the Greek and Latin "myxa," meaning a nozzle of a lamp. In 1337 we find reference in literature to matches, the name being applied to the wick of a candle or lamp. The earliest reference to matches in their present sense is found in 1530.

Strong Food for Workers

The humble onion, but of almost as many jokes as the cheese, figures prominently in history. An inscription on the great pyramid of Egypt informs the hungry wayfarer that nine tons of gold was spent for the purchase of onions, radishes and garlic fed to the workmen who built the mammoth structure.

The Way of Life
By BRUCE BARTON

PLEASANT PLACES

When he was hardly more than a boy my friends Jim Derieux, one of the editors of the American Magazine, was secretary to the governor of South Carolina.

There was a brilliant young chap in the state administration who at the age of twenty-six held the office of assistant comptroller. He had not intended to run for the comptrollership, but a political faction organized to head him off. This made him mad, and so he did run and was elected.

After holding office for only six months he asked for an interview with the governor

"What's on your mind?" asked Jim.

"I am going to resign."

"Why?"

"I'll tell you presently."

They went into the governor's private room, and the young official tendered his resignation. The governor was amazed.

"What's the matter?" he exclaimed. "I thought you were sitting pretty."

"I am," said the young man. "That's just the trouble."

"But I don't understand."

"Well, Governor, you know this office that I hold is a mighty pleasant place. I'm twenty-seven years old and it's a very pleasant place indeed. I am afraid of it."

He was afraid he would settle down and become too contented. Afraid that, without hard problems to tackle and stern duties to conquer, he would get flabby and soft. Afraid that at forty he would wake up to find himself a lazy office holder with no ambition and no hope.

Nobody under fifty should be in too pleasant a place.

Robert Updegraff, the writer of business articles, uttered a profound business truth when he counseled: "Never complain about your troubles. They are responsible for the greater part of your income.

Almost any one can hold a job which presents no difficulties; hence such jobs pay small salaries. Men at the top are paid for their willingness to accept responsibility; for the problems that they tackle and the difficulties they lick.

King David wrote: "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me lie down in green pastures. He leadeth me beside the still waters."

But when David wrote that he was a fugative from Saul. He was fighting through the wilderness, pursued by enemies and wild beasts. The green pastures and still waters were all in his mind.

He never did reach an entirely pleasant place. Even when he became king his life was full of problems, disappointments and hard work. But his soul gave birth to songs that are among the finest of all ages.

Barren county farmers who used fertilizers report increased returns of $100 or more from tobacco to the acre. They used commercial fertilizers or superphosphate and nitrate of soda.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS, FRIEND OF SINNERS
Luke 7:36-50
Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Again the entire chapter should be read. Remember that we are studying the entire life of Christ on earth and not just a few incidents therefrom. More miracles are performed The faith of the Centurion was commended when that man besought Jesus to heal His servant from the distance by merely giving the word. Raising a dead body is no greater problem than any other kind of healing, as is evidenced when the widow of Nain receives her son again. Then note the incident when John the Baptist sends messengers from his prison and Jesus replies by calling attention to the works and preaching which are common report.

The Pharisee, who invited Jesus to his home evidently did it that he might observe this Nazarene more closely. He did not say "Come" for Jesus' sake. There may have been food enough but the common courtesy of washing the soil from the feet was omitted, though that was thee work of a slave or lowly servant. A woman who had made her living as a common prostitute rejoices at the opportunity of expressing her joy in the salvation which had come to her.

When the Pharisee-host condemns soul through His teachings. Both Jesus and the woman a deep lesson is given by a parable-story about two debtors. The forgiven sinner was therein exalted above the rude Pharisee. The woman was encouraged to make a new start in life, no matter what her forgiven past had been. The Golden Text explains the meaning of it all: "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," I Timothy 1:15.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR
By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

CHILDISH TROUBLES

Ho-hum....It's 10 P. M. Just returned from seeing a little fellow four years of age. The only child of his parents, hence a very anxious mother, who co-operated with me at every step. I encountered a moderate fever, a loaded digestive tract belonging to a "very hearty eater," a vigorous and rapid pulse and breathing, a slight sore throat; lungs not involved. Any old mother might have given a dose of castor oil, and crapped the little patient up warm in bed, and he might have been all right tomorrow.

But, this is a highly technical age. Wise young parents do not fool with old wives' fables; they call a physician.

The little fellow was very anxious that Santa Claus should visit him; being a personal friend of that Xmas idol of childhood, I readily promised to intercede for the visit of the fat little saint—which brought me a very willing subject for examination.

I actually taught the 4-year old to gargle! And he did it to perfection. A simple evacuant for the loaded bowel, with a nice, good-tasted germicide for the throat, and the trick was turned. I learned incidentally that there was a basement to the cottage that was not exactly sanitary, and damp at times, that the little boy played there on chilly days when it was pleasanter indoors; a few words of practical advice to the young mother were absorbed as a dry sponge takes up water. The same of the admonition in regard to indiscriminate eating. This boy had eaten "nearly a pint of ice-cream—and has promptly thrown it up"—a few hours before I was called to go see him!

The proud daddy—a bridge mechanic—had "just loved to see the kid eat."

Never was a fee paid more willingly or promptly; never have I left a more grateful family. And, Santa came on time, leaving a generous supply of things that little boys like; I know, for I talked with the old man.

Colors Not Important in Emotional Effects

In a recent popular article, similar to others which have appeared in popular or pseudo-scientific journals, we are told that green and blue-green are quieting, blue sobering, purple repressing, yellow cheering, red and orange exciting or stimulating. It happens, however, that this sort of systematization is mostly what might be called baloney, with just enough basis of fact to make it seem sensible to the layman.

The supposition that red is generally exciting (based entirely on association) runs contrary to the effects of roses and many other flowers, not to mention the sunset. Red cloths excite the bull, but black cloths are just as efficacious, for to the bull red actually looks black. The conventional red signal checks the motorist and green stimulates him to go. The reverse system would work just as well, if it were conventional.

Under the deep blue sky of summer people are stimulated more than by the gray of winter; but they are cheered as much by the green landscape of Maryland as by the yellows and browns of California. Purple grapes and green watermelons are as appetizing as are yellow apricots, red cherries, or oranges, and if the sea were persistently yellow it would have the same emotional effect it has now. —Knight Dunlap in the American Mercury.

Cold Chickens Sought Warmth of Footlights

A London actor who toured in his early years, writes Peggy Wood in the Saturday Evening Post, tells a story of a road company of an English pig-and-chicken play—you know, "Shore Acres" and "The County Chairman" type we used to have in America—where they "traveled" a lot of chickens who were taken from their coops, which were always relegated to the dressing rooms up in the flies—and the ones, of course, without heat—and let loose on the stage in Act II to peck about at the corn scattered for them by the property man.

This was for atmosphere and held great advertising possibilities. The only trouble was that their legs were always so cold from their bitter dressing rooms that instead of pecking at the corn so temptingly spread, while the actors said their lines, the hens made a break for the footlights and sat on the electric light bulbs until they got warm, making pitiful clucks all the while.

The leading lady complained that those wretched chickens were ruining her scenes, but the impresario knew they were worth a dozen leading ladies to the audience.

Perpetuating Old Symbol

Did you know that you are being religious when you write to your best girl and put several crosses near your signature at the bottom of the letter, says an article in a Portland (Ore.) paper. The origin of the symbol dates back to the days when only the priests and the favored few could write. Others made their mark on wills, deeds and other documents. The signer made his mark in the form of a cross, which was equivalent to swearing by the cross that he would be faithful to the pledge he had made. Just as today the President kisses the Bible when he is inaugurated, so in those days the man who signed a will or a deed made his mark in the form of a cross and kissed it, out of reverence. Kissing the cross thus became associated with kisses.

Ancient Bridge

What is probably the oldest bridge in the world lies some hundreds of feet below the surface of the Pacific ocean a few miles south of Behring straits. This is not a bridge fashioned by the hand of man, but was a strip of land of unknown width connecting the continents of Asia and America, once above the surface of the sea and densely forested with redwoods, but submerged so long ago that scientists talk about it in seven figures. Dredging on this recently discovered ridge has brought up fossils of redwoods. Like fossils have been found on land in both Alaska and Siberia, and it is quite clear that this was at some remote period a connecting link between them.

"Cork" Limbs

It is believed by some that the first artificial limbs were invented by a Doctor Cork. Another theory is that they were first made in Cork, Ireland. And it has been said that the name came from Cork street, London, where there were shops selling surgical appliances. These explanations are, however, not borne out by investigation. It is reported that an elderly English manufacturer of artificial limbs believes that the name was applied to them because they were once made largely of cork. In any event, this history of the term seems to be generally accepted.

A Game of Chance

They were talking of the parsons of their respective villages.

"Our man is so strict he won't even perform a marriage ceremony," said Hobden.

"Good heavens! Whatever is his reason for that?" questioned his companion.

"He says that his conscience won't permit him to participate in any game of chance," Hobden explained.—London Answers.

Lands of Interest Seen by Visitors to Tropics

One of the quaintest places in the world is the little Dutch island of Curacao. The island itself is like a bit of old Holland, with a tropical flavor lent by its red-roofed houses, palm trees and warm climate.

Martinique is French and famous for the garish, brightly colored costumes of its native women. The city St. Pierre is an awe-inspiring sight. Once it nestled cozily at the foot of Mount Pelee, a lowering volcano which blew its own head off back in 1902 and wiped out the city below. Today it is in ruins, covered with lava dust, a city of the dead.

Trinidad, "land of humming birds," is a city of flowers, of strange peoples and races, and the home of the world-famous Pitch lake of La Brea, from which comes asphalt to pave the roads of the world. Here are many Hindus, remnants of East Indian slaves introduced into the island in 1839. The men wear flowing white robes, turbans and silk blouses, while the women carry their family wealth with them at all times in the shape of gold rings, anklets, heavy earrings and silver bracelets which cover their arms from wrist to elbow.

Phrases Now Familiar Traced to Their Source

Speaking of "getting the sack," in the Seventeenth century mechanics carried their tools in a big bag. When a man was fired, his sack was handed back to him that he might pack up his belongings and hunt a new job. There is another story of the origin of the phrase, and it's somewhat horrendous. A certain sultan, upon tiring of a wife, would have her tied in a sack and cast into the sea.

"Humble pie" comes from England, and it's a pun. The umbles are the heart, liver and entrails of the deer. When the lord of the manor dined on venison, the umbles were made into pie for the servants.

"Humbug" is straight Irish. It comes from "uim bog," pronounced humbug, which means soft copper or worthless money.

And we say 'by hook or crook" because in feudal times tenants were allowed to collect firewood by hook or crook. They were permitted as much of the underwood as could be cut with a crook, and as much of the loose timber as could be collected from the boughs with a hook.—Golden Book Magazine.

Absorbing Iodine

Enthused over his successful results in giving patients iodine in oysters, Dr. Rene Loubatie, of Bordeaux, France, declares that the idea can be used with all unpleasant medicines. Doctor Loubatie has been experimenting with other chemicals. He is using them in much the same way, which is to perform a surgical operation on the bivalves, immerse them in iodine until they have absorbed a quantity, then give them a sterilizing bath. The patient eats the oysters in the regular way and thus gets more iodine than if taken merely as medicine. The doctor argues that those who take medicine unpleasant to them do not get the full benefit because the stomach rebels.

First Alphabets

The Greeks appear to have been the first to invent an alphabet in which the single sounds of their language, vowels as well as consonants, were expressed by a series of letters. There was a connection between the Greek alphabet and the one used by the Semites of Syria, suggesting that it was brought to the Greeks by the Phoenicians. It is true that some writers attribute the invention of the alphabet to such mythical characters as Prometheus and Cadmus. It is probable that the Greek alphabet is an adaptation of the consonantal alphabet invented in Syria.

Sees Future for Sudan

One cannot help admiring the courage and the optimism of those men who made possible this "desert mail," who opened up the Sudan, laid out cities, built irrigation dams, blew up the Sudd, and made the Nile navigable—in short, made the Sudan not only a country fit to live in, but a country with a future. For a future it undoubtedly has. Cotton and irrigation are its slogans. And it is only through the optimists who came in with Kitchener in 1898 that the Sudan—"the country of the blacks" and of the Arabs—has become a white man's country with a great future.—W. J. Luyten, in the New York Times.

Needy Mother

A high school girl and her mother were shopping and the young woman could not be led away from the jewelry department.

"We can just as well move on. I really don't need those beads," said the mother.

"Now you know you need them, for I have none fit to wear to the junior party," replied the designing daughter.—Indianapolis News.

Rebellion

It was during a domestic economy lesson in a Cleveland high school that the instructor remarked:

"Most men insis that the girls they marry must be good cooks."

"Well, that lets me out," snapped a girl in the back row, "because I don't intend to get married to any fellow who isn't able to hire a cook."

Language Has Lasted

The language spoken by the ancient Egyptians was in use as late as the Seventeenth century A. D. and is still used in Coptic church ritual.

Holmes Upholds Secretary In Veterans' Bonus Controversy

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(BY FRED HOLMES)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

Washington—The six-year old who touches daddy for ten cents has a vague idea that somewhere daddy has a safe containing an inexhaustable supply of dimes. There follows a long period of growing consciousness that there is a bottom to dad's well, but that does not deter son from wiring from college for that extra fifty Generally, if dad can raise it, it is forthcoming, but the accompanying letter does not relate that dad has arranged to work overtime and has renewed his note at the bank; that mother has decided to make that old gown do for another year and to rent the spare room, and that the idea of replacing the antiquated and inefficient furnace has been given up for present. And son's consideration of the family finances is usually in inverse ratio to dad's generosity. It is not always censurable; most often it is just human nature.

No one questions that father Nation owes a debet of gratitude to his sons, many of whom gave up jobs, education, careers, and all of whom risked life, limb and health, at his call, which cannot be paid; which cannot even be computed. God knows dad wants to be generous, but his health is at stake. Furthermore, dad, with his long experience, knows that limitless generosity will be of no lasting benefit to Buddy. Still furthermore, Buddy has a whole lot of little brothers and sisters who are sick and lack proper nourishment.

Of all the arguments advanced against the immediate conversion of the World War veterans' endowment insurance into cash payments, the last which should be considered is the effect of this transaction on the finances of the government. This does not mean, of course, that such a consideration is unimportant, but the welfare of the veterans and the country's duty to them come ahead of considerations of cost. It is not to be denied that many veterans are in need. Naturally they have not geen immune to the economic ills which have afflicted so many others among their countrymen. But those permanently disabled in the service are receiving compensation and hospitalization, and the question is whether the able-bodied are suffering peculiar misfortunes from which the rest of the country is exempt.

Indorsement by the American Legion's Executive Committee of "the principle" of immediate cash retirement of the veterans' adjusted compensation certificates gives added impetus to the already formidable drive behind various Congressional proposals to perform that truly stupendous fiscal operation. By indorsing "the principle" of cash payment the Legion committee leaves the way open for the adoption of any one of about fifty leigslative plans now being advanced to accomplish that purpose.

If the most extreme proposal—to pay now the face value of the certificates as of 1945—were adopted, it would involve not alone the scrapping of the entire present "adjusted compensation" system by wiping out the Governmennt's contract obligations to the veterans. Plainly it would mean the eventual establishment of a straight-out pension for the soldiers of the World War. For this cash grant would be made on the theory of its pressing need to relieve the immediate necessities of the veterans and also with the idea that the spending of it would assist generals business by putting from $2,700,000 to $3,400,000,000 in circulation.

After the money was received and spent, the veterans would be in position to say that the Government was then making no continuous provision for their needs and to press the argument for general pensions which was side-tracked in 1924 when the "adjusted compensation" plan was adopted in its place over the veto of President Coolidge. And what Mr. Coolidge said in vetoing the soldiers' bonus is turning out to be depressingly true. Open the gates by an inch to any recompense other than caring generously for the actual sufferers from war service and there is no end to the political demands for more and more pay. Every demagogue and every specious argument will wait for the next auspicious opportunity to continue the raid on the public treasury.

The various bills now before Congress call for payments requiring bond issues ranging from a billion to three billions. If the veterans are to be paid in full—and the politicians are sure to insist that they receive the last penny, once the Treasury is opened to them—they will receive $3,427,000,000, less the amounts they have already borrowed on their certificates, a total of agout $250,000,000. This can be paid only by a bond issue. To flood the iously retard business recovery and at this time would depress the value of other government issues outstanding, increase the difficulty and expense of borrowing by states, municipalties, railroads and industrial corporations which are planning new construction and other improvements to aid employment, and thus hamper materially the return of prosperity.

And all this would be done to enable veterans to spend a fund, insufficient to permanently relieve business depression, which they should regard as saving in the bank and as life insurance for the protection of their dependents.

Secretary Mellon appeared before the Senate Finance Committee Wednesday to warn that cash redemption of the soldiers' gonus would upset the Nation's financial structure and "greatly disturb world equilibrium." The veteran Secretary of the Treasury said the cashing of the adjusted service certificate which has been urged as a relief measure would "seriously retard business recoverey and so prolong unemployment."

"I can say without qualification," continued Mr. Mellon, "that the Treasury Department could not sell $3,400 000,000 of bonds at the present time except on terms which it would be very hard to justify and without complete disorganization of the Government and other security markets, with the most serious consequences not only to the public credit but to our entire economic structure."

It is generally looked upon here as a selfish and shortsighted policy which the politicians inside and outside the legion are fostering. To get service men a little cash they are willing to hamper returning prosperity and damage the chance of jobs for all.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Here is a good rule for pressed veal—a rule so simple that you could hardly call it a recipe. Buy a knuckle of veal. For a loaf of pressed veal to fill a bread pan three-quarters full you should ask the butcher for a joint that would yield about two pounds of meat. With the bone it will amount to much more in weight. Also get him to saw it through the bone in two or three places. If it is chopped there may be fine splinters of bone that will make painful morsels. The knuckle should be set on to cook in boiling water seasoned with a half a bay or laurel leaf and a pinch of spices, such as cloves, all-spice, mace and sage, and allowed to simmer gently for about three hours. Now drain off the stock and pick meat from the bones, adding the marrow to the meat. Put the meat thru the grinder. Boil the liquor down to about a cup and a half. Salt and add about a teaspoon of lemon juice if the flavor is liked. If you wish to get quick results you may add a teaspoon of gelatine dissolved in a little cold water to the liquid, but this is not necessary if you are not in a hurry. Now mix the ground meat and stock and pack it into a pan rinsed in cold water.

SHE IS NOT DEAD BUT SLEEPING

Mrs. Harmon H. Jones passed peacefully to rest at the Booth Memorial Hospital, Covington, Ky., January 21st, after a prolonged illness. The funeral services were held at the Florence Christian church with burial at Hopeful cemetery,

Mrs. Jones, the daughter of Mr. Gertrude Yager-Aylor, was born at Gunpowder Ky., October 18th, 1889. To this union were born four children, three boys Ira Huey, Joseph and Earl and one daughter Virginia Pearl. She united with the Florence Christian church in the fall of 1904 and has been a consistent member always, taking a keen interest in all religious affairs and in the welfare of the community in which she and her family lived.

Mrs. Jones was a faithful mother, loving her home, her cheerful outlook on life and kind deeds left an imprint in the hearts of all who knew her. With a disposition that radiated sunshine she was always disposed to see the bright side, living her life to the fullest, having the will to do and courage to go on to the end.

Mrs. Jones was well known and well liked throughout the county and her passing on has cast a gloom over the entire community.

"Let your light so shine before men that they seeing your good works may glorify the Father which is in Heaven."

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to the many friends and relatives who, in thoughtful kindness stood by during the illness and death of our beloved wife and mother, and whose expressions of sympathy helped greatly to console us in our bereavement.

Odd Rites to Overcome Spite Work of Fairies

"A generation ago Shetlanders were extremely superstitious," writes a contributor to a London weekly paper. "They believed firmly that fairies existed, on the whole friendly to mortals, yet quick to punish any slight, the punishment being usually some ailment. Once, when a child, I ceased to thrive, and a servant persuaded my parents to take me to her home for a change. There was a concealed purpose, however. She believed that the fairies, having some grievance against our house, had stolen my heart, and near her home was a wise woman who held the secret of working cures when anyone was 'hurt from the hills.'

"The details of the rites used are forgotten, but the main features are vital. A lock of my hair was put into a Bible, which was placed on my head, on the Bible was set a dish of water into which, through the scissors already used, molten lead was poured. A piece of this lead shaped like a heart was selected, and blessed, and each morning part of it was scraped into my porridge. Thus the stolen heart was supposed to be restored. It must have worked in my case, as I have reached a hale old age."

Simple Explanation of Youngster's Well-Being

While the town of Arden was celebrating its thirtieth anniversary as a single-tax colony, old timers retold a story on Upton Sinclair, the writer, who at one time was a resident of the colony.

At that time he was writing diet articles for the magazines and trying out his theories on his son Davey. He boasted how well Davey was getting along on a diet of nuts and, as a matter of fact, Davey seemed to be getting along very well indeed.

Davey was a great demonstration of his father's theories, the proof of the pudding, as it were. Also, Davey was discretion itself. His noted father never guessed that always, at meal time, the lad dropped in at a neighbor's.

He would gaze with wide, sad eyes at the substantial fare and always the kind neighbor relented and Davey got a square meal which in no way interfered with the writings of his father.—Los Angeles Sunday Times.

Parade of Mighty Midgets

As numerous and small as are the molecules, they are not a circumstance to the atom; and the atoms in turn are far outnumbered by the electrons. Take an ordinary 25-watt incandescent lamp and let us visualize for you, if we can, the number of electrons that must pass through the filament of that lamp every second to provide the necessary current. First let us imagine each electron enlarged to the size of a raindrop, about two-tenths of an inch in diameter. Then imagine the electrons extending in a row, one behind the other, and a thousand rows placed side by side, so that they would pass before us, like an army, a thousand abreast. It would reach from the earth to the sun 25 times.

Odd Oriental Tastes

Koreans, like many Orientals, live mostly on rice. They cook their seaweed in oil and serve it with slices of red peppers. Kimshee, a kind of sauerkraut, is a favorite Korean dish.

To the north, the natives of Kamchatka relish the tongues and the marrow of the bones of reindeer, but the piece-de-resistance is the meat of unborn fawns. From the stomach of the reindeer the natives obtain their greens—half-digested balls of moss. A delectable native dish is reindeer sausage which has been surrounded by dough and dropped in boiling water. Boiled fish eggs are considered a delicacy.—Exchange.

Canadian Playground

North of the great fertile belt devoted to agriculture there lies in the province of Saskatchewan a region of rocks, woods and water which seems almost to have been formed by nature as a special playground for man. Here are found thousands of crystal lakes. White birch, jack pine and white spruce grow here to unusual size and beauty. Pickerel, pike and gray trout are plentiful in the lakes and streams while moose, deer, bear and many species of game birds abound. A typical example of this region is Prince Albert national park. It was set aside in 1928.

Molde, Honeysuckle Town

Molde is one of the most beautiful of Norwegian summer resorts with about 3,000 inhabitants. Its gentle beauty and coloring, its windsheltering rocks make its vegetation luxuriant. Although farther north than Russian Leningrad, its honeysuckle, roses and other flowers are famous. Its fjord is wide and dotted with great numbers of fir-clad islands and the view of the town from the water is very pleasing. Many visit the town to see Axel Ender's famous altar painting, "The Women at the Sepulcher," which has been reproduced on Easter gift cards all over the world.

Turkish Iconoclasts

In order to get stones with which to build their houses, Turks tore down the one thousand, five hundred year old Byzantine wall surrounding the city of Istanbul.

Odd Malay Belief

The Malay has a novel explanation to offer concerning the cause of earthquakes, which are quite plentiful in that part of the world. They will tell you that the earth is a sort of egg, resting on the horns of a bull. When the bull gets angry and shakes his head an earthquake results.

Economic Injury

Injury of individuals almost always happens with economic readjustment of conditions. For instance, when the fertile lands of the Mississippi valley were tapped by building railways from the East, the cheap wheat from these lands began to enter the markets of the East, where the price of wheat had been relatively high. The result was to lower the price in the East. This reduction in price injured the New England farmer.

Habits of Land Crabs

Some land-dwelling crabs of the mud flats dig very intricate burrows with labyrinthine cross and side galleries. Some species live a communal life. Each crab has his own burrow, but each has a passage leading into a large central hall which seems to be a community gathering place. Others are intensely individualistic. Each crab builds an elaborate labyrinth under the mud, considers it his own home and vigorously defends it.

TRY THIS ONE

If your car has been stolen this suggestion for its recovery may appeal to some.

A Texas farmer ran the following advertisement in his local newspaper:

"Strayed—One Jersey heifer. To the one who returns her I will give a drink of Four Rose Whiskey, ten years old."

The next morning there were nine men with Jersey heifers standing in the yard.

Reduce Your Food Budget With These Savory Meats

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

SUGGESTIONS for economical meat dishes that are easily prepared and nourishing, and appealing to the eye as well as the palate, are welcomed by every busy woman. Securing variety in the meat course should never be difficult, for an almost unlimited number of interesting dishes can be prepared from the cheaper cuts of meat by the use of proper seasonings.

At this season of the year, especially, it is possible to serve meat dishes of the savory, oven-dinner variety that bring a new note into the menu and are enthusiastically welcomed by families coming in chilled and hungry out of the cold.

These recipes for practical, economical meat dishes will help you to plan interesting meals:

Piquant Meat Loaf: 2 pounds ground beef; 2 cups cracker crumbs; 1 medium can Cream of Tomato Soup; 2 teaspoons salt; dash of pepper; 1 tablespoon minced onion; 1 cup Sweet Dill Pickle, chopped.

Mix together thoroughly the meat, cracker crumbs, Cream of Tomato Soup, salt, pepper, minced onion and Dill Pickles. Pack into an empty can that has been thoroughly greased. Steam in a steamer, or set the can in a pan with enough hot water to almost cover, for about 1½ hours. Instead of steaming, this meat may be baked in a loaf, using a moderate oven, for about 1½ hours.

Left Over Meat Loaf: Brown slices of meat loaf, cut about ½-inch thick, in a skillet with several tablespoons butter. Pour over the meat a small can of Cream of Tomato Soup and allow to simmer until a thick sauce is formed. Serve garnished with parsley.

Casserole of Sausage and Rice: 1 pound sausage; 3 cups cooked rice; 1 medium sized onion, chopped fine; 2 tablespoons grated cheese; 1 small can Cream of Tomato Soup.

Brown sausage in a skillet and pour off part of the fat. Arrange alternate layers of sausage and rice in a greased baking dish and sprinkle each layer with chopped onion. Pour over this the Cream of Tomato Soup, and cover the top with grated cheese. Bake for 30 minutes in a moderately hot oven.

Swiss Steak: 2½ lbs. round steak—1 inch thick; 2 tablespoons fat; ½ onion; ½ cup flour; salt and pepper; ½ green pepper chopped fine; 2 cups boiling water or 1½ cups water and ½ cup Tomato Ketchup.

Add salt and pepper to the flour and pound into the meat. Brown in a skillet with the fat, then add the onion, green pepper, boiling water and Tomato Ketchup. Cover closely and simmer slowly until done. This also may be cooked in the oven in a casserole.

Braised Beef: 2 lbs. beef, round or shoulder; salt and pepper; flour; 2½ cups boiling water; fat; potatoes; 1 cup diced carrots; 1 cup diced turnips; 1 cup diced onions; 1 cup diced celery; ½ cup Tomato Ketchup.

Sprinkle beef with salt and pepper, dredge well with flour, and brown quickly in fat which has been tried out from the meat. When turning the meat, avoid piercing it with a fork, as this allows the inner juices to escape. Place in a casserole or deep pan and add diced carrots, turnips, onions and celery. Add the boiling water to Tomato Ketchup and pour two-thirds of this liquid around the meat and vegetables. Cover closely and bake about two hours in a slow oven, 325 degrees F., basting every half hour with the remaining liquid. Turn the meat over once during the cooking. During the last hour of cooking, whole potatoes should be placed around the meat and baked until tender.

Baked Ham: Spread a slice of smoked ham cut about one inch thick, with a thin layer of Prepared Mustard. Place it in a casserole and add slices of canned pineapple. Sprinkle the pineapple with sugar to give it an attractive glaze. Pour one-half cup of pineapple juice over the meat and pineapple. Cover and bake in a moderate oven for about 1½ hours. Uncover the last 20 minutes to allow the pineapple to brown.

Norwegian Custom

The Norwegian legation at Washington says that it was never the practice of Norwegians dwelling in cities in historical times to change their names with each generation, but that this practice is still continued at the present time by people in remote country districts.

Human Selfishness

Selfishness, wrote Rochefoucauld, is the grand moving principle of nine-tenths of our actions.

Species of Snowbirds

The slate-colored junco, often called the snow-bird, breeds in our northern states, and in the winter migrates south almost to the gulf of Mexico. Altogether 13 species and varieties of juncos are recognized in North America, and they are at home all the way from Alaska to Mexico and the gulf.

Old St. Augustine Still Spanish in Character

The fact that St. Augustine was already an old town before the Pilgrims landed in New England, is rarely considered in comparing the respective antiquity of these two events. Yet, to be exact, St. Augustine had been in existence 55 years when the Mayflower made its famous voyage to New England's shores. Translated into more modern terms, when Plymouth was settled in 1620, St. Augustine was already older than many of our western cities are today.

In 1645, almost a century after its foundations, St. Augustine was reported to have 800 householders besides a Franciscan monastery and a garrison. On its one hundredth anniversary St. Augustine was again visited by misfortune in the person of Captain Davis, a roving English freebooter. While the inhabitants fled to the fort for safety, he sacked the town, but failed to find much booty.

In 1784, St. Augustine again passed under Spanish dominion and continued undisturbed its dreamy existence, little affected by the events of the outside world. Although in 1821 it was embraced in the territory of the United States, it remained distinctly Spanish in character, and even today retains much of this foreign atmosphere.

Today St. Augustine is one of the most interesting historic cities of the United States, its quaint narrow streets and shaded plaza eloquent of centuries of existence. One can not visit this city without strangely feeling the romantic charm of this rich historical background.

World Owes Vast Debt to Icelandic Writers

In that strange island Iceland—burst up, the geologists say, by fire from the bottom of the sea; a wild land of barrenness and lava; swallowed many months of every year in black tempests, yet with a wild gleaming beauty in summertime; towering up there, stern and grim, in the North ocean . . . where of all places we least looked for literature or written memorials, the record of these things was written down. On the seaboard of this wild land is a rim of grassy conntry, where cattle can subsist, and men by means of them and of what the sea yields; and it seems they were poetic men these men who had deep thonghts in them, and uttered musically their thoughts. Much would be lost, had Iceland not been burst up from the sea, not been discovered by the Northmen! The old Norse poets were many of them natives of Iceland.—Thomas Carlyle in "Heroes and Hero Worship."

Archery Practice

Butt shooting is an old English term which means the same thing as target shooting. In the olden days the shooting grounds were equipped with banks of dirt, covered with sod, which formed the so-called butt. Over this sod was usually placed a piece of paper to act as a target, and the term "butt shooting" was used to distinguish it from rovers. Roving consists in shooting at various targets placed in fields at varying distances. The archers shoot from one to another, which helps develop their judgment of distances, and in the olden days meant quite a lot to the yeomen, whose business was shooting the bow and arrow, and on days when they were not fighting they were in the fields practicing roving. — Montreal Family Herald.

Diamond in History

India was the original home of the diamond as a jewel. For centuries India remained the sole source of Europe's diamond supply. About 1730 diamonds were discovered in Brazil. In 1867 diamonds were discovered in South Afrjca. South African diamonds constitute more than 90 per cent of the world's supply. From their discovery to the present time they have yielded 90,000,000 carats. The diamonds of the world probably represent a value of $5,000,00,000. There have been some diamonds found in the state of Arkansas. The Arkansas diamond mine in Pike county has produced several thousand diamonds equal in color to the best produced in other parts of the world and 1 per cent harder than the hardest from other parts of the world.

Hibernating Mosquitoes

In the higher reaches of the Rocky mountains in the northern part of Montana lives a species of mosquito that hibernates during the winter, under logs and in sheltered spots, and may be seen flying on the first warm day of spring. These mosquitos are large, with spotted wings, and often are referred to as snow mosquitoes. According to Drs. N. Kadletz and L. Kusmins, Russian scientists, these mosquitoes store up fat in the summer, as do bears, and subsist on it while dozing through the winter.

Burns the Musician

As for Burns, his genius fed upon, daily and hourly, the floating Highland airs that lived among the people. He was a musician born. Some wind would blow him a wandering line of verse, some ancient fog of a ballad, and a strain of an entrancing Celtic melody. While he drove his plow . . . he would whistle and chant till he had woven them into something that made all the world in love with him forever.—Grace Rhys in "A Celtic Anthology."

As "Man in the Street" Sees Shortage of Gold

Harvard professors are doing fine teamwork. One scares us half to death and the other comes along and reassures us. Professor Gay, at the Institute of Politics, predicted a serious gold shortage in years to come, unless there are some more strikes like Klondike and South Africa. Now Professor Carver says there is no danger. There is plenty of gold in the earth, but not all mines can be worked profitably when gold is cheap—that is, when a gold dollar purchases a small volume of commodities.

As the purchasing power of gold rises it will become profitable to go after the gold in them thar hills. Thus the economic law will operate to provide the world with what gold it requires.

Now if a third Harvard professor would tell us how to make that economic law work the same way for individuals the picture would be perfect. Speaking personally, we have long been convinced that the gold shortage started some time before we were born.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Simple Old Method of Evading Penalty of Sin

Every one unacquainted with old English customs is interested by the story of the Sin-eater in Mary Webb's novel, "Precious Bane." Sin-eaters did not constitute a religious sect. They were employed in some counties of England and in Wales in connection with funeral rites. Their office was to eat bread and drink ale which had been placed on the bier, and thus symbolically take upon themselves the sins committed by the deceased person. Having done this, the sin-eater pronounced the "ease and rest" of the dead person and asserted that to procure this he had pawned his own soul. There were not wanting men to perform this rash office, bnt it was not so rash as might appear; for the sin-eater could see to it that the same means of acquiring impunity was invoked for him at his decease, so that no matter what accumulation of sin he had made himself responsible for, the whole burden would be lifted by a subsequent sin-eater. The custom seems to have lingered in Wales until the forties of last century.—Montreal Family Herald.

Ancient Stockings

At Vienna, among the earliest coronation robes of the emperor, are a fine pair of Thirteenth-century stockings which were made for William II of Sicily. They are made of red damask in two parts, the foot and leg being joined. The leg is embroidered and the foot portions are made of plain material.

The inventories of St. Paul's in London mention Thirteenth-century stockings embroidered with roses, eagles, lions, and in the upper part, wine leaves. In museums in England, France, Germany, Italy and Hungary, many royal and pontifical stockings of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth centuries are exhibited.

Wool From Camel

Camel's hair is a textile material made of hairlike wool from a camel, generally light brown in color. The value depends upon the quality of the fibers. A good grade is very light and soft. The cloth is usually twill. The finer underhair of the camel is about one inch long and is soft and silky. The long, coarse hairs from the camel are three-fourths of an inch long. In the shearing process they cannot be separated and are baled and exported in a mixed condition. When spnn the hairs are sometimes separated but more often are woven together, giving the material the rongh, shaggy appearance.—Washington Star.

Bad All Round

Apropos of Prime Minister MacDonald's efforts to secure a world peace, a prominent manufacturer said at a meeting of the Society for Universal Peace in Pittsburgh:

"We should all lend a hand in this peace movement. We should do so not only to prevent our young men from being sacrificed, but also for our own benefit.

"Warring nations," he continued, "suffer in lives lost. We suffer in our business, our pocketbooks, and, by consequence we suffer, too, in all our luxuries and conveniences.

"In a word the fighters trench, the noncombatants retrench."

Sealskin Production

Sealskin is obtained by dressing, which necessitates the removal of the coarse water hairs which grow beyond the fur. It is accomplished by shaving down the flesh side of the skin to cut off the roots of the hair, which grow deeper than the fur. The hairs are then pulled out, and the fur, originally a rusty brown, is dyed black, the process requiring seven dippings. Both these processes are trade secrets, and they require great care and skill. Experienced and successful work at once doubles the value of the skin.

Miles of Hens

The largest poultry plant in the world, operated at Reseda, Calif., sells more than 150,000 old hens each year and maintains a flock of 500,000 hens, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The statistically minded can calculate that if these 500,000 chickens were marching in a line a foot apart, the parade would extend more than 90 miles.

Ancient Piece of Pewter

The Field museum at Chicago has what it believes to be the oldest piece of pewter in existence, a tablet found in a Chinese tomb, and inscribed with a date equivalent to A. D. 85.

Body as Well as Soul

The duty of physical health and the duty of spiritual purity and loftiness are not two duties; they are two parts of one duty—which is living the completest life which it is possible for man to live.—Phillips Brooks.

Use of Airplane Barred

The regulations under the federal migratory bird treaty act make it unlawful to hnnt migratory game birds from an airplane, and the law provides a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both, for violations.

Sagacious

Love is just a fire, and marriage is the fire department.—Collier's Weekly.

Curly-Haired Whites

The three groups of the human race are the straight-haired people, the woolly-haired people, and the curly-haired people. The white race belongs in the curly-haired group.

Usefulness of Praise

Make a great deal more of your right to praise the good than of your right to blame the bad. Never let a brave and serious struggle after truth and goodness, however weak it may be, pass unrecognized. Do not be chary of appreciation. Hearts are unconsciously hungry for it.—Phillips Brooks.

Tokens Issued to Cover Metallic Coin Shortage

Early in 1862 all metallic currency in the United States was gradually withdrawn from circulation. Many citizens anticipated the possible increase in value of all metals and began hoarding gold, silver and copper to such an extent that soon no metallic coins of any denomination were in circulation. It then became necessary for tradesmen to issue a medium that would meet the supply caused by the deficiency of government currency.

The first of these Civil war tokens appeared in Cincinnati in the fall of 1862 and began to circulate in New York in the spring of 1863. The first made in New York was the Lindenmueller currency, of which there were 1,000,000 pieces struck. Then William H. Bridgens, the die cutter, issued the Knickerbocker currency, consisting of numerous varieties and struck in large quantities. It was estimated that not less than 25,000,000 of these private tokens were issued throughout the eastern and middle western states until the government, by an act of congress in 1864, put a stop to their issue.

These little coins were usually accepted as 1 cent. The value placed on them today by collectors is 5 cents.

Shakespeare Shown as Borrower of Proverbs

Shakespeare has been given the credit for many a saying which he did not originate. Like storymakers and playwrights of this day, he undoubtedly incorporated into his dramas many a proverb and homely saying already perfectly familiar to his audiences. In the second act of "Hamlet" he makes his posturing hero say: "I am but mad north-northwest; when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw."

The connection between a bird of prey and a carpenter's tool hardly is obvious. But the fact is, Shakespeare was simply quoting a familiar proverb of his day—a corruption of a still older proverb, the sense of which was that a person could be so ignorant as not to be able to distinguish between a "hawk and a heronshaw"! Now, a heronshaw—or herneshaw, as it was sometimes spelled and pronounced—was a species of heron often preyed upon by the hunting falcons. So not to be able to tell the bird of prey from its harmless victim was an indication of stupidity, and vice versa.—Boston Transcript.

Weddings Come High

A wedding, well done, in New York costs between $50,000 and $100,000. A few items which contribute to the total: 5,000 invitations, $5,000; organist, $350 to $1,000; singer, $150 to $1,000; 300 pews properly decorated, $4,500; altar decorations bring the total to $7,500; food, $7,000; orchestra, $1,000; bridal clothes between $5,000 and $10,000; bouquet—for the bride, $100, for the attendants, $20 apiece. Attendants' costumes and gifts add a few thousands more. Fee to the minister, $500; gift to the church, perhaps $500. Smaller items: marriage license, $2; use of the church, $25; canopy, $30; tips to traffic policemen, between $25 and $150.—Exchange.

Harbor at Sea

The island of Monhegan, 20 miles off the coast of Maine, offers a charm to the nature lover. A rather limited number of tourists find their way out there during the summer, but the trip to the island would often be a difficult one were it not for the fact that there are two islands, Monhegan and Manana, and it is the presence of the latter that forms a very excellent harbor where landing may be made and freight unshipped very readily under the protection of Manana. The island is rock-bound and flower-decked with a dense forest in its center.

Weight of Diamonds

The specific gravity of the diamond is 3.52. As one cubic inch of water weighs .03617 pound, a cubic inch of diamond would weigh 3.52 times as much, or approximately .1273 pound avoirdupois, a little over 2 ounces. As diamonds are weighed by carats, a carat being equivalent to 200 milligrams, this cubic inch of diamonds would weigh about 283 carats. There have been two famous diamonds larger than this, the Cullinan, which weighed 3,025 carats, and the Tiffany, which weighed 969 carats.

Persians Popularized Polo

Polo is one of the oldest games in the world. Its original home was in ancient Persia. From there it spread to India, China, and Japan. It also spread westward and became the favorite sport of the Byzantine emperors and their courtiers. In modern times British officers in India saw its possibilities, and started playing it. The game first appeared in England in 1863, but the regular matches and tournaments on the Hurlingham club ground only date from 1874.

Pisa of Pisano

So many people make flying visits to Pisa attracted alone by the leaning tower as a phenomenal structure, forgetting that the group monuments—cathedral, baptistry and tower—are the finest possible examples of Romanesque architecture in Italy, built 800 years ago by Nicola Pisano and his son, Giovanni—both such masterpieces of sculpture that every artist for the last 500 or 600 years with aspirations to carve in stone or wood has studied them.

Naturalized Briton Not Looked Upon With Favor

So far from wanting foreign residents to become Englishmen, we Britons discourage naturalization, Theodore Maynard writes, in the American Mercury. Englishmen, like poets, are born, not made; and if Frenchmen or Germans or Americans insist on renouncing their own nationality, well, that is their own affair, but they cannot expect us to be anything but suspicious of their motives.

Indeed, we narrowly regard our fellow subjects of foreign extraction, or with foreign connections. I have often heard Ford Madox Ford (whose name was once Hueffer) referred to as "that German fellow"; and Wilfrid Scawen Blunt once said acidulously to a friend of mine: "How is it that the two best known Sussex poets happen to be a Breton born at Versailles and a babu born at Bombay?"

Blunt for all his eccentricity and his wanderings in Arabia, remained very much the English squire; and the fact that about one-quarter of Belloc's blood was French and that Kipling (though of pure English stock) was brought up in India, prevented him regarding either of them as true blue.

Origin of Lamp Veiled in Mists of Antiquity

Authorities on the subject say the origin of the lamp is unknown. S. E. Spicer writes in the Cincinnati Enquirer. It is known, however that lamps were in use 6,000 years ago, for the excavations of the ancient cities of Babylonia and other countries of the East yield many specimens indicating that they were in common use there at that time.

At first lamps probably were made of clay and dried in the sun. Then, in the passing of the centuries they were made of iron, tin, copper, bronze, brass, glass, alabaster and other materials. In Rome and Greece, where the fine arts reached a high degree of accomplishment, lamps were fashioned in great beauty of form and variety of detail and were used for decorative as well as utility purposes. The spread of the Roman empire carried these lamps with it to the remote corners of the earth and they became known by the nation in which they originated. Eventually some of them came to America with the Pilgrims.

Moon Superstitions

The moon was in ancient times an object of worship and has remained to the present day the center of many superstitions. The times for sowing seed, gathering herbs, killing animals for food, taking particular medicines and treating various diseases were all regulated by the phases of the moon. Modern science has studied this supposed influence with generally negative results in regard to crops, weather, etc. The superstition about the moon affecting sanity is perpetuated in the name "lunatic," from the name of the moon, Luna. This is an old belief, as shown in the line of a Seventeenth-century English play, "When the moon's in the full, then wit's in the wine."

Excavating Old Germany

Digging in Germany might prove a profitable pastime. Within one week a householder of Marlonburg dug up a keg of 607 silver coins of 1623-6, which were probably buried during the 30 years' war; a tourist discovered the skeleton of a bear in a cave near Karlsruhe, where none have been seen for 300 years; graves of ancient Celts have been found with bones five thousand years old; at Konigsberg the oldest find was a stone ax dropped there before the glaciers came down over Europe 8,000 years ago; under the altar of Speyer cathedral the stone sarcophagus of an early Christian saint was brought to light.

They Had Company

Billy spent a week with his grandparents in the country. While playing in the back yard he noticed a hive which contained bees and, being of an investigative turn, he picked up a stick and began to pound on it. Immediately hundreds of bees rushed out and little Billy was severely stung. When reprimanded by his grandmother and questioned why he did such a thing, he replied:

"I knocked on the door to see if there was anybody at home and I think they had company, grandmother."

Eggs-actly!

Marie always spent Thursdays with grandma, where she had a wonderful time because she always had her own way.

One evening when big brother Harry came as usual to take her home, she set up a mighty tumult. Grandma, in order to quiet her, gave her an egg to take to mother.

When they were outside, Harry said: "Aren't you ashamed of yourself to act like that at grandma's?"

But Marie said, calmly, "Well, I got the egg, didn't I?"

Finally "Beautified"

Several Pittsburgh clubwomen are enjoying a snicker at the way of the world. For two years they campaigned in a futile effort to have certain vacant lots around the town beautified. And the other day a tour of the places they had marked for improvement revealed that every one was wearing the swell scenery of a miniature golf course.

Blue-Blooded Virginians

The "F. F. V.s" are the descendants of those who came to Virginia in a superior capacity previous to 1620.

Early Timber Conservation

Our early colonial history is replete with laws and regulations looking toward forest protection. As settlement spread these primitive forest codes became more widely established. At such an early date as 1626 we find the Plymouth colony passing an ordinance restricting the export of timber from their region.

Indians Dislike Whiskers

Side whiskers are usually absent on the American Indian, but he would have a slight mustache and some beard if he didn't pull them out as fast as they begin to grow. Often the Indian warrior, while sitting by the campfire, would run his hands over his cheek and chin in search of hairs and pull them out by the roots. It is almost a religion with the Indian to have a smooth face.

Communistic Ants

The lives and habits of ants show that these tiny creatures have gifts rivaling any of those possessed by human beings. In warfare especially they exhibit wonderful powers of organization. Every ant has his own duty to perform, and each insect helps its comrade.

Food Preservation

The earliest food preservation was practiced by hunters who dried, smoked and salted meats and fish, while others preserved milk in the form of cheese and grape juice in the form of wine. Primitive man probably is entitled to small credit for the discovery of wine making, since nature coats the grape hulls with yeast cells which seize upon the first opportunity to start fermentation when the skin of the grape is broken.—Exchange.

Concerning Dreams

Dreams are not, as a rule, anything to worry about. But if one has nightmares regularly, and a change in habits—such as cutting out late suppers or exciting reading last thing at night—fails to stop them, it may be as well to see a doctor. Dreams may be a warning—though not in the dream-book sense. They do sometimes reveal weak points in the constitution, or the presence of disease, when the dreamer suspects nothing wrong.

Football Reminiscence

The first football game played in the old Rose bowl at Pasadena, Calif., was on January 1, 1902, between Michigan and Stanford. The score was 49 to 0 in favor of Michigan. The first game in the present Rose bowl was played on New Year's day, 1922.

Bribery's Toll

Business men compute the annual toll of commercial bribery at $1,000,000,000 throughout the United States. It is known to amount to $100,000,000 in New York city alone.

Causes of Modern War

President Wilson said: "The seed of war in the modern war is industrial and commercial rivalry. This war (the "World war"), was a commercial and industrial war. It was not a political war." It was part of a speech made at St. Louis September 5, 1919, and conveyed Mr. Wilson's idea that the desire for commercial and industrial advantage bred jealousies and strife which culminated in war.

Mount Rainier was named for Admiral Rainier of the British navy by Vancouver, the navigator, who saw it from Puget sound in 1793. It is also known by the Indian name of Tacoma peak.

African's Immunity

Although he seems to lead a carefree existence, the life of the East African native is not a joy unalloyed, but scientific investigation has recently shown that he is entirely immune from the ravages of scarlet fever and diphtheria. Efforts to plant the germs in his system failed.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Tragic Secrets Known to City Dealers in Art

One of the fascinating traditions of the art business—the buying and selling of paintings in particular—is that now and then old masters actually do turn up in second-hand shops and in auction sales, and are discovered and retrieved at a fraction of their real value.

But George W. Keeler, now retired, reveals another side of the business. He says:

"One learns to keep secrets in this business. The auctioneer often opens closets which hold old family skeletons. But he must not tell. I was alone in the store one afternoon when a poor old woman, aged—the wreck of womanhood—stumbled in. Dissipation had ruined once beautiful features. She was ragged and grimy from head to foot. She begged for a dime and as she did so her gaze fell upon a large old portrait of a beautiful girl dressed in the height of a long past fashion. She stood like a stone image for a second or two, then screamed like a mad thing. It was her own portrait she was gazing at, the picture of herself as a beautiful young girl, in a happy home, the center of a brilliant social life. She fainted and I called an ambulance and had her sent to a hospital. Before she died she told me her real name, and her family history, a family I knew a great deal about. That is one of the secrets I shall always keep."

Mark Twain's Reactions to Church Choir Music

Evidently my father, Mark Twain, attended church faithfully during the period of his engagement to my mother (Olivia Langdon), but not always with true religious feeling, as the following letter shows:

"Livy darling:

"I attended church this morning in a warm drizzling rain. It was the West and boyhood brought back again, vividly. It was as if 25 years had fallen away from me like a garment and I was a lad of eleven again in my Missouri village church of that ancient time.

"The choir hurled its soul into a 'voluntary'—one of those things where the melodeon pumps and strains and groans and wails a bit, and then the soprano pipes a reedy solo, the alto drops in a little after, then the bass bursts in, then the pealing tenor—then a grand discordant confusion that sets one's teeth on edge—and finally a triumphant 'Oh, praise the Lo-r-d!' in a unison of unutterable anguish—and the crime is consummated. It was Herod's slaughter of the babes set to music.

"The missionary appeal concluded, the sexton and the deacon went around, while the choir wailed, and collected 70 cents for the carrying of glad tidings of great joy to the lost souls of Father India."—Clara Clemens in the North American Review.

German Philosophy

The Spengierian theory of nations refers to the philosophy developed by the German writer Oswald Spengler in his book, "The Decline of the West," written before the World war and appearing just after it. This book views civilization as the coming war would find it. It is a German philosophy which attempts the venture of predetermining history, of following the still unraveled stages in the destiny of a culture and specifically of the only culture of our time and on our planet which is actually in the phase of fulfillment—the west European-American. It also attempts to describe the comparative morphology of world history.

"Snuffing in the Shrubbery"

Freud in the garden of this world—this place that has moved poets to such hymns in praise of it that we echo their praises if only to give ourselves the grace of fittingness to the garden—Freud in this palace of natural delight where never a day breaks but the heavens burst into blossom and never a night falls but somewhere indescribable beauty greets the eyes of men—Freud, who has brought us keys to open fresh doors of the palace that stands in this garden, is himself like a creature going hideously on all fours, snuffing about amid the shrubbery.—Max Plowman in the Adelphi London.

Heat Appeals to Fungi

Temperatures that ordinary animals and plants could not endure for more than short periods are built up and apparently enjoyed by the fungi that breed in piles of rotting straw. Experiments at the Rothamstead experimental station near London show that these organisms of decay thrive best at a temperature of about 130 degrees Fahrenheit, which is more than halfway from freezing to boiling point. These fungi, it has been found, do more than the bacteria often found associated with them toward the reduction of straw to a soil-enriching fertilizer resembling farmyard manure.

Ancient Worms

Completely mummified worms, millions of years older than the mummies at the Pharaohs, are on exhibit in the Feld museum, Chicago. Having been imbedded in shaley rock, it goes without saying that they existed when the rock was formed. Ordinarily soft-bodied creatures decompose quickly, so such ancient worm fossils are immensely interesting to zoologists. They reveal facts regarding times before backbones were developed.

Safeguard

When merit has been achieved, do not take it to yourself; for if you do not take it to yourself, it shall never be taken from you.—Lao Tzu.

Penalty for Great Work

He who would do some great thing in this short life must apply himself to the work with such a concentration of his forces as to idle spectators, who live only to amuse themselves, looks like insanity.—Foster.

Dangerous Life Period

Matrimony's most dangerous period is about the twenty-fifth year, declares a German expert, who adds that many of the belated marriage tragedies occur because husband or wife becomes too devoted to the children and neglect the other partner.

Words Can't Describe Good Karnak Did Me

"I just know there is nobody in all the world happier than I about this wonderful medicine, Karnak. I have taken all kinds of medicines and treatments in the past ten years trying to get some relief from my suffering, but nothing helped me until I began Karnak.

"Oh, how I suffered with stomach trouble. Why, I was almost a nervous wreck from it. I had no appetite to speak of, food just didn't have any taste to me. But even though I would only eat the lightest kind of things, I would suffer just the same.

"I had just lost all my strength and at times I would feel so weak I could hardly walk across the room.

"I was so nervous and restless I couldn't get any sleep to amount to anything, and in the morning I could hardly drag myself out of bed. It began to look mighty blue for me, but Karnak has changed everything. It is too grand for words."

OBITUARY

Mrs. Elizabeth Catherine Logemann, beloved wife of Clyde Logemann, and the youngest of seven daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Tobe McCarty, departed this life Jan. 16th 1931, aged 26 years.

Her father and oldest sister Mrs. Devona Sullivan, and one little infant sister having preceded her in death several years ago.

She leaves behind her beloved husband and one son Clyde Junior, her mother and step-father Mr. and Mrs. Pete Batchelor and four sisters, Mrs. Alta McMullen, Mrs. Carrie Popham, Mrs. Barbara Lambert and Mrs. Josephine Holt and a host of friends and loved ones to mourn her death, but their loss is her gain. she having made peace with God on January 15th and accepted the Savior.

The depth of sorrow we cannot tell of the loss of one we loved so well, and while she sleeps peaceful sleep her memory we shall always keep.

TRUCKS HAULING WATER

Trucks have been engaged during the past week in relieving the water famine in many parts of the county. Burlington people have replenished their cisterns this week, some of them for the third time. The supplies at court house and the jail also have been augmented with several loads, the water coming from the government well at Lock 38, McVille, and from Erlanger.

At a meeting of a group of Burlington citizens held at the Peoples Deposit Bank on Monday night of last week J. W. Kelly was authorized to collect the same amount that he collected from each local subscriber to the street light fund last year. At last reports he wasmeeting with comparative success.

Stanley Ryle, who was very ill for several weeks, has greatly improved and reports that he has gained 18 pounds since he started on the upgrade.

Ransom Ryle, who is regarded as one of the best tobacco handlers in this section, was bemoaning the frightful drop in the market while in this office on Tuesday afternoon. "Rannie" usually commands the top price, but this year it was different, he says. His half of a 1,700 pound crop netted him $30.39 and that runs up another story. Last spring a neighbor presented Mr. Ryle's daughter with two scrawny little pigs, neither of which was accorded a chance to live by Mr. Ryle. But the pigs did live and were sold recently and brought more money than Mr. Ryle's part of his tobacco crop, which gives Mr. Ryle's daughter the laugh on him.

A meeting of any and all persons interested in fitting the needy of Boone county with clothing has been called for Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The meeting will be held at the court house where the making over of old clothing will be discussed. Everybody is urged to attend.

Boone county fox hunters who have radios missed a vivid description of a fox hunt, if they were not on the air for the K. F. D. hour last Sunday at 5:30 P. M. The hunt occured in Boone County many years ago and was described by "Boss" Johnson, Aurora, Indiana, sportsman, who is master of ceremonies on this program. Boone County hunters, who Mr. Johnson said were in the chase included: N. S. Walton, Will Berkshire, Podge Alloway, George Batchelor, Ed. and Will Botts, Alf Whitlock and several others. Old Trump, owned by Will Berkshire, won the chase, according to Mr Johnson.

A letter from Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Glass, Millville Ohio, states that their son Joseph A. Glass, who was mustered out of the U. S. Navy in October after four years of honorable service, is now associated with the Delhi Auto Supply Co., of 6326 Lower River Road, Cincinnati. Young Mr. Glass is well known among the younger folks of this section as he formerly attended school at both Limaburg and Hebron when his parents were residents of this county several years ago. Joseph was a constant reader of the Recorder while on board the U. S. S. Mississippi on which vessel he spent the greater part of his time while in the naval service.

The American Legion minstrel troupe will appear at Belleview on Friday night of this week. This show has been given in no less than five communities in Boone county as well as Erlanger, and each audience has been highly pleased. Members of the legion urgently request the citizens of Belleview and surrounding communities to come out and lend them their support.

In all probability this will be the last show this troupe will give. The admission is 25 and 35 cents.

SEED LOAN

NOW AVAILABLE TO BOONE COUNTY FARMERS — RULES AND RESTRICTIONS GOVERNING LOANS OUTLINED—COMMITTEE SERVES WITHOUT COMPENSATION

The $25,000,000 Federal Seed Loan is available to Boone county farmers immediately, according to County Agent H. R Forkner. The loans may be secured by applying to the county loan committee composed of C. L Cropper, Burlington, chairman; Hubert Conner, Hebron; and Wilfred H. Rice, Walton. All loans must be passed upon by the above committee.

There are certain fixed restrictions as to who is eligible to secure these loans. A few of the regulations governing the loans are; 1. Only farmers who can not secure loans to finance their crops from any other source are eligible. 2. The applicant must have farmed in 1930. 3 Farming must be the only source of income. 4. While the loan is a relief measure it must be paid back and the note will bear interest from the time it is issued until paid. 5. A chattel mortgage must be given on all crops grown in 1931. 6 The maximum amount that can be loaned per acre for seed and fertilizer is $7.00 per acre for corn, oats etc., $25.00 per acre for truck crops and $10.00 per acre for certain other crops while the maximum amount for tractor fuel and oil is $2.50 per acre.

Farmers who have exhausted all other means of financing their crops for 1931 should investigate this loan. Farmers who can secure credit from their banks or local agencies will find it both profitable [illegible] to do so at this [illegible] getting [illegible] cured from the county committee the county agent [illegible] at inside the next few days from all banks of the county.

A word in reference to the County Loan Committee is advisable at the present time. This committee was selected by the Federal Government because of their understanding of local conditions and their ability to get together and give honest consideration to those farmers who will need the loan. They receive no pay whatsoever for their time, traveling expense, postage or compensation in any form except in the line of patriotic duty to serve the county in time of need. Those farmers who make applications are requested to keep this point in mind and cooperate to the fullest extent in this work.

MRS. ORA B. PRESSER
Teacher

Mark Cook, who was elected as manager of the Florence branch of the Farm Bureau at the annual election of the board of directors in January, has resigned and the vacancy filled by James G Smith, of Burlington, who held the same position several years ago. Edson Maurer is filling Mr. Smith's place as U. S. carrier from Erlanger to Florence and Burlington.

Arthur Jones, of the East Bend road, is sporting a new Chevrolet coupe. It might be well to keep a close watch on Arthur—for a while, anyway.

Mrs. C. B. Maxwell has been ill several days the past week.

Shall Burlington Continue To Have Street Lights In 1931?

For the past week a solicitor has been canvassing the town trying to make up the necessary amount $400 to pay for the street lights for the coming year.

To date this amount is far short and unless the necessary amount is forthcoming at once the lights will have to be TURNED OFF AND THE FUNDS COLLECTED RETURNED to those who have contributed as no part of the funds collected can be used until the whole sum is placed in the bank.

Some who have been solicited have promised to pay, but to date have failed to do so, and it is very important that they leave the money at the bank this week.

Those who have been solicited and have refused to pay any thing should reconsider and lend a helping hand if we are to have street lights.

Those who have refused to pay the full amount assessed and have contributed a lesser amount should reconsider and contribute their share the same as all others as it is not fair to expect some one else to pay their part which they refuse to pay.

WHAT SAY YOU CITIZENS OF BURLINGTON?

TWO NATIONAL HOLIDAYS OCCUR IN THIS MONTH

Thursday February 12th is Lincoln's Birthday and February 22nd is Washington's Birthday but as business houses will observe the 23rd on account of the 22nd falling on Sunday.

The Peoples Deposit Bank will be closed on both of the above dates the 12th and 23rd

Mr. and Mrs. Cad Sullivan have purchased the one-half interest of Woodie Sullivan, Jr., in the Woodford Sullivan property in Petersburg and expect to improve it for rental.

Members of the local M. E. church are soliciting food and old clothing for destitute families and request that all donations be left with Elmer Kirkpatrick, county jailer, at the court house. They have several families on their list in dire need of assistance and urgently request help be forthcoming.

W. F. Bradford was a Burlington visitor last Monday. Mr. Bradford is now representing the Richmond [illegible] and is taking orders throughout this territory. Mr. Bradford is a very affable gentleman, of wide acquaintance in this section, and thoroughly acquainted with the clothing business.

Mr. and Mrs. B H. Berkshire, of Petersburg, spent several days this week with R. E. Berkshire and family.

The Boone County Board of Education was in session here on Monday of this week.

PRICES SLASHED IN BIG RUG AND LINOLEUM SALE

The annual February clearance sale of the Independent Linoleum and Carpet Company, 521 Madison Avenue, Covington, starts Monday February 16, and will continue for twelvetwelve day. This is one of the most looked for retailing selling events of Northern Kentucky as this concern's February Clearance is synonymous of unusual values in all types of floor covering.

The Independent Linoleum and Carpet Co. was started on West Pike Street, Covington 10 years ago, by William Miller, a life long resident of Kentucky. Four years ago he disposed of his Pike Street store and opened the store now operating at 531 Madison Ave.

Miller confines his retail activities to floor covering exclusively, and is considered one of the most expert carpet and floor covering men about Cincinnati. He has just returned from a business trip to the eastern market where he made a tremendous purchase of rugs, linoleums, and floor covering at the new low price level. According to his report upon his return, wholesale prices have reached the bottom level and that he will offer values in this sale that have not been possible in the last 12 years.

His confidence in the value knowledge of Kentuckians is expressed in his purchase of several car loads of various types of floor covering, which will be included in this February Clearance Sale.

Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Aylor and Henry Siekman and family enjoyed the day last Sunday as the guests of Paul Craven and family in Latonia.

EQUALIZERS

IN SESSION THIS WEEK—GREAT NUMBER OF COMPLAINANTS BEING HEARD — SHRINKAGE IN VALUE OF STOCKS CAUSES LOSS IN TOTAL ASSESSMENT IN BOONE

The annual meeting of the Boone County Board of Equalization was called to order Monday morning by Chairman Hubert Conner.

Others members of the Board, all of whom were present, included Jno. Myers, Verona, Hugh Stephens, Rabbit Hash, Al Rogers, Belleview, B. H. Berkshire, Petersburg, and W. B. Johnson, Walton.

The board was confronted with a grave dilemma from the very outset, as notification had been received from the State Tax Commission that the taxable value of Boone county properties, as shown by the 1930 assessment, had decreased some two hundred thousand dollars

"Of this amount however, only about twenty-one thousand dollars was due to a decrease in real estate assessments, the remainder having been caused by the drop in the values of various stocks owned by Boone county citizens.

In spite of the fact that the assessed value of Boone county property was already low, the board was visited by more complainants than in any recent year. During the first two days some forty owners of real estate came before the equalizers pleading for a lowering of their assessments.

The increase in the number of complaints was attributed to the general depressed condition of the country and the recent continued drop in all farm products.

EXTRA PERIOD

NECESSARY TO GAIN DECISION IN BURLINGTON—DRY RIDGE GAME—LOCAL FIVE SHOWS PLUCK AND SKILL TO COME FROM BEHIND TO WIN

In one of the hardest fought games of the season on the Covington Y court the Burlington Baptists handed an overtime defeat to the strong Dry Ridge five last Saturday evening.

The Dry Ridge team has been christened the "hard luck" five of the league on account of the fact that they have lost several games this season by one and two point margins to the toughest quintets in the organization, including a one point defeat, after two extra periods, to the league leading Ludlow Methodists.

The Burlington five was accorded a bare chance to win this game, but displayed some very fast floor work and exceptional sharpshooting to turn the trick. They took an early lead, but lost it before the end of the first half and were trailing 12-7 at the rest period. They rallied during the second half, however, and tied the score in the last few seconds of play when "Huck" Stephens tossed a free throw. Score at half 18 to 18.

In the overtime period Hickman, Maurer, Stephens and Lamb made four beautiful shots from long and difficult angles, while Dry Ridge was being held to one foul throw. While the game developed no outstanding star, yet the general improvement of the Burlington team work was noted by both interested and disinterested followers. Final score 26 to 19.

FIRST LADY

TO HOLD STATE OFFICE ENTERS RACE TO SUCCEED LEITCHFIELD WOMAN AS SECRETARY OF STATE—HAS BEEN TREASURER FOR PAST FOUR YEARS

Mrs. Emma Guy Cromwell has announced her candidacy for Secretary of State, subject to action of the Democratic party. Mrs. Cromwell is the first woman ever to hold an elective state office in Kentucky. She gained that distinction in 1923, when she was elected Secretary of State, the office to which she aspires to return. For the past four years she has been State Treasurer.

In making her announcement Mrs. Cromwell said:

For the past eight years I have given my entire time and thought to the public affairs of my State and believe I have contributed something to promoting its welfare. Being the first of my sex to hold a State office in Kentucky I will be pardoned for referring to the record of my conduct as a public official of which I am very proud. My work as Secretary of State was arduous but most interesting to me and I left that office with its every record and filing system in splendid condition. Going from that office to the post of Treasurer of the Commonwealth I have been afforded the opportunity to accusaint myself with the public finances. I have safeguarded the money of the taxpayers entrusted to my care and invite you to study my handling of this important arm of the government.

My service as a State official carried with it membership on the State Sinking Fund Commission, composed of the five leading officers headed by the Governor, and this has brought me in direct touch with all executive matters of the State. I have co-operated with these officers in everything helpful and worth while.

"I feel that I am well equipped for still further service of a public character and that the men and women of Kentucky will stand behind me in my ambition to go on in what I am doing. I can promise them to stay on the job as closely as I have in the past and render my best service to the State. I shall endeavor to see as many of my friends as possible between this and the time chosen for the convention or primary election."

MRS. CLIFTON VORIS HERE

R. E. Berkshire and family enjoyed a very refreshing treat Sunday afternoon, when they were visited by Mrs. Clifton Voris of Tulsa, Oklahoma, who was prevailed upon to render a number of very beautiful selections, which she did in her own insurpassable style. Mrs. Voris, who formerly was Miss Lendyll Alloway, of Petersburg, was accompanied on her visit to Kentucky by her husband, formerly of Rising Sun, Ind., and her daughter, Miss Wilhelmina. Mrs. Voris has been trained under the most competent vocalists available and her voice has been heard many times over station KVOO and from which station she will again be heard frequently after March 1, of this year. She was accompanied Sunday afternoon by her father Arthur (Podge) Alloway, and Mrs. Alloway, Mrs E. S. Lamkin, and Misses Essie Almarine Hensley and Iva Mae Burcham, of Belleview.

CARR CREEK GAME OFF

News has reached this office that the Walton Bear Cats will not play the famous Carr Creek team on the date announced last week, or at all, due to a change in the schedule of the Creekmen. The Walton management regrets very much that they made such an announcement, but wish to have it stated that the cancellation is thru no fault of theirs.

The Bear Cats and Bearettes will play East Night High, of Cincinnati, at Walton, Friday night, February 13th, and will take on the fast and furious Dayton fives on the Walton court on Tuesday night, February 17.

The Bear Cats have made rapid improvement during the past few weeks and showed some classy basketball when they handed a decisive defeat to the Owenton team last Saturday night.

School Notes

The Burlington High School basket ball teams played a double header last week with the Covington Y. M. C. A. teams. On Wednesday nite the Tomcats and Kittens played the Covington and on Friday night the Y. M. C. A. teams came to Burlington for two games. The Kittens losing each of their games by a close score. Wednesday night, they lost by a score of 21 to 16 In the first half they were able to get only 5 points but in the last half they got started Phillips making 6 points. Akins, Arnold and L. Ryle making good showing, each making one or two points. Wohrley, forward for the "Y" girls made 12 of their 21 points. On Friday night the Kittens fought hard but went down to a defeat of 26-22. The Kittens making several good plays, and in the last half with the score tied 22-22, it appeared as if the Kittens were going to win this game but Buckshorn, a forward for the "Y" girls got started and dropped them through the basket from all angles. When the game ended the score was "Y" 26 Burlington 22. The Tomcats played one of the fastest games they have played this year, and the first overtime period this season last Wednesday night with the "Y" boys. In the first half the "Y" boys were leading with 11 points while the Tomcats had only 9 points, but in the last half the Tomcats came back like a house one fire.

With score tied 17 to 17 and three minutes to play, one of the Covington boys made a crip shot which made the score 19 to 17, but Stephens made a crip and tied the score again. The game ended with the score tied which called for an overtime period. With the score 19 to 19 Duncan made a crip for the "Y" boys making the score 19 to 21, then Ogden for the Tomcats was fouled and had two free shots, making them both, and tying the score 21 to 21. J. Wilkinson the standing guard for the Tomcats, found an opening and dribbled down the court for a crip, making two points more. The whistle blew, ending the game 23 to 21 in favor of Tomcats. On Friday night the Tomcats won the game from the Covington boys by a score of 17 to 15. On next Friday night Feb 13th, you will find the Tomcats and Kittens on the Mason High School floor where they challenge the Grant co. teams for two games. We will see you at Mason.

Friday afternoon from 2:30 to 3:15 the Girl Reserve Club was given a "pal" party by their advisor, Miss Cubbage. We had a program. After that refreshments were served and each one presented her pal with a present, which was all very nicely done. We all went away hoping that next month all of us may have a pal and by the end of the term we hope that all may have been pals.

The negative debating team will meet the Florence affirmative on Wednesday night at 7:00 o'clock at the I. O. O. F. Hall at Florence. Wilma Cotton, Harold Kelly Clore and Marvin Moore are the members of the team.

We were visited by a man from Covington last Tuesday who gave us a very fine lecture on how smoking is injurious to our health. He illustrated the lecture with slides which were quite profitable.

7th and 8th Grades

A program will be given by the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th grades Wednesday February 18th.

Betty and Wallace Lucas were absent from school Monday.

We were very glad to welcome Vera McClure, who entered the 7th grade last Monday morning.

Anna Mae Lenhoff is attending Hebron school now. We were very sorry to have her leave us.

Our program Friday will be given by Mrs. Neikirk.

GRADES TO GIVE PROGRAM

On Wednesday evening, February 18th, at 7:30 pupils of the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th grades of Burlington school will give a program in the high school auditorium. The program will consist of several one act comedies, which are being coached by Prof. and Mrs. C. G. Lamb, teachers of the four above named grades. The admission will be 15 and 25c.

DIFFICULTIES

My little tailor came to the office to measure me for a new suit of clothes.

He looked tired. It had not been such a good winter. The American people are either away up or away down in their thinking and their spending. While the stock market was boiling they bought lots of clothes. But they stopped very suddenly, so the little tailor said.

I wondered what a tailor thinks about. It must be monotonous life going around and measuring men, sewing up suits and trying them on, and bring them over, and listening to a good deal of grumbling.

"Do you find life worth living?" I asked him.

His face brightened. "It keeps me interested."

"Put what are your pleasures," I persisted. What gives you a thrill?

"Well, one thing I get quite a bit of excitement in overcoming my difficulties."

He went on to tell me about his difficulties, and as he talked I felt reverence for that little tailor and a certain amount of shame for myself. How much less he has than I have. But no complaining, no self-pity, no temptation to surrender. He is playing a game in which difficulties are his opponents, and every day, in his modest fashion, he wins some victor.

When I was in Chicago a couple of years ago they told me about the late T. F. Merseles who left the presidency of Montgomery Ward & Company to become the president of Johns Manville. Why did he do it? He had all the money he could possibly use. Why should a man of sixty give up something which was going smoothly to tackle a new situation,

"Money had nothing to do with it," one of his former associates told me. "He called us in one day and said: "Boys, I think I have this job licked. So I'll just say good-bye. I'm going where there are some problems.

Many a man makes himself unhappy, I think, because he regards his difficulties as some special affliction for which Fate has singled him out.

Difficulties are as much a part of the program of life as the pleasures. You're certain to have them. The only question is, how will you regard them? —As afflictions?

Or as a part of the game—like Herseles and the little tailor?

The Family Garden

THE VEGETABLE SEED LIST
(By John S. Gardner, Ky., College of Agriculture)

With the seed requirements worked out, the next step in the planning of a garden is selecting the varieties of vegetables to go into it. On opening a seed catalogue a gardener is struck with the array of names. Even after reading the descriptions, there may be still confusion as to what varieties to select, for so many of the varieties seem alike. Then, too there are the specialities, whose only difference from standard varieties seems to be that they are more glowingly described.

Special varieties are, for the most part, actually superior, but a gardener who is not in position to do much experimenting should choose them cautiously, certainly not unless they are offered by more than one seedsman, or by the same seedsman for at least two years. Best, is to stick to the better known sorts.

Varieties should be chosen to do what it is intended they should do. For example, some varieties of beans will be ready for the table earlier than some others. Since earliness is important, at least one planting should be made of early beans, even though their quality may not be as good as that of some of the slower sorts. The same is true of tomatoes.

The following list gives the names of varieties that have done well in Kentucky; where more than one is given, they are given in the order of their earliness

Head lettuce, May King, Wonderful; leaf lettuce, Simpson, Grand Rapids; summer lettuce, Paris White Cos; spinach, Long Season, King of Denmark; summer spinach, New Zealand; Golden self-bleaching, Winter Queen; cabbage, Jersey Wakefield Copenhagen Market, Succession; yellows-resistant cabbage, Iacone, Marion Market; cauliflower, Snowball; chinese cabbage, Wong Bok; cucumbers, Long Green; cantaloupes, Netted Gem, Tip Top; watermelons, Kleckley, Stone Mountain; summer squash, white scalloped, Golden Summer Crookneck; winter squash, White Cushaw, Table Queen, Hubbard; pepper, Ruby Giant, Pimento Cayenne; red tomatoes, Earliana, Bonny Best Greater Baltimore, pink tomatoes, Globe, Betuty, Ponderosa; wilt-resistant tomatoes, Break O'Day, Marglobe; radishes, White Tipped Turnip, Lady Finger; beets, Crosby's Egyptian; late beets, Detroit Red, carrots, Chantenay Model; table turnips, Purple Top, Straw Leaf, White Globe; parsnip, Guernsey; salsify, Sandwich Island Mammoth; onions, "Yellow" Globe, "Red" Seta, Bermuda or Crystal Silverskin Slips; sweet corn, Extra Early Adams, Whipple's Yellow, Howling Mob, Stowell's Evergreen; roasting ear corn, Pearl Johnson County, Hickory King.

ATTRACTIVE WAYS TO SERVE RAW CABBAGE

At this season it is often hard to supply a variety of raw vegetables for the table. Cabbage, however, is always to be had, and there are many attractive ways in which it may be served so the family will not tire of it. Miss Florence Imlay of the College of Agriculture, University staff of Kentucky says that some of the following salad combinations may be new:

Cabbage, grated carrot, onion.

Cabbage, apple, celery and nuts.

Cabbage, raisins and celery seed.

Cabbage and shredded salmon or tuna fish.

Cabbage, bananas and marshmallows.

Cabbage, pineapple, white grapes and marshmallows.

The secret of making good cabbage salad is to have the cabbage shredded very finely.

The following cream dressing is quickly made and good with cabbage and other vegetable or fruit combinations.

Quick Cream Dressing—One-half cup of sweet cream, 1 tablespoon of sugar, ½ teaspoon of salt, 3 tablespoons of vinegar and ½ teaspoon of celery seed. Add sugar, salt and celery to cream and slowly add vinegar, beating constantly. This is a good dressing to use with slaw.

Dutch Cabbage Slaw—Three cups of shredded cabbage, 1 small onion, 6 thin slices of bacon, ¼ cup of vinegar, 3 tablespoons of sugar, and ¾ teaspoon of salt. Shred cabbage, add diced onion, sugar and salt. Cut bacon in small pieces and fry until crisp. Pour off all but three tablespoons of the hot fat. Add vinegar to the fat and bacon and pour over slaw. Serve at once.

THREE KINDS OF FARMERS

One of the drawbacks to any discussion of the farmer and his problems is the uncertainty as to what sort of farming is under discussion. There are three different types of farmer, and in almost every part of thee United States all three are to be found side by side.

The most widely-distributed type is what may be called the "non-commercial" farmer, the great group with whom farming is not so much a business as a mode of living. This type raises no considerable amount of any one "money crop," but grows on his own land the means of subsistence for his family and, counting out the eggs, butter or other marketable produce traded in town for store goods, handles very little cash in the course of a year.

The group of farmers who are specialists, "one crop" farmers, is probably the largest numerically and in acreage under fence. They are business men, in the broad sense, producing nothing but a single commodity which they sell or hope to sell for money, and growing nothing, or almost nothing, which they themselves consume. The single crop may be cotton, tobacco, wheat, corn, oranges, apples, celery or potatoes, depending upon location. Dependent upon their money returns from the single cash crop for everything which they eat and wear, these are the first to feel the effects of a general business depression and are constantly at the mercy of competition and over-production in their staple crops. This is the type of farmer at whose relief most of the political remedies for agricultural ills are aimed.

The happiest farmers are the third class, those whose farming operations combine those of the other two. They live off the soil and can continue to live independently and comfortably year in and year out, except for natural castrophes such as floods or drought. They grow enough of one or more cash crops to figure as important factors in the product markets, but failure in any one year to cash in on such crops or livestock does not reduce them to penury or plunge them into debt.

For forty years and more the U. S. and the various State departments of Agriculture, as well as the agricultural colleges have been preaching the gospel of diversified farming in the one-crop regions. Every once in a while some natural or economic disaster drives the one-crop farmers of a district into diversification, and the result is always greater prosperity and stability, not only for the farmer but for all the people of his district or state.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR
By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

THE SKIN PUZZLE

An old anecdote has it that a society lady at her bridge game, asked her partner, who was a young "skin specialist," why he chose that branch of medical profession for his life work—such a perplexing sort of diseases, his reply was, "well—those cases never get me out at night, they never die,—and, they never get well."

My outstanding case today was a very aggravating case of eczema. A young farmer who came from a place about fifty miles away. I treated him for a similar attack, five years ago, with good success, hence his return after about one month of suffering; he was half-mad from the terrible itching. I assume that this will interest such of my readers as have had experience with skin afflictions.

Eczema is the outstanding skin disease—if we are to judge by the frequency of patients with skin trouble. If one doesn't know his diagnosis very well, he will be correct nine times out of ten by calling it "a form of eczema."

Of course, the thing the patient demands relief; he doesn't care two whoops about the looks of the thing —he wants the itching stopped—the sooner the better! And so would you, dear reader.

First and foremost, remove ALL sources of irritation. A coarse suit of underwear will render relief impossible, no matter what the treatment. I once compelled a lady to stop wearing a fur boa, who had an intense eczema that included the skin of her rather long neck. She substituted the softest silk—or stayed inside. A very simple, skin anodyne ointment dismissed the trouble.

I have seen cases that had to lie on oiled sheets in bed for comfort, in carrying out the idea of removing all irritants. And,, this idea, this vital point I wish to impress thoroughly in this letter. It may be soap that you are using—change your brand, or use none. Carry out your physician's directions—else you are liable to carry an exceedingly chronic disease for many years.

Yes, eczema is a "winter disease." and, this is minter.

Falsehood

There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be discovered in a lie; for as Montaigne saith: "A liar would be brave towards God, while he is a coward towards man; for a lie faces God and shrinks from man."—Bacon.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS BEARS GOOD TIDINGS
Luke 8:1-15

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Once more read the entire chapter to observe the context and get the related teachings. Now is the time when Jesus is in popular favor and crowds throng about Him as he comes into any community. At that time it is said there were over 200 cities and villages in Galilee and the population numbered two or three millions. The condition is decidedly different today, though the number will be largely increased soon if the Hebrews continue to return and re-establish themselves in their Promised Land.

At times the Twelve went with Jesus and on the other occasions, they, and even the Seventy, were sent forth in independent itineraries. The plan from the coming of Jesus has been to send out individuals as personal messengers of the Gospel. Note that certain women are named. A group of women is mentioned which seems to have been a Committee on Ways and Means as they helped provide the cost involved as Jesus and His workers went about. Even the simplest ways of living costs something daily and these women made it possible for the men to render their extensive services.

Many parables are given at this time which tell about the Kingdom of Heaven that Jesus came to establish. A definition that is still good calls a parable a heavenly story with an earthly meaning. The Master Teacher took many of His illustrations from things in every-day life. This time He calls attention to the seed that is scattered by the farmer. It is the same kind of seed that falls on the four kinds of soil. The application indicates our reception of that always good seed, which is the Word of God.

FIGS

Fig and Bread Pudding—One cup of salt pork, chopped very fine, one cup of bread crumbs, one cup of raisins, one cup of chopped dates, a few currant, and bit of citron lemon peel, salt, cinnamon, cloves and allspice, one cup of sugar, two cups of milk, teaspoon of baking powder and flour to make quite stiff. Boil in pudding dish for three hours. Eat with hard sauce.

Fig Cake—Two cups of sugar (dark brown), one cup of butter, one of water, one teaspoon each of cloves, cinnamon, and nutmeg, four eggs, two cups of chopped raisins one pound of figs chopped, two cups of currants washed and dried, three cups of flour, and two teaspoons of baking powder. Bake in layers, which in putting together, alternate with layers made from the following: Two cups of sugar, three fourths of a cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, one of corn starch, two of flour three teaspoons of baking ppwder, and the whites of six eggs beaten to a stiff froth.

Tapioca Pudding—Soak half a half pound of tapioca over night in a pint of milk and cook slowly in a double boiler until soft and thick, adding sugar and flavoring to taste, and a pinch of salt. Mold, chill, spread with jam, and cover with whipped cream.

Towns and Cities

The bureau of the census says that the population has nothing to do with the matter of a town being called a city. This is a matter of state legislation. The Post Office department says that a town must have 10,000 population before it can be given city mail delivery.

What'll We Eat Tonight? Here Are Seven Answers

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

THE lament "I am entirely out of ideas, and feel as though I never could plan another menu" is a common one among housewives. Making out the menu often seems more difficult than the actual preparation of the food. It is no wonder, however, when we stop to realize the number of meals that must be prepared day after day—often for a family that has many likes and dislikes in food to be considered.

In order to help you with this perplexing problem "what shall I have for dinner tonight?" these dinner menus for one week have been carefully worked out. Each dinner is well-balanced, moderate in cost, and planned to include the fruits and vegetables now in the market:

MONDAY
Sausages with Oven Baked Red Kidney Beans
Browned Potatoes Apple Sauce
Cole Slaw
Chilled Fruit Cup Cookies
Coffee

TUESDAY
Chili Con Carne
Baked Potatoes
Fresh Cucumber Relish
Molded Supper Salad
Apple Butter Ice Box Cake
Coffee

WEDNESDAY
Cream of Tomato Soup Crackers
Cold Sliced Ham
Potato and Pea Salad
Sweet Mustard Pickles Hot Rolls
Baked Apples Stuffed with Pure Mince Meat

THURSDAY
Creole Pork Creamed Corn
Graham Bread Grape Jelly
Apple, Nut and Celery Salad
Fig Pudding with Sauce
Coffee

FRIDAY
Salmon Loaf with Chopped Pickle
Scalloped Tomatoes
Buttered Potatoes
Pineapple, Celery and Nut Salad
Wafers with Cheese
Coffee

SATURDAY
Oven Baked Beans, Boston Style
Brown Bread
Fresh Cucumber Relish
Mixed Vegetable Salad
Apple Pie

SUNDAY
Chilled Tomato Juice
Stuffed Baked Pork Chops
Baked Apples with Currant Jelly
Mashed Potatoes
Buttered Cauliflower
Head Lettuce Salad with French Dressing
Frozen Pineapple Dessert
Coffee

Chili Con Carne: 1 tablespoon butter; 1 lb. ground beef; 1 onion; ¼ teaspoon chili powder; 1 medium can Oven Baked Red Kidney Beans; 1 small can Cream of Tomato Soup; 1 teaspoon salt.

Brown beef in skillet with butter and chopped onion. Add Oven Baked Kidney Beans and stir for several minutes. Pour over this the Cream of Tomato Soup, and add salt and chili powder. Simmer for 15 to 25 minutes. The chili powder may be omitted if desired, and a dash of pepper substituted. Serve with baked potatoes.

Molded Supper Salad: 1½ tablespoons gelatine; ¼ cup cold water; 1/3 cup boiling water; 3 tablespoons Pure Vinegar; 2 tablespoons lemon juice; 1/3 cup sugar; 1 teaspoon salt; ⅔ cup diced celery; 1 cup shredded cabbage; 1 cup cooked peas.

Soak gelatine in cold water for five minutes and dissolve in boiling water. Add vinegar, lemon juice, sugar, salt and vegetables and mix thoroughly. Turn into a ring mold which has been dipped in cold water, and chill. Remove from mold to salad plate. Fill center with crisp lettuce, and serve with Mayonnaise Salad Dressing.

Apple Butter Ice Box Cake: ½ pint whipping cream; ¼ cup Pure Apple Butter; 20 vanilla wafers; chopped nuts.

Whip cream and fold in Apple Butter. Spread each wafer with this mixture, placing one on top of another, until all the wafers are used. Cover outside of roll with cream mixture, sprinkle with chopped nuts and place in refrigerator for about three hours. Cut in diagonal slices and serve.

Creole Pork: 1 small can Cream of Tomato Soup; 1 small can Cooked Spaghetti; 1 lb. ground raw pork; 1 tablespoon butter; 3 onions; ½ teaspoon salt; ¼ lb. grated cheese; ½ cup grated crumbs.

Chop onions fine and cook with ground pork until brown. Drain off excess fat, and add Cooked Spaghetti, Cream of Tomato Soup, and cheese. Turn into baking dish and cover with crumbs and butter. Bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven—350° F.

Old Spanish Dance

There seems to be some confusion in regard to the English equivalent of the Spanish Zapateada. Professor Shields says that "jig" comes nearest to expressing it, as it is a solo dance. A "clog dance" also approximates the Zapateada when particularly animated.

"Majority" and "Plurality"

If a candidate for office receives more votes than all the other contestants combined—more than 50 per cent of the total—he receives a majority. If he receives more votes than any other candidate, even though less than 50 per cent of the total, he receives merely a plurality. When there are only two contestants the plurality and majority are the same.—Exchange.

Usefulness of Bees

A Cornell university farm specialist points out that bees produce honey from material that would otherwise be of no use, and thereby add $25,000,000 to America's income.

Self-Evident

"Is it true that a man who sows his wild oats is bound to reap sorrow?" asks a correspondent. Well, only a fool would expect a scent of roses from his onion bed, as the Italian proverb has it.

Need Development

All man-made lighting devices, it is asserted, are very inefficient, since a great deal of energy is dissipated as heat.

HAMILTON, CONSTANCE, 4-H CLUBS ORGANIZE

The "Silver Leaders" 4-H club of Hamilton and the "Corncrackers" 4-H Club of Constance reorganized the past week with 24 members each. This represents a substantial increase in enrollment over any previous year according to County Agt., H. R. Forkner. It also represents the club motto "Make the Best Better" and the 4-H pledge "For Club, Community and for Country."

4-H work is open to all communities of the county where sufficient local leadership is available and enough members for an organized club are secured. Those communities where club work has not been carried on in the past and who are interested in this work are invited to get in touch with the county agent's office at an early date. All clubs of the county who will carry on work during 1931 should be organized during the month.

Mr J. W. Whitehouse, state leader of Junior 4-H Club Work spoke to the 4-H members, leaders and patrons of the Corncracker 4-H club at Constance last Friday night. Mr. Whitehouse outlined the reasons why club members are leaders in their communities and why club work should reach a larger number of boys and girls each year.

The community turned out in numbers for the meeting. A good program was rendered by the local club. A lunch was served by the members following the meeting.

In other columns of this issue will be found an announcement of the recent connections of Jacob Van Velzel, of near Burlington. Mr. Van Velzel, it will be recalled, suffered a very serious break in one of his limbs more than a year ago and still is getting about with the aid of a cane. He states, however, that the injured member is standing up very well under the strain of daily traveling.

The editor of this newspaper recently lost a blue Parker fountain pen. The finder may obtain a fair reward by returning same to this office.

ANNOUNCEMENT

I wish to announce to my friends and neighbors in Boone county that I have contracted with the Moorman Manufacturing Co., of Quincy, Illinois, to represent them for the year in Boone county. They make a full line of mineral feeds. I also have contracted to write insurance for the State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. If I can be of service to you give me a call. I shall treat you right.

NO-TOBACCO LECTURE

Mr. V. C. Finnell, Secretary of the No-Tobacco League gave an illustrated No-Tobacco lecture at the Ludlow, Bromley, Fairview, Burlington and Constance schools Feb. 2nd. It showed the reasons why athletes do not smoke from the standpoint of good health. Is was especially impressive because it was not a "don't you do it" sermon It was simply the true facts about tobacco and the exposure of the evils in advertising it. In the evening at the Constance church of the Brethren Finnell gave another lecture entitled "Why Girls Smoke" showing again the dirty intrigues of the great tobacco concerns carried on to lead girls into the shackles of the habit of smoking.

Democrats Join Borah's Plea For Relief Of The Suffering

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Holmes)

Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

Washington—For the past week, from the discriminating epicure's point of view, political Washington has been a cross between chop suey and Hungarian goulash.

Take one wagon-load of senatorial reneging on power commission confirmations, one car-load of proposed paternalism, one train-load of prohibition, a couple of ship-loads of hot air, three and a half billion dollars worth of war veterans' relief, one extra session of Congress, season with vituperation to taste, cook slowly until gas is turned off on March 4, and you have the recipe for the stew which, it is threatened, is about to be placed before Old Man Depression. If it's going to taste like it smells, self-respecting drought sufferers and involuntary idlers will vote unanimously for starvation.

A late-comer at the chief's conclave on Capitol Hill demonstrated that the dish might be made more palatable by adding a pinch of Borahsic acid. Borah, of Idaho, as he is known the country over, silver-tongued and persuasive, reached the oratorical estate of Patrick Henry, Webster, Clay and Bryan as he stood beside his desk in the Senate and sounded a call to arms on the proposal to appropriate money to relieve distress.

"I accept the challenge of the gentlemen from the other end of the Capitol," he declared, referring to statements by Majority Leader Tilson, of the House, and Chairman Snell, of the House rules committee, that there would be no compromise. "Let us have it out * * * * * We will either feed these people or we will stay here and tell the American people why we do not feed them."

Time and again, during Senator Borah's speech, he was interrupted by applause from the floor in which the galleries joined without the usual reprimands. As he sat down, a scene was enacted seldom, if ever, witnessed in the Senate. The Democrats arose and one by one marched over to shake his hand. When it was all over, there were some cynical observations that the whole demonstration was framed. If so, Vice-President Curtis must have been a party to it, and it was certainly not framed insofar as Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, the State hardest hit by the drought, was concerned. As he walked over to Borah the tears were streaming down his cheeks.

Senator Borah said that he had heard a lot of talk about a dole, about how the British government was unable to get rid of it—he said this as he alternately ran his hands through his hair and pounded the table; and he talked like a man inspired.

"It is said that England established the dole system, and that England can not get rid of it," he asserted. "England can not get rid of the dole system because she can not get rid of the economic conditions which superinduced the dole. England is feeding men because they have not work to do. Let the work come, let normal economic conditions be restored, let the people have an opportunity to get their old jobs and Parliament will end the dole system in England with the consent of those who have been receiving it."

Senator Borah, insisting upon the relief of suffering by the Federal government, apparently takes the position that only those who believe as he does are against human suffering. It is submitted that the Idaho Senator is woefully mistaken. The individual American citizen who contributes to the Red Cross in this emergency is quite as much against human suffering as is Senator Borah, or even Senator Caraway. It is not difficult for an orator to appeal to the sympathies of a nation for the relief of hungry and ragged women and children. It is not difficult to state the case against human suffering. However, the unfairness of Senator Borah and Senator Caraway lies in the fact that they are disposed to attribute to other members of Congress and to the President of the United States indifference to human suffering because they favor the traditional method of dealing with distress in the United States and are against the establishing a precedent of having the Federal government enter into the the handling of charity in this country on a huge scale.

Possibly the most unfortunate phase of the whole situation is the difficulty of ascertainment of the real state of affairs in the drought-stricken regions. Certainly there is no better source of information than the Red Cross agents in the field. A Senator from one of the afflicted States declared this week that a thousand persons were dying of starvation every day. Later, upon inquiry, Red Cross authorities informed President Hoover directly that except for a possible individual here and there, temporarily overlooked or not brought to the notice of the agents of relief, "no one is going hungry and no one need go hungry or cold."

The deadlock between the Administration and the Senate was strengthened when President Hoover asserted that to accept the principle of the dole as advocated in the Senate's $25,000,000 relief bill would strike at the roots of self-government. In effect the President, in a lengthy statement, asserted that the Administration would not surrender its position to the threat of a special session of Congress. He declared that the American people were "doing their job" in adequate relief work and should be given opportunity to "show whether they wish to preserve the principals of individual and local responsibility and mutual self-help before they embark on what I believe is a disastrous system."

It is thought here that Democratic supporters of the dole are going far afield. They no longer look with regard, for example, on the opinion of Grover Cleveland, whom they twice elected President of the United States. President Cleveland in 1887 vetoed a bill appropriating Federal money for a free distribution of seed in the drought-stricken counties of Texas. In his message returning the bill to Congress, President Cleveland said: "Though the people support the Government, the Government should not support the people. The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can be relied upon to relieve their fellow citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthens the bonds of a common brotherhood."

Prizes for Contribution to Uplift of Mankind

The Nobel foundation (Nobelstiftelsen) was established in pursuance of the provisions of the will of Alfred Nobel, who was born in Stockholm in 1833 and died at San Remo in 1896. By this will, dated November 27, 1895, Alfred Nobel bequeathed the whole of his fortune (more than 30,000,000 kroner) to a fund the interest of which shall be annually paid out to those who during the immediately preceding years "have conferred the greatest benefit on mankind." The interest is divided into five equal parts, to be allotted as follows: "One part to the person who shall have made the most important discovery or invention in the domain of physics, one part to the person who shall have made the most important chemical discovery or improvement, one part to the person who shall have made the most important discovery in the domain of physiology or medicine, one part to the person who shall have produced in the field of literature the most distinguished work of an idealistic tendency and one part to the person who shall have done most to promote the fraternity of nations, the abolition or diminution of standing armies and the formation and propagation of peace congresses."

Caverns Under Lookout Mountain Cut by Water

Investigations by engineers indicate that Lookout mountain is a sort of peanut-shell shaped mound covering a system of caverns extending from one end to the other, with runs branching off to both east and west brows every few miles. There are at least one, and perhaps two, large rivers and many smaller streams running under the mountain at a level of about 1,500 feet below the surface. These streams run up and down the mountain and across it. The water in these streams is as clear as a crystal and has no life in it. The streams run both north and south and some of them run north a distance, swerve around some weird formation and flow back southward. The openings under the mountain have been cut by these streams and are corresponding in number and direction.

That's That

It is annoying when one goes to the theater and has one's view obstructed by the hat of a woman seated in front.

Nobody has much sympathy for those who choose to wear their largest hats while seeking amusement, but, on the other hand, there is the crusty old man who finds fault with everything, and pretends he is unable to see the stage even when the hat in front of him is of the smallest variety.

One of these was at the theater when, after fidgeting for some time, he growled in a loud voice to the girl in front of him: "Do you mind removing your hat? I can't see through wood."

Thea girl turned and looked at him quietly for a moment. Then she said, calmly: "Very well, change seats; I can."

Musical Milkmaid

The piping of the goatherds is one of the most experiences of those persons who take occasion to spend a little time in the mountain towns in the Pyrenees mountains in the south of France. This hinge into the early morning air, the milk people appearing soon after the break of dawn. These early morning visitors present a picturesque appearance. The pair consists generally of a lad and a maid, leading a herd of goats, and the lad is equipped with homemade pan-pipes, and his music serves to call the housekeeper who appears in the door with a crock or a heavy brass pitcher, and into this the milk is drawn directly from the animal.

Tactful

A policeman at a busy corner held up a large car for nearly four minutes when there was no need.

The driver of the car, a middle-aged woman, was indignant.

"Good gracious me, officer!" she cried. "Do you realize that you have delayed me unnecessarily for four minutes? I want to know at once why you held me up, otherwise I'll report you!"

The policeman had an immediate answer.

"I beg your pardon, madam," he said politely, "but at first I thought you were too young to drive a car."

Currying Favor

From an old French allegory of the Fourteenth century we have inherited the expression, "to curry favor," writes Elizabeth Hawes Ryland in the Boston Transcript. The star character of this old fable was a chestnut or fawn-colored horse called "Favel." This picturesque animal typified flattery. Therefore, "to curry Favel," as the English of Spenser's day had it, was to "curry the fawn-colored horse," that is, to employ deceitful means for selfish ends. "Favel" easily passed into "favor."

"Prosperous" on $100 a Year

A prosperous Chinese farmer in the Shanghai region supports a family of six on an income of $100 a year, American money. He spends 22 cents a day to feed the whole family. In this district the farm averages two-fifths of an acre, and most of the farmers own the soil either in whole or in part.—World's Work.

First Flying Wedge on Football Field, in 1869

As far as history goes, the first intercollegiate football game of all time was played November 6, 1869, at Brunswick, N. J., between Rutgers of that city and Princeton, from 25 miles away.

The New York World published the story of the game, as told by John W. Herbert—Rutgers, '72—a participant. The teams numbered 25 players each.

Rutgers, it appeared, was having a tough year. Princeton had won at baseball and had succeeded in obtaining the Revolutionary war cannon, which had been stolen back and forth, by burying it several inches deep in concrete. Football was becoming common as an intramural sport, and Rutgers challenged its rival to three games. The first was played at Brunswick.

"Receiving the ball," Mr. Herbert writes, "our men formed a perfect interference around it and with short, skillful kicks and dribbles drove it down the field. Taken by surprise, the Princeton men fought valiantly, but in five minutes we had gotten the ball through to our captain's of the enemy's goal, and S. G. Gano, '71 and G. R. Dixon, '73, neatly kicked it over. None thought of it, so far as I know, but we had without previous plan or thought evolved the play that became famous a few years later as 'the flying wedge.'

Rutgers won, 6 to 4. Princeton won the second game, 8 to 0, on its home grounds. The faculty called off the third game because feeling was running so high between the student bodies.—Detroit News.

Retort Something of a Reflection on Bishop

A geographer, at a geographers' banquet in Boston, told a story about Sir Richard Burton, the famous explorer, linguist, translator and what-not.

"Burton," he began, "made the acquaintance of a bishop on a voyage home from India, and the two men got on well together, notwithstanding the difference in their beliefs.

"The bishop, as they sat on deck one morning, pointed up towards half a dozen tame monkeys that were climbing in the rigging and said:

"'There, Captain Burton'—Burton was only a captain then—'there are the folk you are descended from.'

"Burton looked at the monkeys, then he looked at the bishop.

"'Well, bishop,' he said, 'I at least have made some progress, but you, who are descended from the angels—how about you?'"—Detroit Free Press.

Unicorn Problem Solved?

Chinese scientists believe they have solved the problem of the unicorn.

The fabulous animal actually existed, in the opinion of Oriental archeologists.

Dr. Li Chi, Harvard graduate, is the man principally responsible for this opinion. In ancient ruins he found a carving that strangely resembled the one-horned bull, an Asiatic press correspondent reports.

The characters were found to mean that the animal represented by the carving had been captured by hunters. The carving was apparently more than three thousand years old.

Nicotine in Tobacco

The quantity of nicotine contained in tobacco varies from 2 to 8 per cent, the coarser kinds containing the larger quantity, while the best Havana cigars seldom contain more than 2 per cent, and often less. Nicotine does not appear in tobacco smoke. It is split in to pyridine and celloidine. Of these the latter is said to be the less active, and to preponderate in cigar smoke, while the smoke from pipes contains a larger amount of pyridine. The percentage of nicotine varies with the kind of tobacco and with the district in which it is grown.

Queen Fond of Snuff

Queen Charlotte Sophia, wife of King George III of England, was so fond of snuff that she was the principal cause of making it fashionable, wrote Rees Howell Gronow in "Recollections."

"I recollect having seen her majesty on the terrace at Windsor, walking with the king when, to the great delight of the Eton boys, she applied her finger and thumb to her gold snuff-box, out of which her majesty appeared to have fished a considerable quantity, for the royal nose was covered with snuff."

King's Speech Old Rite

The king's speech is in reality the declaration of the causes of the summons of the British parliament and forms the legal basis for the deliberations of the two houses. It gives in broad outline the legislative program of the session. Originally the king actually delivered his speech in person and parliament could not assemble until the king thought fit to summon it. The "king's speech" apparently dates back to the "model parliament" of Edward I, summoned in 1295.

Ancient Glassware in Museum of University

A rare collection of antiques, some of which date back to 4000 B. C., was a gift to Cornell university by an alumnus, John Randolph of Greenville, R. I., and has a permanent place in the Goldwin Smith museum.

A seal in the collection, which is more than 23 centuries old, is made of artificial glass, and is the oldest specimen of man's handiwork with glass, in the opinion of Prof. Edward Chiera of the Oriental institute of the University of Chicago.

Also in the collection are a stone cylinder with seated figures, a red stone amulet shaped like an animal's head, and a button seal with a crisscrossed design. One object of special interest is a cone from Lagash, an ancient Sumerian city, with the following inscription: "To the god, Ningish Zida, his god Gudea, the priest king of the city of Lagash, the servant of the god Gatumdug, the temple of the city of Girsu, he built."

The latter object is considered a symbol of the days when Mesopotamian builders set up their temples of sun-baked bricks and used also sun-baked cones to record their names and the reasons for building the temples. The cones were usually placed high in the walls, and the King Gudea referred to in the inscription reigned about 2400 B. C.

Reversed Conditions in Family of W. J. Bryan

William Jennings Bryan is remembered as a great orator and, even to the moment of his death, the ardent champion of the Holy Bible. He never made any great reputation as a humorist, but there was a decidedly risible side to his nature, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

On one occasion, when some friends were teasing him about his daughter Ruth and her ambition to become a lawyer and follow in her famous daddy's footsteps, the Great Commoner laughed and said:

"Yes, the women surely have changed in a single generation. Now, there's my daughter Ruth, for instance. She's taking up law, while her mother always used to lay it down."

Germany's Oldest House?

According to the German historian, Paul Eichholtz, probably the oldest house in Germany is in the little town of Winkel, in the Rhineland, built A. D. 850. People in Winkel call it the "gray house," and very likely it was the residence of the famous Abbot Rabanus Maurus, who was one of the greatest scholars of his time.

The "gray house" contains a disproportionately large kitchen, where Maurus is reported to have fed the sick and the poor. In the history of German poetry the "gray house" also plays a remarkable role. It was the birthplace of the romantic poet, Clemens Brentano, and his sister, Bettina, who is known by her "Goethe's Correspondence With a Child." At present the "gray house" is inhabited by a farmhand and his family.—Washington Star.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

TO TEST DISEASE RESISTANT TOBACCO

The Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky has a limited number of samples of root-rot resistant seed for distribution among farmers who are interested in growing a superior type of tobacco. Each sample contains a teaspoon of seed, which should produce enough plants for a quarter of an acre of tobacco.

The variety was developed at the Experiment Station at Lexington, and was grown by a number of farmers last year, when it did well. It is a new variety that is more highly resistant to black root-rot than varieties which have been put out for several years.

Farmers desiring to secure samples should see their county agent or write direct to the Experiment Station. Those receiving samples will be expected to grow the tobacco according to the recommendations of the Experiment Station and to make a report at the end of the season.

LESPEDEZA GROWERS ANNOUNCE ACTIONS

The Kentucky Feed Improvement Association at its recent winter meeting announced that old korean lespedeza fields sown in 1930 would be eligible to inspection and certification this year, whether inspected last fall or not. All seedings made this year must be with certified seed in order to be eligible for certification. Otherwise the crop may contain other varieties of lespedeza and dodder.

The association will hold a special meeting at Hopkinsville Feb. 21 in the interests of korean lespedeza. This district is the center of a large production of korean lespedeza, and problems of handling the crop will be discussed. Growers from all western Kentucky counties have been asked to the Hopkinsville meeting. R. R. Giltner, president of the association, will preside.

ONLY SPRAY WILL SAVE CHERRY PIE

The possibility of no more cherry pies is presented by Prof. A. J. Olney, head of the department of horticulture at the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, who has observed that cherry trees are dying at a rapid rate in Kentucky.

The leafspot disease is wiping out the trees by causing defoliation in late summer. While the disease can be controlled, it is the opinion of Prof. Olney that the backyard cherry tree may become a thing of the past.

A lime-sulphur spray, applied first as soon as the leaves come out in the spring, and then at two-week intervals until five sprays have been used, will control the disease. Dr. J. B. Jordan, vice-president of the Kentucky Horticultural Society, has controlled leafspot in his commercial cherry orchard in Jefferson county.

Face Powder From Sea

In both salt and fresh water live countless millions of microscopic creatures known as diatoms. These build tiny shells of almost incredible thinness, and when they die their empty homes form a deposit known by the rather forbidding name of diatomaceous earth. Experiments have shown that from this earth can be made a powder which is ideal for toilet purposes.

When dry, diatomaceous earth is easily reduced to very light powder, finer and more porous than that made from rice or starch. At present, all good toilet powders are made from one or other of these two substances. Before long diatom powder made from material collected from the seashore or the beds of lakes and rivers is likely to make a strong bid for popularity.

Ancient Castle Fortress

Bamburgh castle, England, is the "St. Bernard's" of the savage north coast, offering guidance and refuge to distressed or shipwrecked sailors and acting as a charity home to poor boys and girls. This ancient fortress is named after Queen Bebba, wife of the Anglican king Ida, who, in the Sixth century conquered the Saxons of Bernicia (now Northumberland) and built this castle fortress on a cliff overlooking the seas. It has figured largely in subsequent history as a refuge around which many battles have been fought.

Signs of the Zodiac

The zodiac is probably Babylonian in origin. The figures seem to have been based on the resemblance of the lines connecting the stars in the zodiacal constellations to certain pictoral outlines, which form the substratum of the Assyro-Babylonian cuneiform alphabets, while the animal figures and outlines were chosen for animistic reasons. The signs of the zodiac were carried from Babylonia to Greece, whence they spread throughout the ancient civilized world.

FARM SURVEY SHOWS FACTORS IN SUCCESS

Operators of 150 Todd county farms had average labor incomes of $1,411 in 1929, after deducting five per cent interest on their investments, according to a survey made bythe department of farm economics of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Adding the value of the farm products used in the home brought the average net earnings to $2,036.

The average labor income of the best 15 farmers was $5,478 and their net earnings $6,646. The 15 poorest farmers, on the othe rhand, lacked $495 of meeting expenses.

Better crop yields, better prices for tobacco because of superior quality, larger returns from livestock, and economy of operation accounted for most of the differences in the incomes.

The more profitable farms were more adequately stocked, especially with the kinds of stock that utilize grass and roughage. They had nearly four times as large an investment in cattle and sheep.

Crop yields were important factors in the success of the farms. The yield of tobacco on the best farms was practically double that on the poorer farms. Better quality also was stressed. Tobacco produced on the 15 best farms not only yielded more but averaged 19 cents a pound, compared with 10 cents on the poorer farms.

Receipts per acre varied from $28.05 on the more successful farms to $9.71 an acre on the less successful farms. Total expense per $1 receipts was 51 cents for the best farms compared with 99 cents on the least profitable farms.

NOW WELL AND STRONG AND ROBUST

"For years I never knew what it meant to feel well. I was always tired out. I was actually becoming a burden to myself as well as others. I was examined by many doctors and they gave me many things to take—but nothing seemed to help me. I was really getting in a very serious condition. Then like a fairy God-Mother I happened upon Karnak and I will say without a bit of exaggeration, it is almost like magic—so marvelous and so quick in its wonderful power to make a new person of one. I often shudder when I think of what might have happened to me had I not found out about Karnak when I did. Instead of what 'might have been' I am strong and well and robust and the amount of things I can accomplish amazes everyone I know.

Boone County Man Is Boomed For Important State Political Post

ARTHUR B. ROUSE SUGGESTED FOR LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR SHIP POSITION CARRIES MUCH WEIGHT IN NAMING STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION —ROUSE HAS NOT MADE KNOWN HIS ATTITUDE

Boone county friends and relatives of Arthur B. Rouse have become very much interested in his proposed candidacy for the post of Lieutenant-Governor. The first notice of his boom came in the weekly political news dispatch in the Cincinnati Enquirer and which was written by Geo. R. Newman, of Louisville.

While several other prominent names have been mentioned in this connection, none have been named who could fill the bill so acceptably as Mr. Rouse, according to his host of friends and admirers in this section. In fact none have been mentioned for the governorship itself who can surpass him in executive ability.

It will be recalled that the Recorder participated in a strong boom for the nomination of Mr. Rouse for the chief executiveship in 1927, but it was of no avail. At that time the Lieutenant Governorship carried little power; but, since the passage of the famed Ripper Bill at the last session of the legislature, this office carries with it considerable weight in the naming of the State Highway Commission, a body of which Mr. Rouse himself was a member at the time of the passage of the bill.

The nomination of Mr. Rouse as the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor would strengthen the ticket immeasurably and at the same time assure the state of an intelligent and capable administration of legislative matters in the Senate at the 1932 session.

The Enquirer dispatch of last Sunday is quoted herewith:

"A powerful prospect as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Lieutenant-Governor has arisen in the Sixth District, where, according to information that has reached Louisville Democrats, friends of former Congressman Arthur B. Rouse are urging him to enter the race.

While Rouse has not given any indication as to what his decision will be when the matter formally is presented to him, his friends are hopeful that they can persuade him to offer for this post.

Rouse is known to Democrats all over the state, and they are interested in his suggested candidacy. They appreciate the importance of the Sixth District in a state election and say the district, by all means, should be represented on the state ticket. Rouse notably is strong there, as in his races for Congress he always has run ahead of his ticket and on several occasions was several thousand ahead.

Democrats never have lost a race in Kentucky when they were able to roll up a big majority in the Sixth and by the same token they haven't won when the Sixth slipped. They believe that placing Rouse on the ticket will go far toward assuring victory.

Rouse served for 16 years in Congress as Representative from the Sixth District, having been elected first in 1910. He is a graduate of Hanover College and University of Louisville Law School and has practiced law in the Sixth, with offices in Boone and Kenton Counties, since 1900. In the House he was one of the Democratic leaders, having been Chairman of the National Democratic Congressional Committees for years.

His popularity in his district is attested by the fact that he never has been defeated in any race for office and that his majorities have grown with successive elections. He has been mentioned more than once for the Democratic nomination for Governor. He is a native of Boone county, having been born in Burlington, June 20, 1874. Shortly after his election to Congress he married Miss Minnie Elizabeth Kelly, Westwood, Ohio. He represented the Sixth District on the Democratic State Executive Committee for many years."

Mrs. A. B. Oldham and little daughter, of Mt. Sterling, have spent the past week with J. W. Goodridge and family here.

INFORMATION

GATHERED BY COUNTY FARM AGENT TELLS WHAT AVERAGE BOONE COUNTY DAIRY COW IS DOING—OWNERS RECEIVE FROM $1.87 TO $2.37 FOR EACH DOLLAR EXPENDED FOR FEED

We are all interested in our dairy business in one way or another. Below is some general information collected by County Agent H. R. Forkner from the first ten of the fifteen D. H. A. I. records that were completed Feb. 1st. The information is accurate and gives reliable information on what the average cows in some of the best Boone county herds are doing.

The ten herds recorded represents approximately 155 cow years. The cost of producing milk, butter fat and return for each dollar expended for feed varied not only per cow but in the different herds. The herds costs varied from 27 to 30½ per pound feed cost for buter fat; $1.01 to $1.53 per 100 pounds of milk produced and owners received from $1.87 to $2.37 for each dollar expended for feed.

Taking the month of January away from the result of the year a different story is told. During this month the per head feed costs was from 31c to 60c per pound for butter fat, $1.06 to $2.50 per 100 pounds of milk produced and the owners received from 92c to $2.15 for each dollar spent for feed.

It can easily be seen that those dairymen who are selling their milk at present whole milk prices without a surplus price are making a fair profit. The men who at the same time are selling butter fat at 20c to 40c per pound are producing and selling their product at a loss.

HARD GAME

DROPPED BY BURLINGTON BAPTISTS SATURDAY NIGHT AT COVINGTON—TEAM TO PLAY FAST GOING LUDLOW METHODISTS IN CRUCIAL CONTEST—BUS TO LEAVE BURLINGTON AT 5:45 SLOW TIME

The Burlington Baptists fell before the fast and furious attack of the First Christians in the Covington Church League last Saturday evening after a determined and desperate battle. The score was 30-27.

The Burlingtonites were trailing 9-0 after two minutes of play, but rallied and were leading 15-12 at the half. Then at the start of the second half the Christians again flashed their brilliant offense to the extent of three straight field goals; but again the locals came thru with a stiff rally and regained the lead, only to be headed again before the final two minutes.

With a three point lead the Christians "froze" the ball during the closing minutes and the locals were unable to come back. It was a game, uphill battle that the Baptists fought, Lamb leading in the scoring with 12 points and Utz a second with 8. Akin played a sterling defensive game, while Maurer, Stephens and Hickman also showed well.

The Baptists will play the fast Ludlow Methodists Saturday night at 7:00 o'clock (slow time). The Methodists are tied for the league leadership, having lost but one game, but the local boys will not think of admitting that they will have same record after this week's game. Bus will leave Burlington at 5:45.

Sterling Rouse and Fred Gross, both of Point Pleasant neighborhood, made this office a very pleasant call on Wednesday of last week. Mr. Gross was seeing to the advancement of his membership in the Recorder reading circle, while Mr. Rouse was propagating the sale of his choicest brands of honey.

Deaths

JOHN G. LEWIS

John G. Lewis, aged 69 years, passed away Sunday night at his home 311 Oak Street, Ludlow, Ky., after a long illness. Funeral services were conducted at the late residence Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock by the Rev. E. D. Davis, pastor of the Ludlow Baptist church, after which the remains were taken to the Florence cemetery and placed in the mausoleum he had had erected several years ago.

Mr. Lewis was connected with the Southern Railroad for many years as engineer and later as foreman in the Ludow machine shops. He was a member of the Unity Lodge F. & A. M., also a Knigh Templar. Also a faithful member of the Ludlow Baptist church.

The pall-bearers were Morgan Mitchell, Gurney Mitchell, Harry Riggs, Evan Bone, John McCollum and F. J. Fishback.

He is survived by his widow Mrs. Jennie Mitchell Lewis, several brothers and sisters who reside in Virginia and a host of friends.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

DAVID MILTON RYLE

David Milton Ryle was born in Boone County, Ky., Dec. 6th, 1849, and died Feb. 6th, 1931, aged 81 years and two months. He was a son of Thadeus and America Ryle, being the eldest of a family of 10 children, of whom there now survive but two members—Mrs. Betty Scott, of Bowen, Illinois, and Hubert Ryle, of East Bend, Ky. Milton Ryle was married to Miss Nellie Craig Dec. 13th, 1883. To this union were born three children, two of whom died in infancy. He is survived by the widow, one daughter, Mrs. Myra Ryle, two grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

[illegible] county where he was well known and highly esteemed as an honest, industrious and upright citizen. He had been in failing health for several years and unable to continue the activities of his earlier years. He will be laid to rest in the family burying ground there to wait the Resurrection morn.

CARD OF THANKS

We take this means of thanking our relatives and friends for their kindness showed us in our loss of our dear husband and father, also Bro. McNeely for his words of comfort, and Mr. Stiel and Mr. Dilts for their tender and efficient manner in conducting the funeral.

ROBBERS

GET AWAY WITH FOUR THEFTS IN ONE WEEK AT VERONA—SCHOOL HOUSE IS LISTED AMONG BUILLNGS LOOTED—STORES AND GARAGE ALSO ENTERED

The usually quiet and peaceful little village of Verona has been the play ground of burglars during the past week, according to authenic reports from there.

Although they are presumably amateurs, judging by the character of property taken, yet it must be admitted that they are comparatively clever, inasmuch as they made four jobs within a week and were not detected.

Sometime during the week-end they entered the school house and made away with several boxes of candy. Then on Monday night the Blue Goose was entered and the thieves took some money, and cigarettes. Friday night they shifted their scene of activity to the garage of Walter Renaker and took away twenty gallons of motor oil and the same night entered the rear room of the A. C. Roberts store and appropriated several gallons of oil

No report has been made as to any suspects.

Mrs. Lilly Preiser, of Waterloo, spent the past week-end with Owen Beemon and family of Woolper creek.

The sale of household goods and other roperty belonging to the estate of the late C. H. Youell will be held at the Youell homestead next Saturday immediately following the H. W. Rouse sale.

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

Friday the 13th seemed very much like a unlucky day to the Burlington Tomcats and Kittens when they went down to a double defeat from the Mason High School in Grant county. The Tomcats lost their game by one point and the Kittens losing by the largest score made against them this year. The Kittens were not able to make fut 4 points in the first half of the game, which were scored by Phillips, a forward, while the Mason girls were fortunate enough to get 17 points. In the last half the Kittens made a good showing, but not quite good enough to stop Mason from making 13 more points. The guarding of Jarrell, E. Ryle and Akins stopped many shots from going through the basket for Mason. A Burton and L. Ryle were removed on personal fouls and were replaced by Pettit and E. Burton who made a good showing. When the game ended the score was Kittens 13 Mason 30.

The Tomcats lost their game by one point 18 to 17. Good guarding on both teams was what held the score so close. Scragon, a guard for the Mason boys was their high point maker, making 7 of their 18 points. William Cook a forward, played a good game, this being his 1st one. He proved that he is going to make somebody fight hard for a position as forward, on the Tomcat squad. J. Williamson was removed on fouls and replaced by G. Cook, the two hundred pound standing guard who stopped the work for a while. Next Friay night Feb. 20th the Tomcats and Kittens will play on their own floor when the Piner High School team will challenge them for two games. If you want to see some real basket ball come to the Burlington gynasium next Friday night Feb. 20th, at 7:00 p. m.

[illegible] entertained the Hebron and Burlington Reserve Clubs with a Valentine party Saturday afternoon at Miss Cropper's home. The valentine idea was carried out by means of decoration, games, prizes, favors and refreshments. The Hebron Girl Reserve presented to the Burlington club a beautiful valentine which shows the friendly feeling existing between the clubs. The afternoon was enjoyed by all.

An electric light is being put in front of the school building. The work is being done by the High Y Club.

The High Y Club has entered the state wide Bible study course under the leadership of Supt. D. H. Norris.

A party was given Monday night by Miss Cubbage and Mr. Neikirk who entertained all the High School and grade teachers. Everyone took an active part in the games, which were planned by the hostess.

Ice cream and cake were served later in the evening. Everyone went home with the report that they enjoyed themselves

Mrs. Walter Brown started her Bible study class in the Girl Reserve Club Friday morning.

The Burlington Negative debating team journeyed to Florence Wednesday night where they were defeated by the Florence affirmative.

The Hebron and Ludlow basket ball teams played on the Burlington High School gym last Friday Feb. 13 with Ludlow boys and Hebron Girls victorious.

Zena Garrison and Elva Akin were absent one day last week.

The High School and Junior High had a valentine box Friday afternoon which was enjoyed by all.

The Chapel program given by the first grade was enjoyed by all. We were glad to see so many visitors. Come often and bring some one with you.

7th and 8th Grades

The 7th and 8th grade basket ball team journeyed to Hamilton Friday afternoon and were defeated by a score of 8 to 6.

We are still practicing for our program to be given Wednesday night February 18th.

5th and 6th Grade

The 5th and 6th grades are welcoming Tousey Porter and Allan Sullivan from Covington, and Dorothy McClure from Mt. Zion.

The 5th and 6th grades have bought some newo library books with the money which was kindly donated by the P. T. A

We regret to lose James and Earl Lenhof, who have moved to Hebron and Marvin Lee Murray, who quit school.

County League Seems Certain, Judging By Reports At Meeting

ORGANIZATION TO BE EFFECTED AND OFFICERS ELECTED AT MEETING NEXT MONDAY—SIX TEAMS PROBABLE NUMBER OF ENTRIES THIS YEAR —IMPORTANT CHANGES SUGGESTED

There was a very enthusiastic response to the open invitation to attend the county base ball meeting at the Court House on Monday evening of this week. More than twenty-five were present representing four teams in the league as constituted last year and from reports they made it seems absolutely certain that Boone county will have another base ball league in 1931.

The teams represented were Rabbit Hash, Hebron, Burlington and Belleview. Petersburg was not represented, but made a report by telephone that they would re-enter the league. Walton has not effected a team organization as yet and were not heard from. However, another meeting will be held next Monday night at the same place and at which time a permanent league organization will be effected and it is hoped that all teams will be in attendance at the meeting.

Some very important changes in the rules and by laws will be voted upon and it behooves each team that is contemplating an entrance to be on hand and have a voice in those proposed changes. Some of the most drastic changes relate to the eligibility of players. It was agreed upon unanimously in an informal vote [illegible] be native Boone countians at the time of the opening of the league, or that the bars should be thrown down and permit teams to get players from anywhere. Opinion, however, was about evenly divided as to which one of the above alternatives they would finally take.

Another proposed change that will be voted upon at the organization meeting relates to the time of turning in the team lists. It has been suggested that this time should be set at on or before the opening day of the season. Last year it was June 15. Still another change that has been proposed is that the league do away with the elimination series at the close of the regular schedule. This proposed change, however, did not meet with general approval as some teams are heartily in favor of continuing this scheme, which was inaugurated last year with very good success.

The Rabbit Hash team, which was represented by several very enthusiastic fans and players at the meeting, bids fair to make the others hop some this season. Gene Wingate, a veteran player of several years ago, states that he hopes to sign some very prominent and capable players and that, if he succeeds in his plans, he will have a team in the field that will be right up there, or thereabouts, all season.

Everyone in any way interested in the formation of this league should make an effort to be on hand at the meeting next Monday night, although it is generally understood of course that each team will cast but one vote regardless of how many representatives are present from that place. League officers will be elected and a full set of by-laws adopted at this meeting.

TRUCK CROPS MEETING

Mr. John S. Gardner, field agent in Truck Crops from the College of Agriculture will be in Boone county on Monday and Tuesday, February the 23 and 24th for a series of meetings. The county agent urges that all truck and garden growers be present at one or more of these meetings.

A community meeting will be held at the school house in Constance on Monday night, February the 23rd. A similar meeting will be held at the Farm Bureau in Florence on Tuesday night the 24th. Seed treatment demonstrations will be given by Mr. Gardner on Tuesday morning and afternoon. The morning meeting will be held at 9:00 a. m., at Kirtley McWethy's at Petersburg. The afternoon meeting will be held at Will Crigler's of near Hebron at 1:30 p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Blythe motored to Carrollton last Sunday.

KIRBY CONNER

NOW ASSOCIATED WITH PRODUCERS CO-OP. AT CINCINNATI STOCK YARDS —WIDELY KNOWN AS PREMIER SHEEP SALESMAN

(BY JOHN W. FINN)

Nearly everybody on the Cincinnati market is congratulating the Producers Cooperative Commission Association on their new sheep salesman, Kirby Conner. Mr. Conner just started in cooperative work, January 1st, after nine years as a line salesman on the Cincinnati market. His experience, however, in the livestock and meat business extends over a period of 30 years, beginning in a branch of Swift & Company at Buffalo and extending later to New York and Boston, where he operated as a buyer, a salesman and packer representative.

All of this contact with the industry covering a long period of time and including widely separated cities has convinced Mr. Conner that the proper way to handle livestock between the producer and the packer is through cooperative agencies. His business experience has shown him the need for closer cooperation between the producer of livestock and the processor. He says, "My hope in this work is to serve the livestock producers in the most direct and efficient manner [illegible] industry have had a broader experience or a more practical knowledge of the selling business. Mr. Kirby knows sheep and lambs as well as market outlets which, coupled with his personality and years of successful experience, makes him a valuable man in his new position with the Cincinnati Producers. — Producers National Livestock Journal, Chicago, Illinois.

YOUR MOVE!

RENAKER REALTY CO., MAKES NUMBER OF DEALS DURING PAST WEEK—"MOVING DAY" IS ON THE WAY FOR MANY CITIZENS

They're getting ready to move in Burlington. At least some of them are.

The A. B. Renaker Realty Co. completed several deals during the past week that literally will turn the map around.

J. D. Acra purchased the small farm just south of town from G. C. Farrell and then sold his residence property on Jefferson street, known as the Judge Roberts property, to Dr. M. A. Yelton. Then Melvin Jones purchased a number of choice building lots in Park Addition north of town from Dr. Yelton.

Dr. Yelton will take possession of the Acra property on March 1st, and will move there, while Ray Hickman and family, who now occupy the residence, will move into the dwelling next door, also the property of Mr. Acra. It is reported that Courtney Kelly and family will move to the present Jarrell residence, purchased by Mr. Acra, as soon as Mr. Kelly's school term is over.

News of another transaction reaches us by "grapevine" just as we are going to press, though the report has not been confirmed by the realty company said to have been made the deal. That is that Mr. Jarrell has bought the Manley Ryle property on Torrid street.

Melvin Jones, one of the dynamic members of the Renaker Co., says that the time he "likes to sell 'em is when they say they ain't movin."

Friends of Clay Baker, of Walton, who are legion in this section, were very sorely grieved to learn of his death, which occurred very suddenly early Sunday morning, Feb. 8th. Mr. Baker was found dead in bed by his daughter, Mrs. Anna Dixon. Two sons Harley Baker and Robt. Baker, also survive.

NO DOLE

The effort in Congress to pauperize vast numbers of Americans by voting money from the public funds as a free gift seems to have failed. The time-tried American method of relieving economic distress by private charity is working out. The Red Cross has the drought-relief situation well in hand and the people of the United States have responded in full to its appeal for funds.

Such money as has been appropriated from the public treasury for the relief of the farmers who are compelled to make a fresh start in life because of the drought will be made available to them on terms which will not sacrifice their self-respect nor render them objects of Government charity. There are a few in every community who would rather get something without working for it than to do an honest day's work, and they are usually the ones who are most vociferous in their demands for help. But the time has not yet come when any considerable portion of Americans are ready to confess that they cannot support themselves, and are willing to live in idleness at the expense of their fellow-citizens.

NO GROUND FOR FEAR

It is useless to deny that the present state of mind of many Americans is fear of what the future may bring.

Fear seems to be prevalent in all public thinking on economics today. People are afraid that things are not going to "come back," that somehow we have lost our stride as a nation and are not going to be able to get going again at the old pace. There is more money now in savings banks than ever before in history. Much of it has been put there in the past year because people were afraid to spend it. Merchants have been afraid to replenish their stocks, for fear prices would go down still farther. Individuals have been afraid that conditions were going to get continually worse.

There is nothing in our history to warrant such fears. The only way to judge the future is by the past. All of our history reveals a succession of forward steps, never a backward one. The pace has slackened at times, as it has slackened in the past eighteen months, but the movement has always been forward. There is not a single reason for the belief that our economic progress has stopped or that we are going backward. On the contrary, all the signs point in the other direction. There is no ground for fear.

POINT PLEASANT

We are sorry to report the illness of Dorothy and Sallie Souther, the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. W. K Souther. Trust they will soon be well.

Mrs. H. V. Tanner and Mrs. Wm. Marksberry have returned from a few days visit to Mrs. John Jouett, of Eminence, who has been ill. Her Boone county friends will be glad to know she is greatly improved.

Revival services will begin at Pt Pleasant Christian church Sunday Feb. 22, at 2:00 p. m. (slow time) continuing through the week every evening at 7:30 slow time. Bro. McCord, minister of Erlanger church, assisted by some good singers of his congregation will be in charge of the services. We cordially invite everyone to attend these services and help us have a successful meeting.

Owing to illness Mrs. Harry L. Riggs, song leader of Erlanger, was unable to be with us last Sunday, which was quite a disappointment to all present.

The Family Garden

PREPARING THE GARDEN

(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

Even though actual gardening may not begin for a month or so, it is time, now, to begin getting ready.

The first step is breaking. Just when and how to break and how to proceed from then on depends in a minor way on the condition in which the garden is, but in a great majority of cases breaking should be done at the first opportunity, now. This is true in almost any year, but especially in this. Because of the shortage of rainfall this winter, the land is in excellent breaking condition. After the land is broken it will be better able to absorb and conserve the rain that will fall from now on. Since moisture plays so large a part in growing vegetables the importance of thus assuring a moisture reserve cannot be over-emphasized.

And, now, to discuss specific cases. Those persons who are fortunate enough to have a double garden, half of which stood in grass or in an early sown crop of rye, or if the "cover crop" was merely weeds, last year, should break without delay, previously to-dressing with a generous coat of manure. By "generous" is meant two loads to every square of space 100 feet on a side. If less manure than this can be had, it should be spread after breaking.

If the garden is bare, or covered only with fall sown rye or kale or turnip greens, the quantity of manure turned under may be increased by half, but breaking should be done now. It goes without saying that any vegetable tops or vines there are should not be removed, but turned under, for they furnish humus and some plant food. Turned under now, they will have decayed and broken up so as to give no trouble in cultivating, by the time the garden is put in. The same suggestions as to manuring just given apply here, as well.

After breaking should follow deep harrowing twice with a disc harrow, to cut up the furrow slices and to work in the manure in cases where it is applied after breaking. The garden will thus be left level and in the best possible condition for the rains that fall from now on to sink in.

This harowing should be given as well as gardens broken last fall or earlier this winter even though the rains this winter have not thus far caused soil to "run together." The object is to conserve rains from now on.

So much for garden preparation in regard to humus; next week the plant food question will be taken up.

Methods used by 52 Kentucky men who last year obtained an average of 300 pounds or more of butterfat per cow, were discussed by Ted S. Besh, field agent in dairying, at a meeting of dairy farmers during the Farm and Home Convention at the Experi- Kentucky at Lexington.

Thirty-three men furnished the College of Agriculture with information about how many managed their herds so as to secure more than double the average production of butterfat. These herds averaged 21 cows.

Four hundred and eighty-four of the 710 cows owned by the 33 men were raised on the farms of the owners, which shows that men with high producing herds believe in raising their cows. Half of the cows were purebred and all but 87 were sired by a purebred dairy bull. Bulls were selected with care 27 of the 32 in use being from high producing cows with production records.

Thirty-two of these dairy men plan to test the daughters of their present herd sire. Several said that they had owned good bulls which they permitted to go to the butcher because they did not know how well their daughters produced.

Twenty-nine of the 33 men use a home-mixed grain ration. Twenty-nine have silos and ten plan to have enough silage so that it can be fed during the dry late summer months when pastures are short.

Every man gives his cows a good dry period varying from five to eight weeks, and 30 men feed dry cows grain so that they will be in good condition at freshening time.

Twenty-four of the 33 men said they plan to have herds which will average 400 pounds of butterfat per cow.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

CHANGING DOCTORS

It has been said that it's a bad practice to swap horses in the middle of the stream. I think this applies quite as well to the aprupt changing of physicians in the middle of a protracted disease.

In the very nature of some complaints, they advance very slowly, taking sometimes months and years to produce complete disability. Diseases that come slowly are, as a rule, overcome slowly. A disorder that has been on hand two or three years cannot be cleaned up in as many weeks. Particularly is this true in diseases of the heart, lungs and kidneys. To shift physicians impatiently every two weeks, in the effort to secure quick relief, is to invite disaster; it takes in some cases of very serious disease, several months of intimate relation and study on the part of the physician, to tide the patient ashore safely. This cannot be done by shifting tactics on part of the invalid. It is his business to start right and stay right; his life may depend upon it.

Years ago, a wealthy man offered me $1000 to clear up one-fourth of one per cent of albumin from his urine. I accepted his bantering proposition. "What shall I do first," he asked, go to bed for four weeks," I answered. "Can't possibly do it; you see, I've got some business—" of course he had. All men have affairs.

He went to a "magnetic healer," who cured by laying on of the hands. $250 wasted. Another shift to a "pathy;" no better luck; then, to a "practic;" by this time dropsy was coming. A month with a masseur who agreed to "rub it out." It didn't rub out. The last I heard of the case, he had gone to bed and called his family doctor too late—the kidneys were far beyond possible relief. Swapping horses in mid-stream. That man should be alive today. But he was too busy to "stay put." He has been dead a long time.

If you suspect serious disease, talk to your physician—don't neglect his advice—he's your best bet.

The Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

MARTYRS

It was once my privilege to witness the establishment of a new religion.

The founder was John Alexander Dowie, who first appeared in the Chicago newspapers as an obscure exhorter with a talent for strong language. Though he went thru the city and suburbs holding outdoor meetings, he attracted comparatively little attention until one night a hoodlum hit him in the eye with a rotten egg.

At once he assumed a new character and importance. Instead of being merely a sensational denouncer he became an incipient martyr—a prophet persecuted for his faith. Converts flocked to his banner, money poured in, he founded his own city, and finally proclaimed himself the reincarnation of Elijah.

He had undoubted talent, but it was the stupidity of his opponents which persecuted him into success.

The fiery old doctor, with his picturesque white whiskers, has long since passed across the river, but I think about him whenever the newspapers begin to talk about the danger of "Red Riots" and the police break up a harmless mass meeting with their clubs.

England, older and wiser than we in many respects, manages these things much better. She knows that an agitator is harmless unless you try to suppress him. Only then does he become a menace. She sets aside one end of Hyde Park for the exclusive use of the agitators. There, every afternoon, and especially on Sundays, they meet and shoot off their faces against the government, the church and whatever else they dislike.

One of the wisest things President Hoover has done was to release the foolish young men and women who were arrested for picketing the White House. He said that he did not propose to let any silly folks achieve "cheap martyrdom" at the government's expense.

A wise man of an earlier day was a Pharisee named Gamaliel. When the first persecution of the Christians began he protested.

"Refrain from these men and let them alone, for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught. But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest happy ye be found even to fight against God."

If the Pharisees had taken his advice the new and struggling little sect might conceivably have passed out in obscurity. But they went on with their persecutions and "the blood of the martyrs became the seed of the church."

The county agent predicts an increase of 30 per cent in poultry raising in Grant county this year.

Wayne county's tobacco crop is estimated to have been worth $250,000, or more than double the value of the 1929 cro.

With 1,200 acres of korean lespedeza sown last year, Allen county farmers probably will sow twice that many acres this year.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS SENDING FORTH MISSIONARIES

Luke 10:1-11, 17, 21, 22

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Here is a lesson that is much larger than appears at first glance. Too many fail to reach the heart of the matter because they are about as unrelated as those who flippantly talk about "giving it the once over." Dig deep this time and you will discern the program that Jesus presented to complete His entire missionary enterprise. He did not plan to reach the people en masse, as when He fed the five thousand His plan was to go after the individual in a "Win One" campaign that should never end. Some time before He had commissioned the Twelve to go forth as workers. Now He starts Seventy on their way as ambassadors of the Kingdom of God.

In that day the area was more thickly peopled than now. Every individual was a prospect and the Master Teacher was eager to have each one invited to become a believer, a follower, and in turn a "Win One" worker in further extending the Kingdom. It was heart-breaking to see the populace in see he populace in their spiritual ignorance and without any inner power to help them up to God's way of thinking. Again, the Omniscient tells how the desired end can be accomplished. The same method is the one to be followed today though the population is much greater than in that generation. The direction is found in the Golden Text: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

Then you can rejoice at the result which was reported at the conclusion of the itinerary. The Seventy were able, through spiritual power, were wrought and these confirmed the value of the teachings. Why have thousands of churches in America not added a convert in a year?

Hints for the Home by Nancy Hart

ROAST VEAL

Select a piece of veal from the loin and have it boned. Fill with bread stuffing seasoned with onion. Dredge with salt pepper and a little flour and place in roasting pan with three slices of salt pork laid over the meat. Start cooking in a hot oven and continue in a moderate oven allowing twenty minutes to the pound—more if the roast is small. Baste frequently. Serve with gravy made from drippings in the pan.

CORN WITH PEPPERS

Two cups canned corn, nine tablespoons of grated cheese, six tablespoons of cracker crumbs, six green peppers, six slices tomatoes, one and one-half tablespoons butter.

Mix the corn with the salt and pepper and one-third of the cheese. Have ready the peppers which have been washed and the tops removed. Also the seeds and pulp. Fill the cavities with the corn mixture and sprinkle cheese on top. Arrange in a shallow baking pan with about one inch of water. Bake for ten minutes, beating several times. While this is being done, dip the tomatoes in the cracker crumbs and brown in the hot butter. Serve the peppers with a slice of tomato with each.

FRIED ALMONDS

Twenty rounding tablespoons of flour, four tablespoons of butter, four rounding tablespoons of sugar, one-half teaspoon of salt, one tablespoon of vanilla, one quarter-cup grated almonds. Stir together, roll, cut into almond shape and fry in hot oil. Drop into sugar mixed with cinnamon.

COCOANUT CREAM CANDY

One tablespoon butter, three-quarters cup milk, two cups sugar, one-half cup grated cocoanut, one-half teaspoon vanilla extract.

Melt butter in saucepan, add milk and sugar; stir until sugar is dissolved, heating slowly, boil twelve to fifteen minutes, remove from fire and add cocoanut and vanilla, beating until creamy. Pour into buttered tins and cool.

For chocolate cocoanut cream candy add three ounces unsweetened chocolate to other ingredients before boiling.

Gigantic Structure

Congress Realizes Desire Of Public For No Extra Session

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(BY FRED HOLMES)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

Washington—Almost two years ago your correspondent wrote that it took Uncle Sam's hired man, the Senate, forty years to find out that there was no good excuse for keeping business secrets from his boss. What caused that remark was the insistence of some Senators upon continuance of the antiquated practice of considering confirmation of presidential appointees in secret sessions.

Now Uncle Sam is wondering just how much longer it is going to take that arragant and haughty factotum to find out that he was hired to take orders, not give them. Once he was trustod to the extent of letting him have pretty much his own way, but now, as ex-President Coolidge recently remarked, it has become necessary for the country to tell Congress what it wants done.

Congress has been an unwilling pupil at the school of public opinion for about two months and now shows signs of having learned the principal lesson. That is that the people strongly desire it to finish the business in hand, without ostentatious embellishment or ambitious copiousness or amplification, so as to avoid an extra session of the new Congress. On the whole, it has been a rather painful experience for our legislators, many of whom started out with the idea, particularly held dear by Senator Borah, that the nation would be delighted to have Congress perpetually in session.

However, the almost unanimous verdict, voiced by the press, by chambers of commerce and by a deluge of private letters, has plainly been that the people generally would take intense satisfaction and delight over the absence of Congress until next December. Reluctant recognition of the public will and belated consent to how it characterizes the change of front at Washington. The country has been heard from. Each contumacious law-maker has had to harken to "his master's voice." There is nothing like this new temper to bring about such a compromise as has been arranged in the controversy over a Federal appropriation for the drought sufferers. While both sides claim the victory, it is unquestionably true that the victory was really won by public opinion. The bitter-tempered and utterly futile controversy had to be ended. With less than three weeks of the session left, Congress resolved to speed up the necessary appropriation bills and go home without regard for the many bombastic projects of legislation left helpless in the operating room. What is of greatest interest—if not importance—is that Congress has finally turned out to be an apt scholar and has learned what the people want. Primarily they want to be left free to go about their work of recovery from depression without legislative meddling.

With genuine public exultation over the prospect that Congress will adjourn in about two weeks and not convene again until next December a very serious question presents itself. Has the public really come to have a profound distrust of its own political institutions? We are taught that we are governing ourselves hrough our own elected repsesentatives, and yet many of us stand aghast lest our representatives should assemble. Certainly there has been a growing distrust of Congress and for many months it has been sinking steadily in public estimation, particularly in the industrial sections of the East and North. The reason for this sentiment is that for more than ten years the industrial sections have felt themselves underrepresented in Congress and at the mercy of a coalition which has artificial strength in the Senate on account of a system representation under which one-third of a million people in New Mexico, half a million people in Arizona and three-quarters of a million people in Montana have the same number of Senators as seven million people in Illinois, ten million people in Pennsylvania and eleven million people in New York. To the great mass of the people the practical effect of this unequal representation has been a realization that there is a growing tendency to vote money collected in the industrial States to the States represented by the coalition.

The mere fact that trusted and respected congressmen were ready to consider floating a bond issue of three and a half billion dollars to cash the veterans certificates would seem to have ruined the prestige of Congress. The proposal was so reckless, so unjust and such a manifest attempt to buy votes with public money that it is impossible to convince the Eastern business man that Congress ought to be in session to help the country through the present economic crisis.

Then again, it is said that there has been too much of working at cross purposes, with failure to understand what each was driving at, in all this controversy between the Senate and the President. Mr. Hoover's friends hastened to say this his message to Congress about the Wickersham report was entirely misinterpreted. Now they proceed to give it out that his "pledge to make use of a congressional appropriation, if it were needful to prevent American citizens from freezing or starving, did not at all mean what Congress thought it meant. Evidently Mr. Hoover is anxious to work in harmony with Congress, while Congress, on its part, must desire to co-operate with him, at least in all the great and urgent plans for relief work.

In any case, it should not be forgotten that the duty which lies nearest at hand is for the benovolent people of the country to make sure that the Red Cross is put in ample funds to do the work called for in the regions of the drought, without having to draw upon the money offered by Congress. This will be the surest way both to insure the relief of all in desperate straits and to close the dispute over exactly what either the President or Congress meant by the use of language confessedly indefinite.

Wanton Killing Had No Part in Military Code

Told by Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, commander of the Second division, United States marine corps, during the World war—In "The Reminiscences of a Marine:"

"It was interesting to watch the great care with which the French police instructed the relieving American soldiers. They explained every detail of duty with the utmost precision, including their own unwritten code. The opposing German troops were old reservists, as were many of the French in that quiet sector. They had faced each other for months and had learned to recognize each other across the narrow 'No Man's Land' which separated them.

"I was told that the morning after the Americans had gone into line a German soldier climbed up out of his trench and sat on the parapet in full view while he cleaned the equipment of the officer for whom he was probably the orderly. An American soldier promptly brought his piece to aim and was about to fire when his French comrade knocked it away, saying excitedly:

"'Do not shoot! He sits there every morning to get the air and to feel the sunshine. To kill him would be murder, not war.'"—Kansas City Star.

Earthly Discords Laid to Malevolent Goddess

Discordia in Greek legend was a malevolent deity, daughter of Nox, and sister to Nemesis, the Parcae and Death. She was driven from heaven by Jupiter, because she was there the cause of continual quarrels. When the nuptials of Peleus and Thetis were celebrated, this goddess was not invited; and the neglect so irritated her that she threw an apple into the midst of the gods, with the inscription of "Detur pulchriori" —"Let it be given to the most beautiful." This apple—the apple of discord—was the cause of the ruin of Troy and of great misfortunes to the Greeks. Discordia is represented with a ghastly look, and torn garment. Her head is usually entwined with serpents, and she is attended by Bellona. She was supposed to be the cause of all the dissensions which arise upon earth, public as well as private.

Strategy

Yes, the pupils in this schoolroom were responding very well to questions of the teacher, thought the visitor, particularly one small boy who snapped his fingers vigorously and loudly as each question was asked. The teacher admonished him several times: "Charles, if you don't stop snapping your fingers, I won't call on you."

At the close of the period, the visitor approached the enthusiastic young pupil and asked him why he had snapped his fingers so often.

"Aw," replied the boy, "I'm on to her," referring to the teacher, "When I don't know my lesson, I snap my fingers. She thinks I do, but she won't call on me because I snap my fingers. And I get a good grade for knowing the lesson."

Sleeve Buttons

No one can say definitely how the custom of wearing sleeve buttons originated, though it probably had some practical purpose at first. They may have been used to fasten the turned-up cuffs when these were rolled up for protection. There is another tradition that Frederick the Great put buttons on the sleeves of his soldiers' uniforms to prevent his men from soiling the sleeves in wiping the perspiration from their faces. The buttons were first placed on the upper side of the sleeve, but as they became part of the accepted style their position was shifted to the lower side.

Domesticity at Large

In one of the night clubs last week a gentleman and a lady were quietly supping when another lady entered, strode up to the man, fixed her eye on him coldly, and said: "I may be your wife, but—" and, picking up the tomato bisque before him, poured it over his shirt-front. We report this rowdy incident only to call the attention of the Humanists to the masterful way in which the head waiter met the emergency. With suave reproach he admonished the wife: "Madame, the place for that is in the home"—The New Yorker.

Making It Perpetual

Mother had been coaching her young daughter to say "Pardon me, please!" when passing before her elders. The youngster had been racing back and forth in front of some guests, in fact did it so frequently that she grew tired of parading her politeness. Finally she forgot to say "Pardon me, please!" and her mother reproached her.

Little Miss Polite suddenly halted, turned to the guests and said:

"Excuse me indefinitely. Mother is getting displeased!"

What?

Two persons of rather ample proportions were overheard talking on the street car. They were apparently brother and sister and when they entered the car the man immediately took the only seat, leaving the woman to stand.

"Gentlemen always let ladies sit down!" said the woman.

"Well," retorted her companion, "What's that got to do with us?"

NEW PRESIDENT

OF KENTUCKY PRESS ASSOCIATION IS "ABLE, FEARLESS AND ENTERPRISING," ACCORDING TO JOURNALISTIC HEAD OF MURRAY STATE COLLEGE —IS 31 YEARS OLD

By L. J. Hortin, Head of Journalism Murray State College

Joe T. Lovett, editor of the Murray Ledger and Times, who was elected president of the Kentucky Press Association at its mid-winter meeting in Lexington on January 31, has established an enviable reputation as an able, fearless, enterprising newspaper publisher. He was a speaker on the program of the West Kentucky Press Group February 6. His experience has been varied and thorough in its scope. On the Paducah Sun in 1921, Mr. Lovett began his newspaper career which had extended through nine years. In the fall of that year he was sports editor of the Lexington Herald at Lexington, Ky. For six and one-half years, "Joe," as he is familiarly known in his home town, edited and published the Benton Tribune-Democrat.

Under his capable management, the Tribune-Democrat won third place in 1924 in the "Best Newspaper Contest" in Kentucky. Mr. Lovett, who is the son of Judge John G. Lovett, attorney in Benton, came to Murray in October, 1928, to publish the Murray Ledger and the Calloway Times.

Although only 31 years of age, Lovett has become well known in Kentucky for less fearless editorials and his "newsy" publication. He is a member of the Murray Rotary Club and the Methodist church. At Benton he was president of the Young Men's Progress Club. He is the father of two boys, who aspire to follow either in the footsteps of their father or of their grandfather Dr. Rainey T. Wells, president of Murray State College. Mrs. Lovett who is a capable assistant of her husband in the gathering of news, was a member of the first board of college regents at Murray.

Lovett's training has not been exclusively in the professional field. He was graduated from the University of Kentucky with an A. B. degree in 1922. His major subjects in the state educational institution were economics and journalism. He was a member of the S. A. E. and the Alpha Delta Sigma fraternities.

From December 1917 until July 1919, Mr. Lovett served his country in the World War. A year of this time was spent over seas.

The Murray Ledger and Times of which Mr. Lovett is publisher, prints many other puolications: College News, Murray State College; Lynn Grove Arrow, Lynn Grove Hi School; News and Truths the Rev. Boyce Taylor, Baptist church; The Pennant, Murray High School; Kirksey Echo, Kirksey High School; Hospital News, Mason Memorial Hospital.

Members of the executive committee in the Kentucky Press Associations are: A. Robbins, Hickman; J. P. Gozder, Campbellsville, Keith Hood, Bedford; Desha Breckenridge, Lexington; B. Platt, Louisville; R. L. Elkin, Lancaster, Warren Fisher, Carlisle; Charles A. Kirk, Paintsville; George A. Joplin, Somerset; and Joe Richardson, Glasgow. Mr. Lovett succeeds Herndon Evans of the Pineville Sun.

COUNTY AGENT RECEIVES NO FEE

Neither the County Agent or the Boone County Federal Seed Loan Committee receive any pay whatever for filling out seed loan applications. This statement is made due to a news article published in one of the daily papers indicating that a five dollar fee was being charged.

County Agent H. R. Forkner wishes to state that this is not true and that if such a fee should have been allowed the county agent in his official position could not accept it. There is no charge for filling out or securing seed loans except in the case of the Notary Public fee which Notary Publics have offered to donate.

IN REMEMBRANCE

In loving remembrance of Mary Afterkirk.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled.

God in His wisdom has recalled,
The boon his love has given,
And tho the body slumbers there,
The soul is safe in Heaven.

Spencer Smith, one of our up-to-date farmers, finished plowing for this year's crop a few days since.

A cold wave struck our ridge last week which checked farm work to some extent but we all had the pleasure of having ice water to drink.

REPORT OF RED CROSS NURSING SERVCE FOR JANUARY 1931

During January I have had numerous interviews with people coming to me with social problems. I made investigations in ten homes because of these interviews, and was consulted by members of ten other families with similar problems, these problems are not strictly speaking, a Public Health Nurse's work, only so far as it relates to the Health conditions, and because of the fact that I can bring no real solution to them. Because most often they are asking for material aid, which I can not dispenses even had I a fund to draw from, which our county has not, so that it has made my work of the month most trying, for there is one thing I do sincerely love to do, and that is to WORK and then to have the work AVAIL. I am glad to investigate if I then had some one to give the information to who was prepared to work out a plan of solution, however I wish to say, many of the cases so far referred to me could and should work out their own solution, and only need to be made to feel their BURDEN of themselves. It is of equal importance in advancing health that individuals day by day pursue which requires the exercise of work as that they keep other health rules.

I made arrangements for operation and treatment for two cases in Cincinnati at the Murphy Memorial Hospital and carried the girls in for these.

I attended the State Crippled Children's Clinic in Covington on Jan. 28th, taking a child who has been in the Shriner Hospital in Louisville for treatment that her condition at present could be checked on.

I am glad to report a finding of 15 corrections of physical defects among the school children for the month.

Miss Anna B. Quinn, of the State Crippled Children's Commission, spent one day with me, going over the cases from our county who have received care from the Commission.

Miss Sarah Hays, Chapter Field Director of the American Red Cross for Kentucky, spent one day with the local chapter in official service.

Miss Margaret L. Digney, Nursing Field Director of the American Red Cross for five Southern States, Kentucky included, spent two days with me. Miss Digney is just succeeding Miss Dunn in this service, being already a warm personal friend of mine, it was with great happiness that I welcomed her, and that she came to Boone county, a Kentuckian herself, knowing our problems already, and filled with a desire for our work in this county to advance in methods and good results she brought me much to encourage and help me through the tedious days of work during mid-winter, the most hazardous season of the year so far as illness is concerned.

EUNIE B WILLIS,
Red Cross P. H. N.

The Peoples Deposit Bank, treasurer of the Burlington street light fund, reports that no additional money has been paid in for the 1931 street lights since last week. They also state that the January bill has not been paid and that they are holding up the payment in a spirit of fairness to those who already have deposited their money in the fund that in all probability will be turned back to the contributors, if a sufficient amount is not subscribed to carry all the way thru the current year. They are expecting that a notice will be received any day that the company will be forced to cut off the current and "leave the world to darkness and to —what?"

Dr. Spencer Shanks, a doctor of philosophy and assistant professor of Education in the University of Cincinnati, was a visitor at the Baptist church here last Sunday and made a very interesting and elevating lecture to the men's Bible class. Dr. Shanks' talk will be remembered a long time by those who were fortunate enough to hear it. His topic was "High School Boys in the Present Day Church."

Friday the thirteenth, better known as Black Cat Day brought a good rain. It comes around again in March and every one is hoping that it brings nothing worse nor better than another of like proportion.

Harvey H. Souther, of near Constance, paid the Recorder office a business call on Monday of this week, leaving with us an advertisement for the sale of his herd of Jersey and Holstein dairy cattle, as well as some other farm equipment. Mr. Souther has a very satisfactory position with the Fisher Body Company, of Cincinnati, and desires to discontinue the dairy business. The cows which he will sell at auction on March 7th, have been carefully selected over a period of years of study of his herd and anyone desiring good milk stock certainly will profit by attending this sale.

Mr. and Mrs. D R. Blythe entertained on Monday of this week Miss Edna Berkshire and B. H. Berksnire, both of Petersburg, and Mrs. Claude Tandy, of Carrollton.

THE OUTDOOR LIVING ROOM

People living in the towns and cities often fail to appreciate the possibilities of having an attractive back yard. With little expense and work a side lawn or back yard often can be made into a delightful outdoor living room.

The first thing to do is to clean up the trash and smooth out the uneven places in the ground so that the surface of the soil will be comparatively level. If the side lawn or the back lawn is already in grass, sow grass seed on this in March and again in April. Bluegrass mixed with redtop, using 4 parts by weight of Kentucky bluegrass and one yart by weight of redtop, makes a satisfactory grass mixture for practically all sections of Kentucky, according to N. R. Elliott of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. If the side lawn or the back yard does not have grass on it, then the soil should be prepared by thoroughly loosening it up, spading deep or plowing. If the ground is exceedingly poor add some good soil and prepare a fertile seed bed. Then sow the grass seed, making a heavy sowing. If the space to be covered is 25 by 50 feet, sow five pounds of Kentucky blue grass and one and one-half pounds of redtop. After the seed has been sown roll the soil two or three times, using a hand roller. Do not allow the young grass to suffer for want of water, especially where the soil is just being established. If commercial fertilizers are used, sulphate of ammonia is probably the best. A liberal application is a pound to a pound and a half per square rod of surface. This can be applied before the grass seed is sown, or wait until after the young grass has started to grow. If this fertilizer is applied after the young grass has started to grow, select a time when the grass is perfectly dry in the middle of a warm day in April or May. Mix the fertilizer with equal parts of soil and broadcast. After this soil and fertilizers have been broadcast thoroughly sprinkle the lawn so that no burning effects will result.

Apply plenty of water throughout the first summer. By this means it will be possible to establish a good sod, and this is the foundation of a delightful outdoor living room.

The sides of this living room can be screened by plantings of shrubs, and the flowers can be arranged so that they will fit in with the scheme, making it very attractive.

One or two carefully selected and well placed shade trees will furnish shade for the average side or back lawn. In locating these trees observe the shadows in the middle of the day and the afternoon and see where you will want the shade at differenet times. You can do this by standing in the sunlight and watching your shadow. Plant the tree so that it will give shade on the space cast by your shadow. This method of locating trees is for utility purpose of furnishing shade.

These outdoor living rooms can be made a joy, because they are continually changing as the season advances, and as the years go by the plants grow and develop until they can really be made one of the most attractive places around the home.

W. M. U. MEETING

The W. M. U. of Big Bone met and held their regular meeting Thursday of last week Feb. 12th with their worthy president Mrs. Bertha Huff. To say we had an enjoyable day would not be saying enough for the occasion. Twenty-seven were present, 17of them being members of our own society.

We are taking Mission Study Book just at this time entitled Larger Stewardship, which has a very inspiring thought with each of us. We have quite a lot of business as this is about the beginning of new year and our motto is to be up to the standard, and we wish to work to that.

At 3:30 we all adjourned to hold our next meeting with Mrs. May and Mary Hubbard on the 2nd of March. All members are asked to come.

MRS. PAUL AYLOR,
Chairman.

Raymond Gaines, of near Idlewild, but who makes his home in Covington during the tobacco selling season, was in Burlington Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Gaines reports that the Tri-State Tobacco Warehouse, in which he is interested, closed its doors last Friday for the season of 1930-31 after a very satisfactory season in spite of the sudden drop in prices toward the close. He says that the Tri-State house handled more than its season's share of the weed, although the total amount was considerably below that of last year on account of the general crop shortage in this section of the burley belt.

The death of James E. Grant, 46, a retired dentist occurred at Louisville last week. Dr. Grant also was engaged in the real estate business. He was a son of the late Thos. Grant and a cousin of B. B. Grant, of Burlington.

NEGRO RIOT QUELLED

Deputy Sheriff Frank Walton was called to Richwood last Sunday morning to quell a drunken riot among the colored citizens in the railroad settlement. Several arrests were made and one man was seriously wounded about the head. One gash on his head disclosed the bare skull. At a trial before Judge Riddel: Monday the man who inflicted the punishment was fined $20 and costs.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Hensley had as guests Sunday week their son and daughter Robert and Elizabeth, Kathryn Maurer, Mary Louise Reaker, Milburn Mills and Bart Hill.

Untold Wealth Awaiting Spread of Man's Empire

The earth's surface has been explored incompletely, and practically nothing of the interior. The Mediterranean sea washes the corpses of forgotten civilizations, while the submarine seascape exhibits topography that is unmatched on dry earth. Off the west coast of Japan lies a gulch five times deeper than the Grand canyon of Arizona.

Our deepest mines descend about one mile; but to reach a depth where earth heat can be electrified we may have to bore 20 miles. Here is exploration on a titanic scale for engineers, inventors, and adventurers.

Millions of tons of platinum and gold and silver are held in suspension and chemical combination by sea water.

No one looks on the globe without wondering why land should waste. The Sahara, the Australian interior, the American desert, and hundreds of thousands of square miles in South America, China, Borneo, Tibet, Alaska, and the Canadian Arctic are wasted territory. Here are exalting fields for labor. Every desert can be made to flower, every swamp can be drained, every tundra thawed out. Man's empire can expand to every spot where oxygen is available.

Short Shrift Accorded Bible in "Fine Writing"

"Refined" versions of Holy Scripture go back as far as the Fourth century of our era, when the pagan emperor Julian forbade Christians to use the classical Greek and Latin writers in their schools on the ground that they had no right to do so, as they had rejected the religious beliefs underlying them, writes a columnist in the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian. Some Christians thought that the deprivation was small, but others, notably a certain Apollinarius, who before his conversion had been a Sophist at Beyrout, began to improvise a Christian "literature." The Bible as it stood was not deemed to be a suitable instrument of literary instruction, so the old teacher, along with his son, who in later years became known as the leader of the Apollinarian heresy, set himself to put the Bible into "fine writing." The historical books of the Old Testament were to be turned into epic verse, the Psalms into Pindaric odes, and the Gospels into Socratic dialogues. But the reign of Julian was short, and so was the survival of this "literary Bible."

"Defender of the Faith"

Henry VIII, who was a political rather than a theological rebel against the Roman church, and in his youth was a champion of orthodoxy, wrote a book in defense of the seven sacraments against Luther. In recognition of his services, Pope Leo X granted to him in 1521 the title of "Defender of the Faith," so putting him on an equal footing with the "Catholic" king of Spain and the "Most Christian" king of France. After Henry's break with Rome, Pope Paul III revoked the title; but in 1544 Henry obtained an act of his own parliament conferring the same title upon him. It has been borne ever since by the sovereigns of England, and appears on the coins as FID. DEF. (Fidei Defensor).—Continental Edition of the London Daily Mail.

Song Writer's Inspiration

The song, "After the Ball," was written by the late Charles K. Harris. It was at a ball in Chicago that Harris found what he terms the inspiration for his song. He and a Kentucky girl to whom his hostess introduced him danced together all evening. In their group was an engaged couple who quarreled during the dance. The man "took home" another girl. His former fiancee attempted to disguise her unhappiness—seeing this, Harris thought to himself, "Many a heart is aching after the ball." This was the inception of the well-known song. In one hour's time music and lyric were written.

A number of relatives and friends gathered at the home of Calvin Cress last Wednesday to celebrate his birthday. He was 44 years old. All thirteen of their children were there.

Calvin Cress received word Friday of the death of his sister's boy. This makes three deaths in their family in the last three months.

Longhorns Found Death in Flocing From Storm

The plains have their mysteries as well as the sea. One night, many years ago, the cowboys on a range in the Rio Grande country of Texas looked over the herd of 5,000 longhorn cattle, saw that they were made fairly comfortable for the night and left them. The next morning the entire herd had disappeared and nothing was ever heard of them. The country was scoured without avail and repeated inquiry and investigation which was strung out for years failed to reveal anything which would lead to the location of the missing cattle. Recently a Texas prospector undertook to locate a silver mine of which he had heard and found the mouth of a cave. He explored, and in it discovered the bones of thousands of longhorn cattle. The explanation is that the herd was stampeded by a blizzard which came up in the night and the animals found their way into the cave, the opening of which was subsequently covered by the drifting snow. The cattle were unable to find their way out and the whole group perished of starvation.

Choice of Life Partner Strictly Up to Daughter

Doctor Brougher, Boston pastor, declared that education is the best cure for all ills, whether they be physical or mental, religious or commercial.

"Yes, education applies even to marriage," he added, "and should be a vital factor in the selection of a wife or husband. I believe much as did the American millionaire who had been approached by a young foreigner who boasted a title but no cash.

"'No,' said the millionaire, 'I have no personal objection to your marrying my daughter. It's strictly up to her, so go and ask her.

"'Frankly you are not my idea of a son-in-law and I have a hunch you won't be, but as I said before, I won't interfere.

"'You see, I've given my daughter a good education and taught her to read the newspapers and if she doesn't know enough by this time to say 'No,' why, then, she doesn't deserve any better luck.'"

When Ignorance Was Bliss

John Casey came to us in great anxiety, says a Red Cross worker stationed at Bordeaux. He had heard nothing from home in many weeks, and his wife was expecting a baby. So we cabled for him.

Even cables were slow in those days. When the answering cable reached us, Casey had been evacuated to a convalescent camp a mile or two away. It was just as well, for the cable read as follows:

"Tell John Casey wife and five baby boys doing well."

It was 24 hours before we could get hold of Casey. Meanwhile a corrected cable reached us:

"Tell John Casey wife and fine baby boy doing well."—Boston Globe.

Nation's Population Center

The center of population, according to the bureau of the census, may be said to represent the center of gravity of the population. If the surface of the United States be considered as a rigid plane without weight, capable of sustaining the population distributed thereon, individuals being assumed to be of equal weight, and each, therefore, to exert a pressure on any supporting pivotal point directly proportional to his distance from the point, the pivotal point on which the plane balances would, of course, be its center of gravity, and this is the point referred to by the term "center of population" as used by the bureau of the census in its reports.

Tree Ring Calendar

No doubt you have often wondered how scientists tell the dates of the various famous old ruins they find in western United States. Neil M. Judd, curator of New world archeology at the National museum, says nature provides an exact calendar for science in its search for these dates. Buried trees tell the age of the ruins almost to the year by their petrified rings, he claims. Whenever a bit of old log or timber is found it is carefully dug up and saved. A cross-section of such a find shows the rings which give the approximate dates it grew and was buried.

Horsepower

One horsepower is equivalent to 33,000 foot-pounds per minute. The foot-pound is the unit of work or energy and is defined as the work done in raising one pound avoirdupois the height of one foot, against the force of gravity. It was adopted by James Watt, the famous engineer, after many experiments to find the loads that strong draft horses could pull, though as he was aware, it is in excess of the power of an average horse. It is simply an arbitrary unit, equivalent to 746 watts or electrical units.

New Customer for Company

The new baby is one of the best customers of the electric company. It requires additional lighting at night, the use of supplemental heating during the bathing hour and it causes more washing and ironing. Then there are the electric milk warmers and other equipment which add to baby's joy and comfort. Many high bill complaints have been settled to the entire satisfaction of the customer by pointing out that the increase complained about was due to the new arrival.

Rhode Island First to Curb Reckless Driver

The first speed law, or very nearly the first, in America was passed by the Colonial assembly of Rhode Island in 1678 after a child had been run down by an equestrian:

"Whereas there was very lately in the town of Newport on Rhode Island very great hurte done to a small childe by reason of exceeding fast and hard riding of horses in said town, this assembly takeing the matter into their serious consideration and being desirous for the future to prevent the like mischief, doe ordain, et cetera—that from and after the publication hereof, if any person or persons shall presume to ride on either horse, mare or gelding, a gallup or to run speed—in the streets of Newport—said person shall for his offense pay into the treasurer of said towne 5 shillings in money on demand; 2 shillings of which shall be paid to any person or persons that shall give information thereof and the other 3 shillings to remain for the use of said towne."—Detroit News.

Speed Made No Appeal to Hidebound Royalty

Members of the royal family were at first reluctant to travel by rail, writes a columnist in the Manchester Guardian. Queen Victoria did not make her first journey until June, 1842, when she traveled from London to Windsor in the "Royal Mail Road Carriage" constructed two years previously in a spirit of loyal anticipation.

The queen disliked high railway speeds, and on her journeys to Balmoral never exceeded 20 miles an hour. According to tradition, the prince consort was on one occasion know to request "Not quite so fast next time, Mr. Conductor, please."

In France it was even harder to induce royalty to travel by the new-fangled method of conveyance. When Louis Philippe proposed to travel to Rouen by a special train in 1843 his ministers were struck with consternation and held a special cabinet meeting. They came to the conclusion that the railway was not safe enough for the transport of the royal person, and the king had recourse to post horses.

Wonderful Nimes Bridge

Visitors to the city of Nimes in the south of France make it a point to see the Pont du Grad and they are generally directed to make it a point to see the mighty span at twilight. Like all great Roman remains it belongs to the twilight. The gorge will fold itself into a strange silence and solitude at that hour. Three tiers high, the vast bridge seems to know that it is one of the greatest stone monuments in the world, a fellow of the Pyramid, or Stonehedge or with the mysteries of Easter island. It has a masculine beauty. There is nothing delicate about it, except the thought that its huge yellow blocks of conduit stones carried for centuries the silver liquor of two springs to the peoples of Nimes.

Beneficent Father Nile

When flood conditions are favorable, the retreating waters leave the whole valley of the Nile covered thickly with black rich mud. No plow is necessary, as a rule. Seed wheat is thrown on to the soft mud, trodden or raked in, and the warm tropical sun does the rest for the farmer. The grain grows and matures rapidly, clear from weeds, and easily harvested.

Thus Egypt is free from the menace of dry seasons—the curse of the East—and is, excepting in very rare circumstances, certain to have good crops. "Corn in Egypt," came to have a proverbial meaning through a wide section of semi-tropical country, when there was shortage of wheat elsewhere.

Dead City of Hoorn

Hoorn is one of the so-called "dead cities" of the Zuyder zee. All who visit the quaint old place should recall that in 1616, Willem Schouten, one of the greatest of old Dutch navigators, was the first to double Cape Horn, which is named after his native town. Hoorn is a quiet, out-of-the-way place and suggests little today of the enterprising and flourishing port it was in the days of Dutch sea power. The fine old Stadhuis, its guest houses, churches, orphanages all seem apparitions from the Seventeeth century.

Coloring Gold

The simplest way to produce the various colors of gold is to alloy it with other metals, copper giving a red-dish tinge, silver a white tinge, white an alloy of gold, silver and copper may have a greenish tone. An alloy of three parts of gold to one part silver is green, while three parts gold to one part copper is red. In the same way, special alloying gives the popular white gold. The wearing quality depends on other factors besides the amount of gold in the alloy, as expressed in carats.

Depended on the Weather

A kindly but somewhat patronizing landlady inquired of the young bride how she and her husband proposed to spend their holiday.

"Our plans so far," replied the bride, a little distantly, "are tentative."

"Oh, how delightful!" exclaimed the landlady. "I'm sure you'll enjoy camping more than anything else you could do."—Border Cities Star.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

URGES FARMERS TO REDUCE COSTS AND IMPROVE QUALITY

Farmers are advised to give attention to reducing costs of production and to improved quality, rather than increased acreages, in the annual outlook report of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

With a few exceptions, prices for farm products are not expected to improve much during the year, although demand may slowly improve and a greater price stability result.

The report stresses the need of reducing expenses, or producing at low costs. Quality of tobacco and other crops, livestock and fruit is also emphasized, in order that farmers may obtain the additional prices that come from quality products.

The report points out that labor, fertilizers and other materials which farmers buy are down in price, which should help them to reduce their expenses.

Tobacco—The report declares that a continuation of the 1930 burley tobacco acreage would likely result in so much tobacco that prices would be lower for the 1931 crop. It urges economical production and attention to quality, rather than expansion of acreage. The 1930 acreage at normal yields would produce about 365,000,000 pounds, which would mean a big surplus.

The outlook for Kentucky and Tennessee fire-cured types are chiefly dependent on developments in foreign markets, and their probable purchases in 1931 and 1932 now are considered uncertain.

Henderson fire-cured is considered in a favorable position, since consumption has been greater than production in the past four years.

The outlook for one-sucker type is considered favorable. Acreages have increased and storage supplies are large.

Green River and Henderson air-cured types are expected to continue about at present prices, provided production is not greatly increased.

Sheep and Lambs—Kentucky sheep raisers are in a more favorable position than sheep men in other sections of the country. The numbers of sheep have decreased in this state and have not increased in states which market lambs in direct competition with Kentucky lambs. Production of lambs in other areas will probably be large. Farmers are therefore advised to use good management so as to be able to market prime early lambs before the western run, which will likely be large, begins in late June or early July.

Beef Cattle—Unless business conditions improve so as to increase the demand for beef, cattle prices probably will be on a somewhat lower level during the first half of this year than prevailed during the corresponding period of 1930, but they will still be at a level that is favorable as compared with most farm products.

Hogs—Hog supplies probably will be smaller, and with relatively low feed costs, hogs should be profitable in sections of the state where favorable hog raising and feeding conditions prevail.

Dairy Products—The number of milk cows in the country as a whole has increased, and production has improved because of low feed costs. At the same time the demand for dairy products has dropped. Present indications point to continued low prices this year.

Poultry and Eggs—Egg prices are expected to continue relatively low during the first half of the year but should improve the latter half because of fewer pullets raised. Poultry prices are expected to be higher the latter half of the year. Farmers are advised to maintain normal flocks.

Strawberries—The market outlook for strawberries in 1931 is favorable, due to prospective small supplies in Kentucky and in competing states.

CROP LOAN COMMITTEES NEED CLERICAL HELP

Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, has appealed to luncheon clubs or other civic organizations to furnish stenographic and other clerical help to county advisory crop loan committees and county farm agents who are handling the applications of farmers for government loans.

The local committees are doing this work without compensation and without clerical help, he said, and in many instances applications are so numerous as to make this a big job.

Dean Cooper said that he had received information from county committees and the farmers' seed loan office in St. Lous that many Kentucky farmers were applying for loans. In several counties local committees are already overwhelmed with applications.

"Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and other luncheon clubs could do a good piece of work by providing these committees with stenographic and clerical help," he said.

"The large number of calls for loans and the expressions of farmers filing applications indicate that this action on the part of the government is much appreciated. In fact, in some sections these loans will be the only available source of credit in financing the production of this year's crops.

"Applications should be kept going to the St. Louis office as fast as presented by farmers, which means that many committees are facing a big job. I am appealing to luncheon clubs to lend a hand by seeing that local loan committees and county agents are given clerical help."

FARM ACCOUNT RECORDS COMPLETED

Kentucky Farm Account Records for 1930 were completed the past week by ten Boone county farmers. These records include a beginning and closing inventory and a complete record of all farm expenses and receipts. The records will be analized by the Farm Management Department of the College of Agriculture who give a complete farm analysis to each cooperator.

Those Boone cunty farmers who kept complete farm account records during 1930 are P. J. Maddin and R. P. Hughes, Verona; Robt. Youell, Wilford Rouse, Benjamin Stephens, Joel Gray, Wilton Stephens, Maurer Bros., and Rober Utz, of Burlington, and Sterling Rouse, of Ludlow R. D. 2. A number of new cooperators will keep records during 1931. Complete farm accounts furnish the most accurate rule by which to judge the farm business.

Freed From Pain After Suffering Two Years

"For two long years I was in agony, the pains were so severe I lost much sleep and became very nervous, my limbs were swollen—I carefully followed advice rendered me by people who were supposed to know. I took medicine daily, but none seemed to affect my condition.

"As time went on I became desperate, my kidneys were bothering me more than ever, my bladder had become weak, and I was compelled to arise many times during the night. Karnak was recommended and I decided to find out just what it would do. I have used several bottles and just what a glorious change, no one can ever realize. I have no pain whatsoever, my system is gradually becoming normal and I feel better than I have in years. I shall always praise and advise Karnak to anyone suffering from rheumatism."

Special Training Given to German Farm Girls

In Germany, where modern farm machinery is prohibitive in cost, one sees the farm girls not only as assistant housekeepers, but working in groups in the fields. For such girls training schools have been established, of which the one at Wusterhausen an der Dosse is a good example. This school is in the province of Brandenburg, not far from Berlin.

The school trains girls in various branches of agriculture and housekeeping by providing practical experience in both. An agricultural commission of the Brandenburg province founded the institution in 1908. It has 12 acres of ground, part of which is on the shore of a pretty lake.

Special attention is given to cooking and baking; the various methods of canning and of storing vegetables and fruits are taught, as well as the preparation of fruit wines, the salting and smoking of various meats and even dining-table service. In the kitchen one sees the girls at work at these tasks dressed in their blue and red-striped aprons, blue dresses and white headgear—which add to the immaculate appearance of the glistening white-tiled walls and floor.

The work changes with the seasons and so in the winter comes the hog-killing and dressing, sausage-making and poultry dressing. Cheese, of course, are made the year round. Then there is the apiary. The girls at Wusterhausen don their bee-veils and rob the hives. During the winter months the girls have their lessons in health and hygiene, nursing the ill, care and training of the infant, buying, bookkeeping and art for the home.

Special Water Provided for "Residents" of Zoo

The merchant ships that move about the world's ocean carry a variety of queer things in their holds. One may arrive at Hamburg with a consignment of elephants for the world's circuses; another may discharge at Secondee tons upon tons of ancient uniforms for the adornment of native chiefs. But perhaps the quaintest cargo ever borne at St. Katherines' dock, in London, from the Philomel. She was loaded with sea water. Most ships pump out sea water as fast as it makes its way in, but this one pumped it into special tanks and carried it all the way from the bay of Biscay to London, in fact, she makes a habit of doing it. The water is for the fish in the aquarium at the zoo, and only in the bay of Biscay can the required crystal-clear water be obtained. It comes from a small stretch of ocean between Bordeaux and Ushant. Each tank is sealed as soon as it is filled, and on arrival in London it is tested in the zoo laboratories.

In the Saxon Alps

When you are in Dresden, says a traveler, take the 45-minute ride to Rathen, a lovely little village on the Elbe, where Saxon Switzerland begins. The highest "mountains" in this section are only about 400 feet from the base, but many a climber who has conquered Mont Blanc has had to hesitate before them. The Germans are fond of testing their skill on the Saxon Alps, and come in large numbers every year. Perpendicular cliffs provide very few ledges for feet and hands, and the usual mountaineering technique is useless. But because of the coarse sandstone rock, a soft shoe and a clutching hand hold firmly to the flat surface—it is this trick which makes such a sport of climbing in Saxony.

Beethoven Proud of Piano

In 1818 Beethoven received a present of a splendid piano from some English makers and beside the keyboard the leading British virtuosi had scratched their names. Robert Haven Schauffler writes in the Outlook. Beethoven was delighted. In his most elegant French he wrote a letter of thanks, promising to regard the piano "as an altar on which I shall present to the divine Apollo the highest offerings of my spirit."

When told it was out of tune he replied with the characteristic suspicion of the deaf: "That's what they all say. They would like to tune it and spoil it; but they shan't touch it."

London Police Weapon

A wooden truncheon, or staff, made of cocus wood, 15 inches long, with a leather strap to secure it to the wrist, is the traditional weapon of the Metropolitan police of London. Revolvers are kept only at the stations, to be issued in special cases where there is reason to believe that encounters with armed criminals are likely to occur. Mounted police have longer truncheons. The Metropolitan police orders provide that truncheons are to be used only in extreme cases, and whenever used by a constable must be submitted to the station officer for subsequent inspection.

Awkward

A weak-looking little man called in a physical culture expert for advice as to how to strengthen his arm muscles. The expert gave him a chart of exercises, and said as he pocketed his fee: "All these exercises for increased strength must be done in front of the open window."

The little man looked doubtful.

"That's rather difficult," he said. "You see, I want the increased strength first so that I can open the darned window!"

ELBERT ROBERTS

Elbert Roberts, son of John O. and Fannie Craven Roberts, of Burlington, Boone county, passed away at his home in Covington, Ky., Feb. 10, following a lingering illness of paralysis.

He is survived by his wife Edna Cason Roberts, one son Melvin Roberts, one brother Harry Roberts, of Erlanger, and two sisters, Mrs. Harry Brown and Mrs. Clifford Norman, of Covington, and many other relatives.

Funeral services were conducted at his home by Rev. H. G. Runyan, of Latonia Christian church, Feb. 12th, at 2 p. m., after which the remains were interred in the I. O. O. F. cemetery at Burlington.

W. A. Bullock, of Hebron, had charge of the funeral arrangements.

APRIL 25TH

IS DATE NAMED FOR OPENING OF BOONE COUNTY BASE BALL LEAGUE — R. E. BERKSHIRE AND JOE AYLOR RE-ELECTED AS PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY RESPECTIVELY— MANY CHANGES MADE IN THE RULES

That Boone county will take its base ball in an organized way again this year was definitely determined at a meeting held at the court house Monday night.

The teams represented at the meeting were [illegible] although it is possible that the latter team may not face the barrier at starting time.

R. E. Berkshire president of the league in 1930, was unable to attend the meeting on account of illness, but was re-elected for 1931. Joe Aylor, of Hebron, again was named secretary.

It was definitely decided that the official opening will take place on April 25th.

A number of important changes were made in the rules and regulations as compared to 1930.

The principle change was the fact that there will be no geographical limit as to where players live. Disputes that arose over the citizenship of players caused the team representatives to simplify matters by making this drastic change this year.

Another important change that was made allows each team only three weeks after the opening of the season in which to perfect its list of men with which it intends to go through the season. Last year each team was allowed until June 15th for this purpose. The player limit will be fifteen (15) again this year.

Those fans and players who approved of the elimination series at the close of the regular schedule will be pleased to know that this plan will be repeated this year. It seemed to meet with more or less general approval last year.

The next league meeting will be held on April 1st, at which time the schedule will be taken up and other important matters discussed.

Few people realize the service a bank renders and the accurate record it keeps of a customer's business.

One day last week some heirs of a former customer of the Old Boone County Deposit Bank made inquiry by letter concerning an account that a lady once had with this bank more than 41 years ago.

Notwithstanding the fact that this was a long time ago the officials of the Peoples Deposit Bank, in whose care all the old records of the Boone County Bank are now held, were able within 30 minutes to give all necessary data in detail concerning this account.

DR. EDGAR DeWITT JONES TO BROADCAST SUNDAY

Friends of Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones may hear his voice on the air next Sunday night from station W. M. A. Q. Chicago, our informant did not catch the hour exactly, but it is said to be either 8a00 or 8:30 p. m. (Central Time). Dr. Jones' excellent qualities are well known throughout Boone county and every one should tune in on his address next Sunday. He will speak as the guest of the Chicago Evening Club.

EDITOR IS ILL

Since Sunday R. E. Berkshire, editor of the Recorder, has been confined to his bed due to a very serious attack of indigestion. It will be several days before he is able to be back at his post.

SPOTLIGHT

OF NORTHERN KENTUCKY BASKET BALL IS TURNED ON BURLINGTON THIS WEEK — BAPTISTS TRIM "BEST TEAM IN LEAGUE" SATURDAY AND KNOCK LUDLOW'S HOPES INTO A "COCKEL HAT."

The regular playing schedule of the Covington Y. M. C. A. church league was finished Saturday night on the "Y" floor. But, instead of three teams resting in a deadlock for the leadership when the bell tapped, there were only two—the Crittenden Baptists and Dayton Presbyterians.

The third team, the Ludlow Methodists, had been accorded a practical cinch to land in a three-way tie, as only Burlington stood in their path —a team that had barely better than a 500 percentage on the season. The dope favored Ludlow to win by at least a double score.

However, the depesters reckoned without the fact that the locals are a much improved team, especially so during the past few games. They have been passing and shooting with the best of them and, what's more, they have been coming from behind to win—a new sign of a fighting team. Saturday night against an ad-[illegible] marked to lead at the half 17-15. The final score was 26-25.

The Baptists used six men in the game last week and each man broke into the scoring column. Hickman, Akin and Maurer each crashed the hoop with beautiful and thrilling shots from outside the "possible" zone, while Lamb, Utz and Stephens milled around inside the 17-foot line like nobody's business.

Whether or not a result of this sensational victory the editor of this newspaper (the Baptist team's manager) is scribbling this little story while flat of his back in bed, and which unwelcome position he has found himself since last Sunday noon. Here's hoping it hasn't affected the rest of the boys that way.

Saturday afternoon, Feb. 28th, at 4:00 o'clock (slow time) the Burlington entry will face Dry Ridge in their first tournament game. As in any other tournament "they must win to stay in." Burlington has defeated Dry Ridge in the only game they have played, but it required an overtime period to turn the trick. Go down fans, and help your favorites. The bus will not make the trip this week.

FRUIT MEETING

THE DATE FOR THE MEETING OF THE FRUIT GROWERS OF BOONE COUNTY HAS BEEN SET FOR MARCH 11 AND 12

Mr. W. W. Magill will be in Boone county on Wednesday and Thursday, March 11th and 12th for a series of spring fruit meetings, planned with the cooperation of local growers and the county agent.

Mr. Magill is field agent in orchard work from the College of Agriculture. The spring fruit meetings are looked forward to by Boone county growers each year. Before the meeting dates Mr. Magill will have covered every leading fruit growing county in the state and will bring valuable information as to the fruit situation in other parts of Kentucky.

Norbeh Champions Reorganize

The Norbeh Champion 4-H Club met with Mr. Porkner Feb. 16. The club has approximately 40 members. The following officers were elected: Norris Riddell, president; Adelia Riddell vice-president: Allen Kenyon secretary and treasury. Vaugh Kemp was appointed sheriff of the meetings Loyd Hankins, Mary Jergens and Allan Kenyon were appointed on the Publicity committee.

FARM PROJECTS

WERE DISCUSSED BY MEMBERS OF THE BOONE COUNTY UTOPIA CLUB NO. 2 THURSDAY NIGHT — FLORENCE GROUP HAD CHARGE OF PROGRAM

Farm and home projects for 1931 was discussed by Utopia club members at the Boone County Utopia Club No. 2 meeting held at Burlington last Thursday night. Farm management, raspberries, dairying, sheep landscape gardening and room improvement projects were decided upon by the sixteen members in attenance.

The club decided to have some specialist present at each meeting to discuss farm and home work. Miss Edith Lacy, field agent in Home Economics from the College of Agriculture was selected to be the principal speaker for the March meeting. She will discuss room improvement work for Utopia club members.

The Florence group was in charge of the program. The group acted as host to a George Washington birthday party which was greatly enjoyed by all present. These members present were Wilford Siekman, Robert Graves, Rogert Hafer, Lloyd Siekman, Thos. Randall, Ben Stephens, Cecil Conner, Elizabeth Tanner, Ruth Tanner, Alice Hafer, Edna Jetter, Kathryn Maurer, Frances Rennecker, Grant Maddox and Carl Jones. The next meeting date was set for March 19th.

4-H CLUBS

200 BOYS AND GIRLS OF BOONE COUNTY HAVE BECOME MEMBERS OF 4-H CLUBS

More than 200 boys and girls have been enrolled in the nine community 4-H clubs that have been organized in Boone county during the past two weeks according to county agent H. R. Forkner. There is still one or two clubs that have not yet organized.

Those clubs have organized are the "Blue Ribbons" of Burlington, the "Silver Leaders" of Hamilton, the "Willing Workers" of Verona, the "Waltonians" of Walton, the "Union Boosters" of Union, the "Norbeh Champions" of Hebron, the "Corncrackers" of Constance, the "Mt. Zion Eagles" of Mt. Zion and the 4-H corn club of Grant. Every club with one or two exceptions has a big increased enrollment for 1931.

4-H Club Work is the largest organization of boys and girls in the world. Each club member goes into a partnership agreement to carry out a definite farm or home project, to have a share of the total income from this work, to keep a complete record of expenses and receipts and to carry on his work according to recommended practices. He or she also gives special study to the particular project enrolled in an attempt to learn at least one thing well each year. Community organizations attempt to live up to the club motto, "Make the Best Better" and to make the community a better place in which to live.

A community program of work meeting was held at Taylorsport on last Friday night. The farmers present cooperated with the county agt. in planning a 1931 community program.

ARTHUR B. ROUSE

IS BEING URGED TO RUN FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR. HON ARTHUR B. ROUSE, OF ERLANGER, MAY BE CANDIDATE

(Grant County News)

According to a story published in Sunday's Cincinnati Enquirer, former Congressman, Arthur B. Rouse, of Erlanger, is being urged to run for Lieutenant Governor on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Rouse has not yet made up his mind but democratic leaders in all parts of the State are urging him to make the race.

Rouse served the Sixth District as Congressman for 16 years. He won decisive victories in all his races, carrying the district by the largest majority ever given a candidate in 1920. He retired voluntarily from the office and has never been defeated.

He was appointed State Highway Commissioner under the old regime but resigned from that position when the so-called ripper bill was passed last year. Rouse was mentioned as a candidate for Governor four years ago, but decided not to make the race.

Friends of Rouse declare that his nomination will lend a great deal of strength to the ticket as the vote of the Sixth District is necessary in order to win. Rouse has many friends [illegible]

School Notes

BURLINGTON HIGH SCHOOL

The Tomcats and Kittens proved last Friday night that they still had the fighting blood in them when they hung up two victories to their credit by defeating the two strong Piner High School teams. The Tomcats winning their game by a score of 20 to 18, and the Kittens by a score of 21 to 13. The Kittens played the best game they have played this year, and they will make some team fight hard for the championship in the 21st District Tournament held at Walton on March 6th and 7th. Both girl teams played well with several good plays during the game. The Kittens were leading in the first half of their game by 15 points while Piner had 7 points, but in the last half the Kittens did not do so well and were able to tie with Piner with 6 points each, making the score 21 to 13, when the game ended in the Kittens favor. Armstrong for Piner, was their high point maker, making 10 of their 13 points but was removed from the game in the last quarter on personal fouls.

The Tomcats started out like a house on fire and it seemed at one time that they were going to bring a larger score on the Piner boys than they did in the first game they played against Piner at Piner. If you remember the Tomcats were the winners in that game by a score of 24 to 10, but every lane has a curve in it, and this time the Piner boys came to Burlington stronger than they have ever been this year, and held the Tomcats to a 20 to 18 score. In the first half the two teams were tied with 10 points each, but in the last half the Tomcats were able to get 10 more points while the Piner boys could only get 8 points, this [illegible]

Another Sixth District man who is a potential candidate for Lieutenant Governor is Hon. John T. Murphy, of Covington. Murphy was reared in Kenton county near the Grant county line. He taught school in the county and later began the practice of law in Covington, where he has built up a big practice, The Carrollton News-Democrat carried a story last week which was a practical announcement that Murphy will run—

EARLY LAMB

CROP OUTLOOK GOOD—QUALITY LAMBS WILL PAY BETTER THAN QUANTITY SAYS COUNTY AGENT H. R. FORKNER

The lamb crop in Boone county looks as though it is going to be rather good this year according to county agent H. R. Forkner. A goodly number of lambs have already been dropped. The market outlook however is that lambs will be lower than last year. Early lambs and quality lambs should pay and Boone co., is particularly adapted for this work.

The farmer should be more cautious this year than ever before that his lambs are marketed fat, before the western run and break in the market comes. With the outlook for an early break in the market and with the experience that an over supply means severe cuts for poor quality it will no doubt pay to dock and trim, feed and manage to produce quality lambs ready for the market at an early age.

Some things that will produce quick quality lambs are (1) feeding the mothers for milk, (2) crop feeding the lambs as long as they will eat, and (3) make every available use of fresh green pastures. Remember the early lambs are usually fat and free from worms.

A good grain mixture for bom ewe and lamb may consist of two parts corn, two parts bran and one part oil meal. The oil meal may be cut down half if the pasture is very young. As the price will probably be lower it is important that these feeds be secured as cheaply as possible. Oats may be fed. It is not necessary to grind the feed.

The pastures is of most importance. Rye, wheat, spring oats, blue grass, timothy and clovers may be used. Where other grasses are short a seeding of from two to three bushels of oats and five pounds of Korean lespedeza should give good results. It is also important that there be frequent changes of pastures. A number of good sheep circulars are available at the county [illegible]

TOBACCO BEDS SOWN

A large number of Boone county farmers have sown tobacco plant beds already and a larger number have their beds plowed up ready to be burned and sown in the near future. A survey of the best tobacco raisers indicates that early plants is most essential to a good crop. This is also the recommendations of Prof. E. J. Kenney of the College of Agriculture

Prof. Kenney has written a couple of good tobacco bulletins. One of the bulletins is circular No. 77 on "Plant Bed Management" and the other is circular No. 230 on "The Production of Burley Tobacco." Those who are interested in securing these can do so by requesting same at the county agent's office at Burlington.

THE PRICE OF BREAD

There are signs in the air of a new effort to make political capital out of the price of bread. Politicians are beginning to bid for votes from the wheat-growing sections of the country by pointing out that the price of bread has not gone down proportionately to the price which the farmer gets for his wheat, and that therefore somebody "higher up" —either the millers or the bakers—is getting too much profit.

We don't profess to know all about the milling and baking business, but we do know that the cost of the raw material is a very small proportion of the cost to the ultimate consumer, of any manufactured commodity. We don't expect the price of automobiles to go down every time the price of steel falls off because we know there are lots of things, besides steel that go into the manufacture, distribution and sales of automobiles.

It takes about 4½ bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour. Out of a barrel of flour, selling now for around $5 a barrel, the commercial bakers make 300 one-pound loaves of bread. They put some other things besides flour into the bread, and they have a manufacturing cost as well as a cost of selling and distributing. It seems reasonable to believe that they are right when they say that a loaf of bread, delivered to the retailer, cost the bakery about 6 cents. Whatever the customer pays agove that is the retailer's charge for handling and delivery and his profit.

Maybe there's something for politicians to get excited about in this bread situation. But it looks to us as if he farmer, as usual, was going to get the short end of any serious attempt to reduce the price of bread to the city folks, who are, after all, the ones who do most of the bread buying. In so far as the price the farmer gets for his wheat is a part of the cost of a loaf of bread, any general reduction in the retail price of bread will be used, somewhere along the line, as another excuse to keep the price of wheat down.

Sunday School Lesson

THE GOOD SAMARITAN

Luke 10:25-37

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

This and the parable of the Prodigal Son are the best known illustrations that Jesus gave. A parable has been defined as an earthly story with a heavenly meaning. Jesus had the habit of talking so plainly that it was impossible to get His meaning and relate it to daily living if they would.

Like the rich young ruler (Mark 10:17) this "certain lawyer" asks what he must do to inherit eternal life. This time the Teacher followed the question and answer method of instruction and inquired about the contet of the law which this trained mind was supposed to be acquainted. The reply was a summary of the laws which is still very comprehensive when really observed. Jesus met the man on his own ground and told him to DO all that had been indicated. But the lawyer was a formalist and avoided caring for the real spirit of the matter. This is revealed when he tries to get from under by asking "who is my neighbor." The man who has the spirit of the Master has so many neighbors that he never finds place to stop in his good deeds.

The parable-story is common place until you come to the last actor on the scene. Plenty of travelers fell among robbers on that bad Jericho road. Priests and levites were more concerned with symbols than in personal service. Had the wounded men been able to act he would have spurned the attention of a hated Samaritan. This mongrel from Samaria, admixture of old Hebrew and Assyrian, had evidently read his Pentateuch to good effect and knew that helping any man was rendering service to Jehovah. With every care and at cost of time, personal service and money, full consideration is given to the wounded man. We must give an accounting in our stewardship of more than just our money—our tithe.

The Family Garden

FERTILIZING THE GARDEN

By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture

Last week we spoke of the preparation of the garden, particularly about putting the soil into proper condition through the addition of humus or decayed vegetable matter. Among the sources for humus manure was mentioned, for manure is valuable, the best of the humus making materials. But manure is a poor source for it contains plant food, though not in the ratio that soil vegetables need. It contains a large proportion of nitrogen, an excellent plant food for cabbage, lettuce, onions and the greens, but one that causes tomatoes peas, beans and the root crops to "to top" and to bear shy crops. There is a way to balance manure with commercial fertilizer so that a happy medium is struck and all of the vegetables made to yield satisfactorily. This fertilizer is superphosphate, the most reasonably-priced fertilizer there is.

Those gardeners who are not able to secure manure but whose ground is in good condition, loose and well-filled with humus, may have recourse to using a complete fertilizer, containing all three elements. It should be used to feed the plant but do nothing beyond supplying plant food; humus is essential to make the soil capable of holding moisture. A good complete fertilizer would be 3 8 6 or 4 10 4, the figures standing for the percentages of nitrogen, phosphorus and potash, in their order. The formula is given on the front of the sack and on the Kentucky Experiment Station tag, affixed to every sack of fertilizer sold within the state.

MAKES SUGGESTIONS FOR YEAR'S CROPS

The agronomy department of the College of Agriculture and Experiment Station, University of Kentucky offers the following seeding suggestions for Kentucky farmers in 1931:

A very important consideration on Kentucky farms in 1931 is to provide for adequate pasturage and sufficient hay, not only for the current year, but for 1932. Nearly all seedings of grass, alfalfa, clover, etc., failed last year on account of the drouth and this year a large acreage of hay crops must be grown to provide roughage for next winter. The quickest hay crop that can be grown is oats. If cut in the early milk stage, oats make a very fair quality of roughage especially for work stock. Probably the best of the emergency hay crops is the soybean. Kentucky farmers have become well acquainted with the soybean in recent years and have found it a dependable crop that gives good yields of excellent quality hay. This year seed is cheap and abundant and of good quality. Cowpeas also make good hay, although it is rather difficult to cure. On very thin land they are preferable to soybeans. Seed is cheaper this year than usual. Lespedeza, especially Korean, Sudan grass, millets, soybean or tuckly planted corn for fall and early feeding are excellent sources of roughage.

Every effort should be made to obtain successful seedings of clover, alfalfa, lespedeza, and the grasses to insure adequate pasture and supplies of hay for next year. It may be well to call attention to the great superiority of adapted strains of red clover for seeding his crop.

The failure of last year's seedings of pasture crops will cause a shortage of pasture in many localities, especially during late spring and early summer. Fortunately much rye was sown last fall and this will furnish pasturage until May, if kept grazed rather closely. A thickly seed field of oats will probably furnish pasturage until June. Most farmers have some permanent pastures and by keeping stock off until late, even a limited acreage should carry the stock until Sudan grass pasture is ready for grazing or spring sown clover and grasses furnish pasturage.

Undoubtedly on many farms there will be a shortage of grain feed for work stock. A few acres of oats which can be fed as short oats will relieve this situation and provide feed until corn matures.

On many farms it will be advisable to plant a portion of the corn land—say 10 to 15 per cent—in an early maturing variety to furnish grain for early fall feeding of hogs and other livestock. The acreage should be limited to necessity, however, because early varieties do not give nearly so good yields in Kentucky as the standard fall season varieties. Some of the best very early varieties are Woodburn, Dent, Clarage, Iowa, Gold Mine and Golden Glow. These will give ripe grain by the first of September if planted in early May.

If drouth conditions continue, more than usual attention should be paid to seed bed preparation. It is advisable to plow early and harrow or cultivate the soil after each rain of any consequence until the crops are laid by. Clods should be well pulverized in all cases, and for grasses and small grains the soil should be well compacted before seeding.

Eleven Union county farmers in a five-acre corn growing contest last year had an average yield of 64 bushels to the acre. C. S. Proctor produced 89 bushels to the acre, and won a cup from the Morganfield National bank. He used 240 pounds of commercial fertilizer and a ton of manure to the acre. The lowest yield in the contest was 45 bushels to the acre.

Laurel county farmers are producing large yields through the use of lime and phosphate, livestock and rotation, according to County Agent P. C. Ewen. James Harrison produced 102 bushels of corn on an acre which he had treated with a ton of lime and 300 pounds of superphosphate. J. R. Slusher grew 1,666 pounds of tobacco on seven-eighths of an acre which had been treated with 200 pounds of commercial fertilizer and 300 pounds of lime to the acre.

URGES DAILY USE IN MILK DIET

Every child should have a quart of milk and every adult a pint of milk daily, says Miss Florence Imlay, field agent in nutrition for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

Milk, she declares, is the best source of calcium, which is necessary for hardening bones and teeth. In fact, it is practically impossible for the mother to supply the needed amount of calcium to her children unless milk is included in the diet.

One of the serious effects of the use of little or no milk in the diet is softened bones and as a result of deformed bony structure of the body. The chest cavity is often small and out of shape and the person is more susceptible to colds, tuberculosis and other diseases.

One of the best ways to use milk is to drink it. However, it may be used in soups, creamed vegetables, meats and fish, scalloped dishes, puddings, etc.

If children do not like milk to drink, try some of the following methods of including it in foods: Cook cereals in milk in place of water, using a double boiler; flavor milk with cocoa or fruit juices, make cream vegetable soups of their favorite vegetables; use cream sauces with their favorite vegetables; scallop potatoes frequently; make cottage cheese out of milk and use in sandwiches, salads, etc.

When it is impossible to secure clean, fresh milk, an equivalent amount of evaporated or dried milk should be used.

Every growing child should have one quart of milk daily, either as a beverage or in cooked foods; every adult should have a pint of milk; every moher who is pregnant or nursing her baby should use a quart of milk daily. If this is not done, the calcium is taken from her own bones and teeth to supply the amount needed by the young child.

Graves county farmers, under the guidance of the county agent, are cooperating in a program to improve pastures, to use farm accounts, and to grow corn, lespedeza and other crops for feed and strawberries and sweet potatoes as cash crops. They also will begin terracing their rolling land. Four-H club work will be actively supported.

Rearranging his feeding in accordance with suggestions of the tester and the county agent, J. M. Ross, a Boyd county farmer, made $152 above feed costs from his dairy herd last month, compared with a loss of $71 in December, when he fed costly alfalfa hay and an unbalanced ration. He has 29 cows.

Thirty Perry county farmers have ordered 8,300 apple tree grafts. Small fruit growing including grapes and strawberries, will be increased this year.

Jessamine county 4-H Club members purchased a car load of 350-pound calves in Tennessee at a cost of $47.50 to the boys and girls.

The Waco Cantaloupe Growers' Association in Madison county will market melons cooperetively this year.

Ten thousand apple trees, 6,000 grape vines and 12,000 strawberry plants have been ordered by Knott county farmers.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

"PILL VICTIMS"

Yesterday I performed a minor operation for a patient who had been taking his favorite brand of pills for some twenty years, and who had believed that he could not live without them; and these same little demons had slowly but surely led him into a condition which placed him on the operating-table, and brought the order for him to abandon their use, for all future time.

At first—twenty years ago—a simple case of constipation, by reason of a neglected bowel. He was a young farmer, the vocation of all that should stand for opportunity in perfect health. But, he kept on neglecting the bowel, and calling to his aid the popular brand of pills that he has kept up using to the present time,—and growing worse slowly, all the time, heaping unto himself a lot of grief. He just hadn't had time to attend to that very important function, the emptying of the bowel by natural methods.

The pills contained very positive intestinal irritants aloes being a prominent ingredient; a high-powered condiment lent heat and stimulation to the almost exhausted bowel. Other atrocities helped make trouble though apparently innocent during the first years of his experience.

He accumulated a very chronic inflammation the rectum, a so-called "catarrh" of the lower bowel, in time this induced an intolerable itching of the parts adjacent from which the patient was kept awake nights—scratching. His nerves were, as he said, "completely shot to pieces."

I removed as much of the hopelessly infiltered skin as possible—it being past all hope of return to normalcy; new skin will take its place. I began my treatment to undo what he had been doing for 20 years. I stopped the pills.

I hate to meet somebody that has a favorite pill; a "family pill" is a devil in disguise. Get your doctor to tell you how to use food and water.

The Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

PLENTY OF KNOWLEDGE BUT NO EDUCATION

A man asked me the other day what courses I had studied in college and been most helpful.

I answered, "Greek and mathematics."

He said it sounded like a silly answer. "You are in the advertising business. What do Greek and mathematics have to do with advertising?"

Of course they have nothing to do directly with advertising, or with modern banking or the law, or any of the other occupations by which I might have chosen to earn a living.

Yet Greek and mathematics have this one thing in common—each of them compels the mind to attack a difficult problem and to think its way through to a solution. That is mental discipline; that is development, in the same sense that hard physical exercise develops the muscles. That, in a large degree, is education.

There is more false and fuzzy thinking about education than about almost any other important subject. We have been in an age when the whole emphasis of school and college has been placed on "learning things" on "practical training," on "giving the boys and girls equipment for daily life."

The result of this program, in many instances, is not encouraging. Young people graduate into life with a mass of unassimilated and more or less inaccurate facts, but with no real mental drill, and no philosophy.

In one of his finest passages Carl Sandburg says that an educated man is one who "has the repose of mind which lives in itself, while it lives in the world, and which has resources for its happiness at home when it cannot go abroad. He has a gift which serves him in public and supports him in retirement, without which good fortune is but vulgar and with which failure and disappointment have a charm."

And in another place he defines education as "the preparation for knowledge."

If all educators could agree upon that definition, it would mean much progress. Then we should have college graduates whose minds are prepared, rather than graduates whose minds are merely stuffed.

Too many graduates at present have plenty of knowledge but no education.

KENTUCKY FARM RADIO PROGRAM

March 6—What farm folks are asking, L. C. Brewer.

Wayne county 4-H Club members sold 48,000 pounds of tobacco on the Harrodsburg market, prices ranging from 3 cents to 32 cents, with an average of 21⅛ cents a pound.

Hints for the Home by Nancy Hart

Spaghetti with Mushrooms

Cook half a pound of spaghetti in slightly salted water for a half hour or more. While this is cooking peel a half pound of mushrooms and cut them into halves or quarters and put into a sauce pan with a little butter, cover the pan and let simmer for quarter of an hour or more. Now thicken a half cup of cream or milk with a teaspoon of flour, add this to the mushrooms and let cook until it has thickened. Drain the spaghetti, add a little butter and turn into a serving dish. Pour the mushrooms out over this and serve at once.

Deviled Mushrooms

Season a quart of fresh mushrooms with two teaspoons of salt and half a teaspoon of pepper, and chop into small pieces with a chopping-knife. Mix with two cups of fine, sifted bread crumbs. Into one cup of cream or rich milk stir two beaten eggs; add a dash of cayenne and one tablespoon of onion juice. Mix with the mushrooms and crumbs, flavor with a little Worcestershire sauce if desired, put the mixture into a well-greased baking dish, cover and bake until brown on top.

FARMERS SEE HELP IN NEW GROWERS' MARKET

Northern Kentucky farmers and truck gardeners appreciate the exclusive growers' market recently created by city ordinance in Cincinnati, according to County Agent S. A. Porter of Campbell county. Each man renting a stand in the market must have grown the produce he offers for sale.

Heretofore the market was open to any one. As a result farmers had to compete with men who trucked in produce long distances and with produce offered by commission firms.

Under present arrangements, men offering produce for sale in the market must submit a sworn statement or a certificate from his county agent that he is a bona fide grower of the produce offered.

Mr. Porter issued 15 certificates in January.

Bonus Bill Passage In 10-Day Limit Puts Hoover "In Grease"

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Holmes)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorden

Washington—During the time that mamma periodically cut down papa's pants to fit Willie, papa may have had his objections but generally has refrained from voicing them — at least stridently. But when it came to the time that mama began cutting down Willie's pants to fit papa, there was a family jar much larger than anything Mr. Mason carried in stock.

Like many a human youngster, political issues have a way, sometimes, of outgrowing their immediate progenitors. Recently attention has been called to a number of overgrown and overgrowing political offspring whose wearing apparel, it is claimed, eventually must be cut down to fit father, or faher will be mistaken for the ragpicker. Some point to the tariff; others to so-called "relief." At the present moment, it's bonus.

The World War veterans' bonus loan bill, to permit soldiers of the World War to borrow up to fifty per cent of the face value on their adjusted compensation certificates, was rushed through by the Senate by the overwhelming vote of 72 to 12. It was passed in exactly the same form as that in which it passed the House by vote of 363 to 59, all amendments offered either in commitee or on the floor being voted down. The measure has gone to President Hoover, and while an unlooked-for contingency makes it possible for the President to kill the bill by a pocket vote, it is said that he has told Republican leaders that he will return it promptly with a veto.

One of the arguments most insistently urged in support of speedy action and of no amendment was that it was necessary to get the bill thru both houses so that the ten-day limit would not permit of a pocket veto by the President, but it would seem that a strange turn of events nullified the force of this contention. Because the House adjourned before the Senate voted, it is now possible for the bill to be pocket vetoed.

The Constitution provides that a bill not signed or vetoed by the President within 10 days, Sundays excepted after he receives it becomes a law if Congress is still in session, but if Congress adjourns before the ten days have expired the bill fails. After passing both houses and before going to the President the bill must be engrossed and signed by the presiding officers of both houses while those bodies are in session.. The House, having by accident or design adjourned on Thursday before the bill passed the Senate, Speaker Longworth could not sign the bill before Friday. But the day on which the President receives the bill does not count in the ten days, neither does half day of March 4, and subtracting Sundays, there were only nine days left before this Congress adjourns.

The status created is filled with potential complications, for advocates of the bill are determined it shall pass at this session. There would seem to be no question that there are plenty of votes to pass it over a veto, and if the President should give indication of pocket-vetoing it, there may be attempts to hold up conference reports and appropriation bills to force action by him with the alternative of an extra session. This uncertainty, of course, would be cleared up immediately the President approved the bill.

The prevailing sentiment in Washington today is that the country now is quite well accustomed to the Senate's subserviency to the political expediency of the moment. It should know full well that when an organized minority of voters cracks the whip the Senate will jump the hoop with circus-like celerity. The preponderence of comment on the recent performance is that never in its history has our upper chamber displayed greater ability in the ring, and that what was once described as the greatest deliberate assembly in the world has become the "greatest show on earth."

The bonus bill will commit the government to an expenditure which may possibly stop at one billion dollars and may run more. It violates the principle of confining grants from the Federal Treasury to those ex-service men whose disabilities constitute a genuine claim on the country's generosity. It comes at a time when the exigencies of the business situation and of government finance demand the strictest economy consistent with the proper discharge of the country's obligations.

Senators Bingham and Reed, both World War veterans, and presumably in touch with real veteran sentiment, suggested that the plan would work hardship upon the wives and children of former soldiers. In case of their death many, if not the majority of veterans, would leave no other resources to their families than the insurance represented by the compensation certificates. Opponents of the bonus bill believe that the temptation to borrow money on the certificates would go too strong to resist, with the result that accumulation of interest would whittle away the balance payable at expiration of the insurance period.

Senator Metcalf, Republican, of Rhode Island, read during the bonus debate in the Senate this letter from a woman who signed herself a "Worried Wife and Mother:"

"Dear Senator:

"We are advised to write our Senators regarding the bonus. I want to say that I hope if they do anything about it, I hope that whatever they get will be in small monthly payments, like a kind of salary, because I know if my husband gets his money all at once he will have one good spree, and then no money; and my brother would leave his family if he got too much money at once. Since he came home from across he has too much a desire to travel. Then I think the government should keep enough money back for them for their old age. Many of them just can't save a cent."

The political motive that inspired many legislators to vote for the bonus is too apparent to require comment. Some of them did not favor the bill, but they voted for it in order to win the support of soldier votes. To the extent that this motive actually operated upon legislators who at heart believe the legislation to be unwise their votes were substantially aimed to the use of public funds for private political advantage. This is considered more reprehensible than the excessive expenditure of private funds to win an election.

The prediction is made that both houses of Congress will muster the necessary majorities to pass the bill over the confidently expected veto. This sounds entirely plausible in view of the votes already recorded for the measure. But it should not deter Mr. Hoover from putting his convictions to the test. The bill is vicious in principle, uncalled for by the circumstances and destructive of the best interests of the nation. The American people as a whole will applaud his disapproval, though it be in vain.

$50,000 Cigarette Contest Under Way

A contest offering $50,000 in prizes has been announced by R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, makers of Camel Cigarettes, with special announcements in practically every newspaper in the United States. Eight days are allowed for submission of essays, the contest closing at midnight on March 4.

Prizes will be awarded for the best answers to the question: "What significant change has recently been made in the wrapping of the Camel package, containing twenty cigarettes, and what are its advantages to the smoker?" Answers are limited to 200 words in length, must be written on one side of the paper only and are to be mailed to the contest editor, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.

First prize is $25,000, with second and third prizes of $10,000 and $5,000. Numerous smaller prizes will also be awarded. Judges of the contest are Ray Long, President of the International Magazine Company and Editor of Cosmopolitan Magazine; Roy Howard, Chairman of the Board of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, and Charles Dana Gibson, internationally known artist and publisher of Life Magazine.

The contest is part of what advertising experts declare is one of the most intensive advertising campaigns ever staged. Practically every daily and county seat weekly newspaper in the country will be used as well as college periodicals and financial newspapers. This campaign is to be followed by an aggressive advertising drive through newspapers, magazines, radio and outdoor display.

Walking-Sticks Put to Many and Varied Uses

The first walking-sticks were elaborate affairs, and were fashioned with an indented head on which to rest the hand, writes a columnist in the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian. Later they were made with a round and hollow top to hold nutmeg or ginger to warm the stomach of the valetudinarian, and sometimes sugar-candy for the asthmatic. When snuff came into general use the cavity was used as a snuff box, and the meeting of two cronies was followed, after the first greetings, by the unscrewing of the tops of their walking-sticks for a pinch, as a later generation tapped the lid of its snuff boxes. Another variety of walking-stick is represented by the cane crowned with a hollow knob of gold, silver, or ivory, containing aromatic balsams to keep off contagion, which every Eighteenth-century physician carried with him when making his calls. In the heyday of its fashion the walking-stick was a thoroughly democratic article of wear, but it has never been recognized in England as a weapon of offense, except occasionally in the hands of some unusually elderly and peppery person.

Worth-While Inventions Fruit of Woman's Brain

There are a great many more patents granted to men than to women. For instance, during the first 98 years of the patent system, from 1790 to 1888, only 2,455 patents were granted to women; altogether 15,000 patents have been granted to women. The fifteen-thousandth one was granted to Rose Shulman of Brooklyn for an ice bag. The first successful application under the patent law by a woman was recorded in 1809, when Mary Kies took out a patent for a method of weaving straw with silk or thread. In 1789 Miss Betsy Metcalf hit upon an invention for plaiting and braiding meadow grass into bonnets. Miss Lucy Johnson in 1824 wove seamless pollowcases. Hannah Montague invented the detachable shirt collar. The modern paper bag is the invention of Miss M. E. Knight. Mrs. Martha J. Coston invented the flare light used for signaling by our Coast guard and mariners al over the world. The first ice cream freezer was invented by Nancy M. Johnson.

Scheme Never Worked Out

When you are taking that ocean trip and your stomach is defying the law of gravitation, ponder over Sir Henry Bessemer's plan to put an end to seasickness. Seventy years ago he proposed a vessel equipped with a salon suspended from an axle fixed in the ship's center. He planned to affix counterweights to the bottom of the salon, so that the floor of the salon would always remain quiet and horizontal, despite the tumbling about of the vessel itself, says the Iron Age.

Why he never gave the idea a fair trial is not reported. Perhaps he bought stock in shipping lines and figured that the expense caused by the increase in food consumption per passenger, owing to elimination of seasickness, would cut heavily into profits.

Royal St. Cloud

To the little town of St. Cloud, as it is called today, there once came all the grandeur of royalty. With the destruction of its celebrated chateau, built by Louis XIV in 1660, it lost a favorite royal residence. Here the Regent d'Orleans received Peter the Great in 1717. In 1785 it was sold for 6,000,000 francs to Queen Marie Antoinette, and here she resided during the early days of the revolution. Here the coup d'etat occurred which made Napoleon first consul and here Napoleon III was baptized in 1805 in the presence of Napoleon and Josephine. Here Bonaparte married Marie Louise, and here on October 13, 1870, it went up in flames in connection with the siege of Paris.

Care of the Piano

Do not shut your piano off in a cold room, as this will cause all metal parts to frost, and then when the room is heated to sweat and rust. As a rule, when a piano has rusted, this is what has caused it. If it must be left in a cold room or house, throw over it several blankets, quilts or anything to keep out the cold. Excessive dampness will cause veneer checks, so will excessive heat or cold, and then the only remedy is refinishing. However, extreme heat is even more injurious. The temperature of the room containing a piano should be kept as normal and as even as possible all the year round.—Washington Star.

Exhausted Bees Die

Forty milligrams, or about one-half the weight of the bee is the usual load of nectar. It is noted that drowning is a common fatality among bees, the cause being that the insects become so tired while at work that they fall into lakes or rivers. Ungraceful landings at the apiary, when the honey gatherer bumps into the hive or drops to the ground in front of it, are caused by this same exhaustion. Many bees after developing routes on which to carry nectar are intelligent enough to rest on the journey back to the hive.

Bellamy Foresaw Radio in "Musical Telephone"

"Doctor Leete," he related, "accompanied me to my room when I retired to instruct me as to the adjustment of the musical telephone. He showed me how by turning a screw the volume of music could be made to fill the room or die away to an echo so faint and far that one could scarcely be sure whether he heard or imagined it. If of two persons side by side one desired to listen to music and the other to sleep, it could be made audible to one and inaudible to the other. He explained that by a clockwork combination a person could arrange to be awakened at any hour by music."

On Sunday he heard a sermon transmitted from an "acoustically prepared chamber." "The voice of a man at the pitch of ordinary conversation addressed us with an effect of proceeding from an invisible person in the room."—Kansas City Times.

Still Hope to Locate Savage King's Treasure

A king's treasure—ivory, raw gold, British and Kruger sovereigns and diamonds—valued at £2,000,000 lies hidden somewhere in the Rhodesia bush. It is the buried hoard of Lobengula, the Zulu warrior who founded the Matabele nation, challenged the British might in 1892 and met with defeat. A Johannesburg business man who has already made six attempts to trace the buried treasure, will make a final attempt. The story of the treasure has been told by John Jacobs, Lobengula's one-time "secretary." Lobengula ordered that his ivory and two safes containing a store of diamonds and gold packed in tins were to be rushed into the bush. The leaders of the party were Lobengula, Jacobs, four Indunas (native officers), and 14 Matabele, who dug the holes in which the treasure was hidden. One night on their return, Lobengula ordered the Indunas to slay all who had taken part in the burial. All save Jacobs and the Indunas were assegaied.

Days of '49

The term "Sydney ducks" was applied to bands of criminals who operated in San Francisco in the early Nineteenth century. They consisted mostly of undesirable elements, especially from the penal colonies of New South Wales, Australia, of which Sydney is the capital. They were an idle dissipated set, and in the spring of 1849 formed an organization known as the "Regulators," supposedly to protect the weak from the strong. They developed into a band of robbers, their headquartera being a large tent in the plaza, from which they issued every night on their various depredations. Eventually the citizens banded themselves together and expelled them.

"Tall" Fish Story

A record kept by Thomas Boosey, of England, in 1834, tells of a fish that lived to be fifty-three years old, the Golden Book magazine reveals. "W. Hossop of Bond Hall, Furness," the record says, "placed a small feltback trout, about 53 years ago, when a boy, into a well in the orchard belonging to his family, where it remained ever since until last week. Then it died, not through sickness or infirmity, but for want of its natural element, water, the severe drouth drying up the spring that supplied the well. The trout's lips and gills were perfectly white. He regularly came to be fed by his master's hand when called by his name of Ned."

Flight of Bees

Maximum speed of bees in the air is 25 miles an hour; usual flying speed, 15 miles an hour. These are not designations for a new type of airplane, says the United States Department of Agriculture, but are estimates on the flights of the bees.

Unladen the bee can fly the 25-mile an hour rate, but the usual flight is 10 miles an hour slower whether the bee is carrying a load of nectar or is on its way to some favorite flower garden, orchard in bloom, clover field or other source of honey.

Explaining Leaning Tower

The fact that the Leaning Tower of Pisa stands depends on the law of statics, which insures the stability of a leaning building whose parts are firmly bound together and whose center of gravity does not project beyond the limits of the supporting foundation. The leaning tower has a spiral stairway within, which is built with increased height on the sides of the lean and decreased height on the sides opposite the lean, thus throwing a greater weight of masonry on the side opposed to the lean.

Valuable Food Experiments

The value of laboratory experiments in the field of foods is pointed out by Lawrence H. Baker in Hygeia Magazine. In natural forms the substance that benefits the human body is often mixed with harmful impurities that may retard its action when taken into the human body.

As soon as a plant or animal tissue is found to yield a substance possessing medicinal value, scientists and the atom chasers seek to isolate the active principles and to reduce them to their utmost simplicity.

The republic of Costa Rica is one of the most charming of Central American countries. It has an area of 23,000 square miles, with a population of 520,766 people. Liners call at Punta Arenas, the Pacific coast port, which is 68 miles from the capital, San Jose. Costa Rica is unusually progressive, its proudest claim being that its school teachers outnumber its soldiers. Modern schools are located in every town.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY CATTLE BUYERS

A 4-H calf club purchasing committee from Montgomery county accompanied by county agent Floyd McDaniels of that county visited the herds of E. Y. Randall, Kite & Purdy, Thad Ryle, Albert Johnson and Kenneth Stephens last Thursday in search of suitable registered Jersey heifers for club work in that county. The committee was well pleased with the quality and production records found. Option prices were secured on a number of heifers. It is expected that purchases will be made as soon as complete arrangements with the 4-H club boys can be made.

Worthless Character

The "philanderer" is one without any knowledge of the words loyalty and faithfulness. He plays with love as an amusement. The "philanderer" is named after a character by the name of "Philander" in the book, "Orlando Furioso," by Ariesto, published in 1516.—Kansas City Times.

Crow's "Shot" Helps Golfer

While playing the tenth hole at Wentworth, Virginia Water, England, a golfer put his second play into a small clump of trees for an impossible shot. A big black crow, which had been strutting about the fairway, flew to the ball, picked it up and carried it to an open spot in the wood, where he dropped it within a few feet of the green. The golfer then had an easy shot to near the cup.

Fish Commit Suicide

Starfish commit suicide. When one is caught in a net it dissolves its corporation into a dozen or so fragments, and the pieces escape through the meshes. In time each becomes a perfect animal. To preserve the starfish whole it must be plunged into a bucket of fresh water before it has time to take the alarm. Fresh water is instant death to it, and thus only can some varieties of the starfish be preserved.—Grit.

The African waterfall which is by many said to rival Niagara, is Victoria falls, on the Zambezi river, in Central Africa. The chasm is about one-half the total width of Niagara, but more than twice its depth, varying from 256 feet at the right bank to 343 feet in the center.

First Tea in America

The Dutch East India company introduced tea into the Netherlands early in the Seventeenth century. It reached England as early as 1657 and was shipped by the English to the American colonies in 1680. At that time it was selling at $5 a pound and upward, according to the quality.

Seamen's Agreement

"Ship's articles" are the terms and conditions which seamen sign and agree to be bound by when taking their places on board the ship. The articles, binding both master and seamen, specify the amount of wages to be paid, the food to be given, the sailors' position on board, the length of time for which they are shipped, and the stipulated conditions which they agree to abide by during their engagement.

Weight and Height

A man should weight 28 pounds for every foot of his height.

Paint Used by Red Indians

The pigments used for war paint by the American Indians were mainly of mineral and vegetal origin. The mineral dyes especially were oxides of iron and carbonate of copper. The stains were extracts of bark, grapes, berries, lichens and roots.

Great River of Brazil

The Amazon river in the interior of Brazil is between one and two miles wide where it enters Brazil and gradually increases in breadth to 50 miles at its main mouth. Where it enters the sea the distance across the water from headland to headland is fully 150 miles.

Japanese Musical Instrument

Playing the koto is an accomplishment mastered by the women of the higher classes in Japan. The koto is a musical instrument having a long box over which are stretched 13 strings, each with a bridge. It is played like a harp but stands a few inches off the floor. It is tuned by moving the bridges.

Africa Have Odd Ideas of Personal Adornment

There should be a good market for cosmetics and chewing gum in Africa. Not only are the women possessed of an urge for personal beautification, but the men as well. They anoint their bodies with outlandish and evil-smelling mixtures to improve on nature and give themselves color and gloss. A favorite is a low-grade fat obtained from the bodies of cows, horses or goats and mixed with red earth, with which "cold cream" they smear themselves from head to foot. Others use fish oil or vegetable oil. The natives of southwest Africa smear their hair with a similar mixture and make an Egyptian-styled coiffure.

The gum and tobacco chewers of America have their counterpart in Africa. The habit is betel-nut chewing.

There are more than 19,000,000 blacks in Nigeria, almost every one of them a betel-nut chewer," an American Druggist article says. The effect of the practice is seemingly harmless, although as a spectacle it is no prettier than that afforded by the rows of gum chewers in a subway train. However, the betel-nut stains the teeth of the chewer a deep red, thus destroying the principal beauty of the native."

Old Superstitions Find Firm Belief in Sicily

Sicily is still a land of superstitions, most of them worthy of the Middle ages. The traveler who believes that a country loses its individuality when superstition succumbs to schools and sewers, will find in Sicily an adherence to the old beliefs unequaled in Europe, except, possibly, in the Balkans. Your Sicilian peasant would regard an American fundamentalist (if he ever had heard of one) as an advanced radical, E. J. Cooper writes in the Mentor-World Traveler.

All Souls' day, celebrated more or less throughout Christendom, is a day of particular significance in Sicily. On the night of All Souls' day the dead leave their graves, and one who is near a graveyard after nightfall is likely to see the departed of his village, the purified souls in white, the condemned in black, and the ghosts of those murdered in robes of red. Arriving at their former homes, these spirits change themselves into ants in order to creep into the houses. To guard against their presence the Sicilian closes every door and window of the house. Apparently some Sicilians believe that the dead are abroad every night, for throughout the year doors and windows are tightly closed at nightfall.

Poppies Termed Nuisance

Red poppies, that have played so important a part in wartime and post-war literature, are a bothersome weed in spite of their picturesqueness. How many seed they are, has been realized as a result of tests conducted at the Rothamsted experimental station in London. Soil from a somewhat weedy field was potted up in pots having a surface area of about one-fourth of a square foot, and kept watered for several years, until all diving weed seeds had sprouted. Poppies were taken as a sample weed, and only poppy seedlings counted. An average pot yielded more than 1,000 of them. Calculated on the basis of this soil sample, an acre of English field soil would contain more than 300,000,000 poppy seeds.

With Sound and Effect

A recent tourist in the burg was Mr. P. H. Baldwin, who hails from no less a place than Punxsutawney. He passed part of the time in a down-town movie, but was much annoyed by a crunching sound in the row behind, where a fat lady was enjoying the picture and a husky apple. Finally he could stand it no longer. He pulled a bunch of papers from his pocket and turned around.

"Lady," he requested, handing her the papers, "would you mind rattling these the next time you take a bite? I don't like to be fussy, but I'd rather hear the papers."

From then on he heard a dirty look at the back of his neck.—Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Some Real Romance

You may have never been to Carcassonne in France, and like the old man in Naduad's famous song, you may lament, "I never shall see Carcassonne," but the famous walled city still stands as it did in the Middle ages, with its double line of fortifications and 50 towers. The citadel dates back to the Fifth century when it was occupied by the Visigoths, while its cathedral of St. Nazaire is of the Eighth century. The city is so old that Julius Caesar saw it 2,000 years ago. It is one of the 12 great sights of the world, and by itself is worth crossing the Atlantic to see.

Had to Leave That

At Waterloo station an American, arriving by the boat train, engaged a taxi to drive him to his hotel. Steamer trunks, hat boxes, dispatch cases, overcoats, and walking sticks were piled on the taxi.

The driver peered out through a crack in the mountain.

"Is that all?" he asked.

"Yes," said the American. "That's the lot."

"Well, well," replied the driver, as he let in the clutch "I suppose they wouldn't let you bring the Statue of Liberty."—London Tit-Bits.

First Americans' Origin Lost in Mists of Time

Back through the centuries and the milleuniums seems to go the origin of the American aborigine. Yet, as far back as that may be, lingual likenesses exist in the languages of Asia and America. An American missionary now with the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico, who had spent some years in Japan and is a master of eleven languages, was first attracted to the Pueblos by the similarity of the "sing" of their language to that of the Japanese. Through uncounted centuries the languages of the two continents have been evolving and changing and growing, yet in neither has all the fundamental characteristics been lost. We are learning that what we call the aborigines of North America are no recent immigrants from Asia, as we once supposed, but have been rooted in the soil for so long that scientists are becoming very liberal with their ciphers when they try to compute it. What geological changes, the rise and submersion of mountain ranges, the Glacial age, the physical changes wrought by volcanic action, etc., have done to determine the limits of man's habitation and his racial differentiation, is something of which the data is very meager and incomplete. Scientists are learning that it is unsafe to base their theories upon conditions as they exist today. Time is man's own invention.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Prodigal Son Parable Short-Story Masterpiece

The short story has always existed, though it was not until the Nineteenth century that the art of writing it was consciously practiced. As Sophocles said of Aeschylus, these early authors of short stories did the right thing without knowing why. It was only on rare occasions, however, that these happy accidents occurred. Thus Professor Baldwin, after exhaustive examination of the 100 tales in Boccaccio's "Decameron," decided that only two of them are short tales in the modern critical sense, while three others approach the totality of impression which is the result of conscious unity in expression. We must go back to the New Testament for a short story which is a structural masterpiece. The parable of the Prodigal Son, which is only 500 words long in the authorized version, satisfies the modern definition, securing the greatest emphasis possible with a surprising economy of means. In America the short story had its beginning in the "Sketch Book" of Washington Irving.

Two Types of People

People may be divided into two types—those who think a great deal before they act and those who are carried away by their feelings and act impetuously without thinking. Both tendencies have their value at certain times. Grave problems require deliberation before any line of conduct is decided upon, but in emergencies something must be done at once. The first type is, therefore, handicapped when rapid action is called for, and the second type is apt to be rash and to act hastily on occasions when the situation needs reflection. People should endeavor, then, to train their thoughts and feelings so that they can be utilized to the best advantage according to the circumstances of the moment. Many a pitfall can thereby be avoided.

Never Burned Witches

Although Salem was the center of the witch craze, none were ever burned there, in spite of a common belief to the contrary. Many were hanged and one man was pressed to death between heavy stones. The Massachusetts tercentenary brought out many curious facts, and Nathaniel Hawthorne's granddaughter, Hildegarde Hawthorne, gave some little known sidelights on her ancestral town, Salem, in a special article for St. Nicholas magazine. Samuel McIntire, the first American architect, and originator of the New England colonial style of wooden house, was born in Salem in 1757 and most of its fine old houses were built by him.

What Does "Savvy" Mean?

"Savvy" or "savvey" is an American corruption of Spanish "sabe," a form of the verb "saber," meaning to know "Do you savvy?" is equivalent to Spanish "sabe usted?" Both mean, "Do you know?" "Savvy" was originally acquired from the Mexicans by early ranchers in the Southwest who spelled and pronounced the Spanish word "savvy" rather than "sabe" because in Spanish "b" and "v" are pronounced almost alike and in many words these letters are used interchangeably. When employed as a noun "savvy" means understanding, mental grasp or knowledge of affairs. Of course, it is slang in both senses.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Hunting for Pest Eradicators

In 84 years the Smithsonian institution has built up the largest natural history collection of North America in existence. Among the many objects of study that have a direct bearing on industry and commerce are the bean beetle, the boll weevil and the Japanese beetle. In the laboratories of the Smithsonian institution work is carried on to ascertain the natural enemies of these pests, their origin and means of immigration. In order to learn these things it is necessary to maintain a complete collection of all forms of the species.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR STRAWBERRY GROWERS

The price outlook for strawberries is favorable for the 1931 season, says the annual agricultural outlook report of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Although demand may be somewhat less favorable than a year ago, unless there is an unexpected sharp advance in business activity the prospective small supplies probably will put the market in a favorable position when Kentucky strawberries are harvested.

The indicated strawberry acreage to be harvested in 1931 will be 11 per cent below the acreage of 1930. In Arkansas, Tennessee and Virginia the reduction from 1930 will be in the neighborhood of 30 per cent, and the condition of strawberry fields is reported as poor. Preliminary estimates indicate a reduction from 1930 of about 10 per cent in the acreage of the intermediate states of Missouri Kansas, Illinois, Oklahoma, Kentucky, Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey. Reports from most of these states indicate that fields are in poor condition and stands reduced, which suggest low yields for the coming season. Another factor which will reduce production is the fact that many fields are four or more years old and past the prime of production.

Labor spent in the care of strawberry fields and in careful preparation of strawberries for market will likely be well rewarded in 1931. The coming season also appears to be a good time for moderate increases over normal plantings looking forward to the 1932 crop, the report says.

Opening of Early Rail Line Important Event

"Yesterday was a great day on the new railroad between Baltimore and Washington, being the first day of its being opened for travel all the way from the depot at Baltimore to the foot of the Capitol hill in this city," said an article in the National Intelligencer of August 26, 1835.

"It was a glorious sight to see four trains of cars, with each its engine, extending altogether several hundred yards in length, making their entry by this new route, to the delight of thousands of spectators in the grounds directly north of the capitol. These cars, besides bringing back our own mayor and members of the corporation and city guests who went out to meet them, brought about as many ladies and gentlemen of Baltimore as made up the whole numbers of about a thousand persons carried by the cars. These, accompanied by two bands of music, after debarking, marched in procession to Gadsby's and Brown's hotels, at both of which sumptuous and bounteous entertainment was provided and liberally partaken of. The cars arrived at a little before one o'clock, and at four our friends from Baltimore re-embarked and returned to their homes without, we trust, any accident or other inconvenience than what was occasioned by the dust on the roads and streets."—Kansas City Star.

More Proof of Wisdom of Sage of Monticello

When Jefferson imported the French sculptor, Jean Houdon, in 1784, to execute a statue of Washington, there existed the opinion that the author of the Declaration had better stick to statecraft. A short time ago Houdon's marble bust portrait of the Countess de Sabran was sold for $80,000 to a New York collector. Previously the small bust of the artist's little daughter was bought by Mrs. E. S. Harkness for $245,000, thought to be the highest price ever paid for a piece of sculpture.

Jefferson's ability to recognize Houdon's genius and his wisdom in introducing it on American shores when our art was in its infancy was part of his own genius. It was but one aspect of the greatness of the mind of the Master of Monticello, that kindly Democrat who might have been found in his study at work on an essay on political philosophy, and then again among his plants gathering seeds for a friend overseas.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Nebraska Saved by Trees

When the Missouri was first crossed by settlers, Nebraska was known as the largest body of treeless land in the country. There was scarcely enough wood for fuel for the wagon trains. Today there are 2,500,000,000 trees in Nebraska. And the annual rainfall has increased to such an extent that the once "great American desert" has become "Nation's Breadbasket."

These "hand-made" forests are scattered all over the state. Settlers were permitted to homestead 160 acres of land and then were given an additional 160 acres as a "timber claim" if they would plant one-quarter of this second claim to trees. These trees have been long in coming, but they now cover the state with a great green blanket which is credited with increasing the annual rainfall to more than 30 inches.—Exchange.

Pigeon That Won Fame

Unquestionably the most famous bird of the World war was Cher Ami, credited with saving Major Whittlesey's "Lost Battalion." Released with a message on October 21, 1918, at 2:35 p. m., during intense artillery action, Cher Ami delivered a message 40 kilometers distant in 25 minutes and was the only pigeon to get through the enemy's fire. Although wounded in the breast, and the leg which carried the precious message was shot away, the tiny tube, still intact, hung to the exposed ligaments. Later he crossed the seas with the doughboys on the Ohioan transport and died in June, 1919, from the effects of the wounds.

Oldest Trees in Europe

Between Loch Rannoch and Loch Tay is Glen Lyon, the longest glen in Scotland, which stretches its mysterious beauty from Loch Lyon over 30 miles. Many a tourist in Perthshire has rushed past it, little knowing that he was missing a haunt whose loveliness would cheer him long after more notable places had become dim in his mind. The Scots call it "the Dark Crooked Glen of the Great Rocks." The place is red with history and legend, battles of kirks and crosses which go back to the earliest days of Celtic Christianity. Its yew trees claim to be the oldest authentic specimen of vegetation in Europe.

Days of Rest and Joy

Mary E. Hazeltine in her book, "Anniversaries and Holidays," says: "The calendar includes 77 holidays, special days, seasonal festivals and holidays, without counting the feast days of the saints or constitution and statehood days, which in some countries and states are observed as holidays; the former are counted with the names of persons, of whom there are 322; the latter with events, of which there are 229; a total of 1,196 calendar entries, an average of three and a half for every day."

WHEAT BEATS CORN IN FEEDING TEST

Wheat produced cheaper gains than corn in a hog feeding test made at the Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky.

In order to compare wheat and corn, nine lots of pigs, averaging 115 pounds at the beginning of the test, were fed 50 days.

Lot 1 was fed ground wheat soaked 12 hours; lot 2 shelled corn soaked 12 hours; lot 3 ground wheat and ground corn half and half soaked 12 hours, and lot 4 whole wheat soaked 12 hours. All were self-fed tankage.

Wheat was figured as worth ninety-five cents a bushel, corn $1.10 a bushel, tankage $67 a ton, and 10 cents per 100 pounds allowed for grinding the wheat and corn.

Lot 1 required 407 pounds of ground wheat and 37 pounds of tankage, costing $8.09, to make 100 lbs., of gain.

Lot 2 required 389 pounds of shelled corn and 50 pounds of tankage, costing $8.47, to make 100 pounds of gain.

Lot 3 required 371 pounds of ground corn and ground wheat and 64 pounds of tankage, costing $8.40, to make 100 pounds of gain.

Lot 4 required 375 pounds of whole wheat and 54 pounds of tankage, costing $7.71, to make 100 lbs., of gain.

Savage Cruelty

Native cruelty periodically shocks the more sensitive feelings of white people in Africa. A Nairobi doctor's parrot flew into a tree, whereupon a native hurled a brick at it and brought it to the ground dazed. He then chopped its wings off with a hoe. No doubt he sought to save himself much trouble in periodically catching it.

Building and Loan Idea

The first building and loan association in this country was formed on January 3, 1831, at Frankfort, Pa., by three citizens, and called the Oxford Provident Building and Loan association. There are now over 12,000 such associations in the United States, and more than 8,000,000 homes have been financed within the 100 years since the first one was formed.

Rheumatism So Bad He Walked the Floor in Agony

"Karnak has done me such a wonderful amount of good that I believe every rheumatic sufferer should give it a trial.

"No one will ever know the tortures I have gone through with rheumatism during the past three years. I ached all over. At nights the pains were so great that I walked the floor, and I've gotten out in the middle of the night to go to the doctor for a hypodermic. I tried every thing in an effort to get relief. Even serum treatments failed to help me. My relief finally came when a friend advised me to try Karnak. To my surprise this medicine went right to the roots of my trouble, and brought complete relief. Every ache and pain has disappeared, and I am now in condition to resume active duties once more, thanks to Karnak."

Biblical Fruit Not the Apple of Modern Times

The apple is so common and at the same time so highly esteemed a fruit that the action of the translators of the Bible in translating the Hebrew word Tappuach "apple" need not be wondered at.

Evidently the tappuach was a well-known, cultivated tree in the Holy land with a sweet, fragrant, strengthening fruit (Song of Solomon .III 5., VII 8., VIII 5) and a tree giving shade, therefore of some size. According to Joel I 12, it was also a tree/so well known, so useful, that its withering was a calamity, a curse to the country. To our translators the apple would be just such a tree to English-speaking people and so we have the word in our Bibles.

Apple is often used figuratively by English people, as oak-apple for the oak-gall, the apple of the eye, rose-apple, etc., as befitting any round fruit or thing, and so might have seemed to the makers of our Authorized Version a good loosely fitting name to apply to an unknown fruit.

That it was correctly applied is not possible. The climate of Palestine is too hot for this tree, which thrives in more northerly temperatures. Up north of Palestine in Syria near Damascus it is found and bears fruit. There are a few apple trees here and there in the Holy land, but these are usually barren, are of late post-Christian days, and are by no means highly esteemed.—Montreal Family Herald.

Memories Brought Back by Distinctive Perfume

The association of ideas as a spur to memory got another boost the other day when a reporter listened to some fascinating reminiscences of a world traveler. This man was journeying in a leisurely fashion through Switzerland one summer, and being something of a scholar and a collector of odd bits of information, he hit upon an idea that he believed might preserve for him the memory of his travels in undimmed beauty. He purchased a certain pleasing perfume and used it continually on his handkerchief during his travels. About a year or so later he was ready for his experiment and putting some of the same perfume on a handkerchief, he asked his valet to place it near him some time when he was sleeping. He declares that the scheme worked like a charm, that he had a most delightful dream in which the scenes through which he had passed on his travels through Switzerland passed in a series of identical pictures before his vision before he awoke.

Promise Had String to It

In one of the 5 and 10 cent stores, a customer selected a large purchase of Christmas tree lights.

She explained to the clerk that she wasn't positive that the type of bulbs she was buying would fit the sockets she had at home.

"I suppose," said the woman, "I can bring these bulbs back, if they don't prove suitable."

"Certainly, you can bring them back," the clerk assured her unsmilingly. The money was passed, the package wrapped and the deal completed. Then the clerk made herself a bit clearer.

"You can bring 'em back," she repeated, "but we aren't allowed to make any refunds."—Concord Monitor.

Howlers

The "Book of Howlers," recently published in England, gives some excellent examples of unconscious schoolboy humor, for instance:

"The Corps Diplomatique is a person who shams dead.

"A Conservative is a kind of greenhouse where you look at the moon.

"Many people say Free Trade is better than Perfection.

"Our country has a king who can't do anything but what he ought to do.

"A King is the son of his father, but a President is not.

"Miss Olini is the ruler of Italy.

"Holland is a low, lying country and is damned all round."—Vancouver Province.

Politician's Requisite

Isocrates was an orator in Athens, and to him came others, students of elocution, to learn his art.

One day there came a man to him named Creon, who wanted to become famous as a political spellbinder.

"You'll have to pay double fees if you want that kind of instruction," said Isocrates.

"Why shall I have to pay more than those other fellows studying forensic eloquence?" asked the prospective pupil.

"Because I shall have to teach you two arts," replied Isocrates, the teacher of rhetoric. "First I must teach you speaking and, second, keeping silent."

Tonic in Laughter

To laugh long and heartily is a splendid tonic. Many a dyspeptic could be cured if he laughed heartily two or three times a day.

Most of us are quite aware of the wonderful power of laughter. Even to hear others laugh does us good. And yet our knowledge does not compel us to give laughter its rightful place in our lives.

If only we could learn to look for the precious tonic which lurks behind [illegible] and take frequent doses of it how [illegible] and healthier we would [illegible]

Linger at Stage Doors for "Closeup" of Stars

Familiar among Broadway's night sights are the small crowds who gather near stage doors after the show is over. Usually between the hours of eleven and twelve they are to be found waiting for their favorite star to emerge. They stand with a rather quiet expectancy. Every time the stage door opens they push forward eagerly, often to be disappointed when an overall-clad stage hand makes his exit lugging a trunk or piece of scenery. When the long-awaited star does come out they crowd about, asking questions, bestowing adoration and pushing forward to obtain a better view. Some fans come with photographs to be signed. Others seek a star's autograph on a program, while still others want to see what their favorite performer looks like away from the footlights.

Some nights an actor or actress is in a hurry and, desiring to avoid the crowd, leaves by a different exit. The stars use various ruses to get away in a hurry, sometimes telling the doorman to notify the crowd that so-and-so will not leave the theater for a few hours.

Publicity's Value Well Known to the Ancients

More than 3,000 years ago, according to the London Morning Post, the Egyptians devised innumerable methods of bringing their names before the public: and by inscriptions, by historic monuments, and by the literature of the period, they left to posterity the records of a complete and systematic scheme of advertising.

In certain respects they made even more extensive use of publicity than does the present age. In the reign of Tutankhamen, doctors, unlike the modern practitioner, were allowed to advertise their remedies; and one of the more subtle methods used to attain this end was to compel patients on swallowing specific medicines to cry out, "A really excellent remedy proved a million times!" The art of repetition was thoroughly understood by Egyptian publicists; and it was customary to stamp wine jars with the word "Good" thrice repeated. Similarly they were well aware of the value of disguised advertisements; and experts now declare that the temples of ancient Egypt were in nearly every case built to advertise the power of Egypt's rulers. They were covered with accounts of victories achieved, and records of cities conquered.

Rubber Growth Experiments

Rubber plants that are native to dry regions are being tested in California, in the coast districts as well as in the interior valleys. Several dry-country rubber plants are known in Mexico, while others are reported in South America, Africa and Madagascar. The production of rubber from the Mexican guayule plant (Parthenium argentatum) has been investigated carefully by a private corporation and the stage of agriculturat practicability is believed to have been reached in California. The guayule rubber plants in Arizona and California amount to several hundred acres.

Famous Tapestry

The Gobelin tapestries originated in the work of a former dyer, named Gobelin, who in the Fifteenth century came from Reims to Paris, the family having discovered a marvelous scarlet dye which attracted great attention. In the Sixteenth century to the manufacture of dyes was added the manufacture of tapestry, which founded the fortune of the family. Some of the family were granted titles of nobility and some became leading statesmen of France. In the reign of Louis XIV, the government took over the Gobelin tapestry manufactures and they remain a state activity.

Long-Lived Moon Superstition

Old foresters have the strongest opinions as to the influence of the moon on timber. In the royal ordinances of France for the conservation of forests, it was laid down that timber, especially oaks, should be felled only during the wane of the moon, and the belief—superstition, if you like to call it so—still persists both in France and England. The idea is that timber felled at these times is less liable to rot than when felled during the wax. The belief dates right back to Roman times.

Benedict Arnold

Authors differ on the birth date of Benedict Arnold. Appleton's Cyclopedia and Lippincott's Biographical Dictionary both state he was born January 3, 1740. Lossing's Cyclopedia of History gives the time as January 3, 1741. A carefully prepared and impartial history of the American traitor of Revolutionary times was written by Hon. Isaac N. Arnold, who fixes his birth date on January 14, 1741, and his death on June 14, 1801, in London.

Stage Versions Differ

Both versions of the play "Macbeth," by Shakespeare, are given—with the ghost of Banquo appearing in the banquet scene, and without it. The Ben Greet Players, producers of what is known as pure Elizabethan drama, do not show the ghost at the banquet table, as this is a deviation from the true Shakespeare. Other companies, having in mind the dramatic effect of its appearance, show the ghost of Banquo with weird lighting effects.

Many Reasons Why Fish Is Favored for Friday

The principle reason for eating fish on Friday is religious. Jesus was crucified on Friday, and many early Christians observed it as a weekly fast day. On fast days, people were expected to abstain from eating flesh meats. The prohibition did not include fish, hence fish came to be favored as a Friday dish. Pope Nicholas declared about 1,140 years ago that communicants of the Roman Catholic church must not eat meat on Fridays. Some Protestant churches have adopted the same rule, or sought to foster the same custom. The result is that there is a considerable demand for fish on Friday, creating a good market and bringing choice fish to the counters, so that many who are unfamiliar with church rules and customs eat fish on Friday because they feel that they can get the best fish at that time. Since the introduction of new methods of keeping and shipping fish, however, this is more a custom than a real reason. Christians favor fish as a fast-day dish because of New Testament allusions to fishermen and fishes, several of the disciples being fishermen, and the story of the loaves and fishes being among the most widely known in the Bible. Fish are also associated with the Resurrection because of the repast of fish caught after the Resurrection by disciples following the instructions of the Lord.

Scientists Baffled by Great Mystery of Life?

"What is your life?" asks St. James. He answers it thus: "It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." The life spoken of here is the individual existence, the mortal life, and not the general life, the life principle. Nevertheless, the definition is interesting and suggestive.

"Life, the shadow of death," so Swinburne says, but then he was a poet. Another poet sings of life as "a blunder and a shame." One of the ancients who held that there was no difference between life and death was asked why, in that case, he did not die. "Because," he replied, "it does make no difference." The final verse of the last Psalm reads: "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." This seems to identify life with breath, which surely is a "vapor," to use the word of St. James. Our scientists seem to have embarked on a daring and difficult enterprise when they attempt to create life artificially in the laboratory. There are few things that they will not undertake, few, indeed, in the investigation of which they have not won marvelous success. Perhaps life, its origin, and its nature are beyond them.—Indianapolis News.

Indian Arrows Varied

A complete Indian arrow is made up of six parts: Head, shaft, foreshaft, shaftment, feathering and neck. These differ in material form, measurement, decoration and assemblage according to locality and tribe. Arrowheads have three parts: Body, tang and barbs. There are two kinds of arrowheads, blunt and sharp. In the Southwest a sharpened foreshaft of hardwood serves for the head. Arctic and northwest coast arrows have heads of ivory, bone, wood or copper, as well as stone; elsewhere they are more generally of stone, chipped or polished. The head is attached to the shaft or foreshaft by lashing with sinew, by riveting or with gum.

"Clean Hands" in Law

There is a legal maxim, "He who seeks equity must come with clean hands." As explained in Bowman's Handbook that "a plaintiff who has been guilty of inequitable conduct in the same matter concerning which he asks relief against the defendant's inequitable conduct will be denied relief." An illustration cited is that a plaintiff who sues to restrain the defendant from infringing his trade mark will be denied relief where the trade mark is itself untruthful and misleading to the public. A somewhat similar maxim is, "He who seeks equity must do equity."

Workmen's Compensation

The first legislation on the subject of workmen's compensation in the United States was a co-operative insurance law in Maryland in 1902. However, this law was declared unconstitutional in 1904. The first compensation acts were passed in 1910, but several of them were held unconstitutional—notably that of New York, by the famous Ives decision. The New York constitution was then amended and another law passed. Congress in 1908 passed a law providing for a plan of compensation for accidents incurred by industrial employees of the United States.

Sinister Political Date

Oct. 6 of the most sinister dates in modern British politics is October 6. Have you ever seen the list? On October 6, 1881, Gladstone denounced Parnell, and on October 6, 1891, Parnell died. On October 6, 1896, Rosebery retired from the leadership of the Liberal party, and on October 6, 1909, he resigned the presidency of the Liberal league. On October 6, 1891, W. H. Smith died while leading the house of commons, and on October 6, 1906, Joseph Chamberlain opened his disastrous tariff reform campaign with his Glasgow speech.—London Mail.

THE INDIVIDUAL AND HIS BANK

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

R. C. STEPHENSON

BANKERS recognize that their business carries especially heavy public responsibilities and welcome all sound measures to aid them meet the duties this imposes. Unceasing efforts to bring about continually improving methods to safeguard depositors in banks of all kinds have long been uppermost in the plans of bankers' organizations throughout the nation. They are not the outgrowth merely of the past year of business adversity, but have been carried on actively for many years and have resulted in great progress along lines of better, safer banking methods. Although banking along with all business has suffered reverses, conditions in this field have been far less severe than they would have been had not bankers been widely successful in their endeavors to develop the high standards of banking that now generally prevail.

The American Bankers Association and bankers' organizations in every state actively support the principle of government supervision of banking. The national banks, which receive their charters to do business from the federal government, are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington. Through his efficient staffs of expert bank examiners in every section he has the duty and powers to keep watch of the way every national bank is being conducted, to suggest desirable changes in its policies or methods and even to step in and take control for the protection of the depositors if such action is warranted. The state banks, also, which are chartered by the various state governments, are subject to similar supervision and control by state bank officials. In addition banks in many places have long maintained voluntary clearing house associations which enforce even closer supervision over their members.

Bankers Favor Public Supervision

Present laws adequately enforced contain ample provisions for government supervision. Bankers universally believe in strong, capable banking departments manned by officials with the discretion and courage to enforce these laws and act under them as the common welfare demands. They believe that these public officials should be paid sufficient salaries to command the services of men of character, ability and a resolute spirit of public service. They believe also that the banking departments should be kept free from all political or other special influence in order to be able to act at all times with single-minded independence solely for the benefit of the public interest.

Although banks in the United States operating under state or national charters are thus subject to supervision of public authority, they are strictly private business enterprises. They are owned by their stockholders and administered by officials chosen through the boards of directors which their stockholders elect. No bank is owned or operated by the United States Government, nor, with one small exception in a western state, by any state government. The function of government in banking is to promote and enforce careful banking administration through the system of examination and supervision which I have described. This, however, does not relieve the individual depositor from the necessity of judging and choosing carefully as to his banking relations, just as in his other business or professional relations. He must inquire for himself into the character and type of institution and men he shall do business with, satisfying himself as to their reputation, reliability and capability. These qualities are essential to complete the element of safety and dependability in any human institution.

An Illusory Law

The bank deposit guaranty law in any form is a snare and a delusion, declares a banker in a state where it has been tried, adding: "It is a license and encouragement to irresponsible banks and banking and penalizes capital solvency and prudent banking. It creates a sense of security in the minds of the unthinking and uninformed that is false and impossible to be realized on ultimately. To compare it to legitimate insurance is without reason and absurd. It jeopardizes the solvency of all banks and the safety of all depositors for the theoretical safety of a few. Guaranty schemes always have been, are and always will be impotent, futile and disastrous. It is not new. Has been tried, failed and discarded at intervals for more than 100 years in this country. No well-informed, honest and intelligent mind can accept it in principle or practice. Competent bank supervision and restriction of banks to territory that will warrant sufficient capital investment and accounts is the only sane and honest course and will afford all the guaranty the depositing public is entitled to as compared with [illegible]

OF FAST PERFORMANCES BY DETERMINED DISCIPLES OF THE HARDWOOD AT WALTON—PICKING WINNERS IS A TOSS-UP, BUT EDITOR MAKES INNOVATION WHEN HE ENTERS DANNY DUMM CLASS

The Tomcats and Kittens are putting the finishing touches to their training preparations on the hardwood this week under the astute eye of Coach C. G. Lamb.

The objective of the 21st District Tournament, which will be held at Walton on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. The drawings were held last Friday afternoon, when the Tomcats and Kittens each were fortunate enough to draw a bye from the old hat. Other Boone county teams lucky enough to draw byes in the first round were the Union girls and Petersburg boys, each of which is said to have a splendid chance to annex first honors in Class B. The fact is that the scramble for first honors for the boys in Class B. is said to lie among Petersburg, Crescent Springs and Burlington.

As to the Class A. ranking there are several teams, each of which has a great chance. Of course Ludlow and Lloyd have made records that are very impressive, although the fact that Covington won a long list of games against first class opposition makes them formidable contenders on mere dope. However, the Bulldogs fell into a slump toward the latter end of the season when they lost to both Ludlow and the Newport Wild cats; but this may mean nothing at all, except that Ludlow and Newport were at the very top of their form. Newport will not face Covington in the tournament as they are in another district.

But, in the girl's divisions it looks to us like Hebron in Class A, while Union, with a background of victories over a period of many years and a cracking good team as well, looks somewhat the best in Class B. However, in this class Coach Lamb's Kittens have been improving greatly of late, while Belleview, which has defeated Burlington, and Verona, also with a good record, may prove troublesome.

But, when you go to the tournament, just remember the Covington Bulldogs, Burlington Tomcats and the Union and Hebron girls.

Due to the fact that 25 teams have entered the tournament the first session will start at 1 p. m., Thursday Feb. 5th and continue thru Friday and Saturday, ending Saturday night, March 7. There will be a total of 23 games and this is by far the largest Tournament in the history of the Twenty-first District Tournament. 12 girl teams and 13 boy teams have entered.

Those who are planning to attend a majority of the games of the Tournament will find that it will be much cheaper to buy a Tournament ticket which gives one admittance to every game for the low price of non-students $2.50, students $1.50, which is about half of the regular admission. The tickets are on sale at the Walton Equitable Bank and he Dixie State Bank, or see Coach Bevarly.

FASHION SHOPPE

MOVES INTO COMMODIOUS AND MORE FAVORABLY SITUATED LOCATION, AFTER SEVERAL YEARS SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS AT OLD STAND

Mrs. Lona Herschling, proprietor of the Dixie Fashion Shoppe, heretofore located on the Dixie Highway, opposite Garvey Avenue, moved this week to her new location on the corner of McAlpin Avenue and the Dixie Highway. The new name of the shop will be The Dixie Dry Goods Co.

This is one of the most beautiful and convenient locations for a business house in Northern Kentucky and Mrs. Herschling intends to make the best of her advantages. The new location is next door to the former one.

Several years ago she, with her sister, opened a small store at the late location with a limited though select, stock of merchandise. They soon sensed he wonderful business opportunities in Elsmere, sometimes known as South Erlanger, and at once began to enlarge their store, which now is numbered among the best of its nature in this section. Their stock is selected with great care and is priced lower than most of its kind.

In her new location Mrs. Herschling will have a much better opportunity to display her stock and much better chances for increased business—the ultimate desire of any establishment.

E. P. Berkshire and O. S. Watts of Petersburg, were business visitors in the county seat Monday.

Best Loved Base Ball Player Will Not Hear Opening Gun

On Saturday, April 25th, the opening game will burst with the consequent flare of shrapnel that, figuratively speaking, will cover many playing fields in the Boone County Base Ball League.

There may be some new teams. Then again there may be some new faces gracing the uniforms of some of the old teams. Some teams no doubt will take the field on the same lot occupied in a continuous cycle back to fathers and grandfathers, indeed, in one instance we know, to the day of the great-grandfathers of some of the players on the nine representing that little hamlet.

But, in spite of all of this reminiscence and allegory, there will be missing the face of one player, who has graced a Boone county uniform for—let's see—just about 20 years; yet, in spite of his many years of service on the Boone county sand lots, and with a pate that resembles a billiard ball, would be welcomed with open arms by any team in the county.

Aside from his qualities as a player, he never was known to be other than a perfect gentleman on the field. The writer has had the pleasure and the privilege of playing, both with him and against him, and we know. In the field he had the agility and the accuracy of a Critz or a Collins, though not quite the speed. When he was up there at the plate with a stick in hands both friend and foe knew that the ball was going somewhere—he seldom carried it back to the bench. At bat he possessed almost the place hitting qualities of a Keeler, though he hit from the opposite side of the plate.

For versality he was all there, as he found himself at home at any infield position and could take care of himself in the box almost equally as well. For craftiness—everyone knows that none excelled him.

Fans, the man is Bobby Brady and whom we do not hesitate to classify as Boone county's best loved ball player. On Monday of this week he underwent a very serious operation in a Cincinnati hospital. While he is doing nicely at this writing it no doubt will keep his feet off the old spikes for many, many weeks, and perhaps for all of this season.

Washington Political Writer Takes Rap At Loan Exponents

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(BY FRED HOLMES)

Washington—According to the late Phineas Taylor Barnum, past-master of humbuggery and first to claim proprietorship of one of the multitinous greatest shows on earth "a sucker is born every minute. If that were true in the days of the great showman, possibly it is true now. But it may also be accepted as true that the percentage of sucker-born humus in his day who remained suckers for the rest of their natural lives has been appreciably decreased. A number of United States Senators alone are still unconvinced of this fact.

Barnum is also credited by some with the remark that "you can fool all of the people some of the time and some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time." Intense skepticism on this proposition pervades—that is to say, until very recently seems to have pervaded—the same group of Senators.

The public had no particular interest in senatorial indulgence in a game of battledore and shuttlecock over power commission appointments. Antics of the athletes were tiresome from he start, and the fact that the audience departed, more or less in disgust, does not seem to have yet dawned upon the self-centered contestants. They insist upon carrying the game to a conclusion with the United States Supreme Court as ultimate referee. Even if the show is stopped, entrance fees will not be refunded at the box-office.

Worthy unemployed labor did not ask for a dole. It wanted and still wants a restoration of normal business conditions and a chance to work. But not only have some of our legislators no compunction about robbing Peter to pay Paul, but they see no necessity for determining in advance whether or not anything is owing to Paul. It may bankrupt Peter Taxpayer, but "What difference does it make in my young life?" asks the Simon Legree of Capitol Hill. There are none so deaf as those who won't listen.

There are two principal ways of aiding those whom God has afflicted—by fire, by flood, by drought. One is by way of direct appeal to a generous-hearted citizenry, which never has failed in an emergency. The other is by way of paternalism, direct toward inevitable pauperization. But, in our country, paupers are not disfranchised, and private generosity [illegible] what it may, there are none so blind as those who won't look.

Deaf and blind, comes the astounding revelation that the public protest against the extravagant and unnecessary distribution of public money to able-bodied and employed World War veterans is a surprise to many legislators. They yielded to mob impulse in voting for the bonus, believing that taxpayers would patiently endure the added burden for the sake of relieving the needs of the veterans actually in distress. But the public has discovered that only 250,000 veterans are in distress, while the bonus bill proposes to distribute money to 2,500,000 veterans, most of whom are sound in health and profitably employed. The bill was rushed through Congress without the slightest effort to sound out public opinion and in total disregard of the warnings of the warnings of the Treasury Department and the President.

Unquestionably many legislators were convinced that they could purchase with public money the goodwill of veterans, whose votes would come in very handily at the forthcoming elections. The great unorganized public, that dumb and patient ox whose sole duty is to grind out tax money, was supposed to be ignorant of the transaction, or too stupid to protest in any event. And the most side-splitting touch of the whole Shakespearian Comedy of Errors is that now the protest is rising, some of the types in Congress think they have discovered an ingenious method of warding off public criticism.

The artifice is so antiquated that none but callow preparatory students in demogogy would try to use it now. Tell the public that the proposed outlay is a mere matter of bookkeeping; that the money is already available; that no increased taxes will be necessary; that all this alarm about huge distributions to veterans is without any basis; that the Treasury, by simply juggling its accounts, can lend $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000 veterans without any actual drain upon the cash box; that Secretary Mellon was wrong once when he made an estimate of probable tax returns and therefore is wrong now when he thinks the paying out of a billion dollars will be a drain upon the Treasury or a hardship to taxpayers.

Of course, the right hand is not to know what the left hand doeth, and the veterans are not to be told that

MARRIED FIFTY YEARS

JOHN L. JONES

A widely read Northern Kentucky newspaper has carried a very interesting story on the Golden Wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Jones which occurred recently. The ceremony was repeated at the celebration. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were married on February 24th, 1881. A picture of Mr. Jones appears above and we regret that we do not have one of Mrs. Jones to reproduce.

County Attorney B. H. Riley left his home for a Cincinnati hospital on Tuesday of this week, where he intended to have a pair of troublesome tonsils removed. Mr. Riley recently has been suffering from high blood pressure and attributes the pressure to bad tonsils. His host of friends throughout the county are pulling for a successful operation and an early recovery.

JOHN YORK

DEATH IN RAILROAD ACCIDENT AT SAYLOR PARK MONDAY—SURVIVED BY MANY RELATIVES IN BOONE COUNTY—BURIED AT SAYLER PARK

John York, aged 65, of Taylorsport, was killed by a railroad train as he was going to work early Monday morning. He was struck by a Big Four R. R. passenger train at Mokomas avenue and Laura Lane, Sayler Park.

Dam officials said there was a fog in that section of the city and that, in all probability Mr. York did not see the moving train. John York was well known in Burlington and surrounding communities in Boone county and leaves many relatives to mourn his loss. Among his relatives was a son who attained considerable fame as a base ball pitcher. Cannon Ball York was well on his way to more or less fame when his right arm was severed in an auto accident. Newton (Farmer) York, who is well and favorably known in Burlington, was a brother of the deceased.

Funeral services were held at Sayler Park at 1:30 p. m., Wednesday of this week. Burial also at Sayler Park.

E. J. Aylor, who is a regular visitor at the county seat on he first Monday and Tuesday of each month, said Tuesday that he recalled vividly the plank road was a boon to traveler alongside a dirt road from Constance westward toward Petersburg. The earth road was used in summer, while he plank road was a boon to travelers when the winter and spring rains set in. When the new crushed stone road was built the metal was placed over the planks without removing them. How many ohers remember the old plank road?

The Boone county Courier-Journal spelling bee will be conducted at Burlington on Saturday, March 14. All schools in the county are eligible for competition, although it is doubtful whether each will send a representative. Miss Bessie Jones, of Hebron, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Jones, was the winning speller last year and made a fairly good showing at Louisville. This year, however, Miss Jones is a high school student and will not be eligible for competition.

Single admission 50c. For last nite 75 cents. Walton Tournament.

ARRANGEMENTS

MADE BY BOONE POST NO. 4 TO TAKE CARE OF LOANS AT MEETING MONDAY NIGHT—THOSE NOT IN ACTUAL NEED, HOWEVER, ARE URGED TO DEFER APPLICATIONS

The new Adjusted Compensation Act provides for loans at 4½ per cent interest up to one-half of the face value of each Certificate and for the benefit of all Boone County Ex-service men who wish to take advantage of this loan by the Government, arrangements were made by Boone Post No. 4, American Legion, at a regular meeting on Monday night March 2 to assist them in making their applications.

Any Ex-service man wishing to make a loan on his Certificate may do so by applying to C. L. Cropper, Adjutant of Boone Post No. 4 at Burlington, Ky., who is supplied with the necessary forms, and if you have never borrowed on the Certificate it is necessary that the Certificate be filed with the note form at the time of making the application as his certificate is turned over to the Government to be filed with the note executed by the Ex-service man, if you have at this time a loan on your Service Certificate it is necessary that you at the time of applying for the additional loan bring the notice with you which was received from the Veterans Bureau which has the numbers of your certificate and this notice must be returned with the new application.

The American Legion suggests that Veterans not actually in immediate need defer their applications for 60 or 90 days so as to permit the [illegible] all veterans in cooperation with the Veterans' Bureau in filing their applications for loans.

The American Legion also advises the Veterans to each year pay the 4½ per cent interest on the money borowed, as it is calculated if the full amount available is borrowed and the interest not paid, that the principal and compound interest will almost entirely consume the balance of the value of the certivcate by the end of the twenty year period.

DEWITT JONES

HEARD FROM STATION W. M. A. Q. BY NUMBER OF BOONE COUNTY LISTENERS—BELOVED MINISTER, WHO ONCE OCCUPIED BOONE COUNTY PULPITS, CHARMS CHICAGO AUDIENCE

A great many radio fans from Burlington and throughout the county listened with rapt attention and extreme interest to the sermon of Edgar DeWitt Jones from station WMAQ last Sunday evening. Rev. Jones' topic was "The Madness of Religion" and needless to say he did not disappoint his radio audience here. And from the amount of applause he received from his hearers in Chicago he did not disappoint them.

He was speaking as the guest of the Chicago Evening Club and, therefore, applause was in order. Judging by announcements made prior the presentation of D. Jones he was invited there as a part of a series of varied weekly programs. The club announcer referred to Dr. Jones as the premier minister of the Church of Christ.

His sermon was delivered in that inimitable eloquent style so well known to church goers in this section, and which always held them spell-bound. In his introductory remarks Dr. Jones said that he was a Texan by birth a Missourian by adoption, a Kentuckian by marriage, an Illinoisian by reason of 14 years citizenship and a Detroiter by process of dynamiting.

Dr. Jones had been the guest of this same club about four years ago.

THIS MONTH OF MARCH

March used to be the first month in the year, in the days when folks calculated the year's beginning from the day when the sun crosses the Equator on his journey northward. The Vernal Equinox occurs on the 21st of March, and from then on the days are longer than the nights until March, and from then on the days are longer than the nights until the third week in September. The old Anglo-Saxon name for March was "Lencten-monath" or "lengthening month" because the days grow longer so rapidly.

In some parts of England and Scotland the last three days of March are called "the borrowing" the idea being that March has borrowed three days from April.

All over the world March, as the beginning of Spring, has been an important month in the religious ceremonials which are supposed to insure bountiful crops. The dead world comes to life again in March, and begins its cycle all over. There is sound logic in the old system of starting the year's reckoning with March, a custom which Scotland did not drop until 1699 and which persisted in England until 1752. In the Christian calendar the most important festival, Easter, celebrating the Resurrection, fixes its date from the Vernal Equinox; Easter Sunday is the Sunday after the first full moon that follows the 21st of March. Every religion has a festival thus commemorating the renewal of life in Spring.

Much of this country is still snow-covered in March. In the northern states potatoes, the first crop to be seeded, will not be planted until April, while from Virginia south they are already in the ground. But everywhere Spring is in the air, and preparations are under way for the perennial struggle between Man and the Soil, the struggle in which Man is so often defeated but which he approaches every year with renewed hope.

Fewer, Well-Seasoned Vegetable Dishes Replace Quantity Offerings of Grandmother's Day

THERE was a time, not so long ago at that, when the housewife felt it necessary that the principal meal of the day should always include three or four, or on special occasions even five, vegetable dishes.

Tables groaned under the weight of vegetables—potatoes, corn, beets, tomatoes and carrots—and the strange part is that everyone accepted this as a matter of course.

Today, the housewife with one eye cocked toward the family budget and a wealth of dietetic and culinary advice at her fingertips, has learned how to limit the vegetable courses to two or possibly three dishes, and still meet all the demands of health and appetite.

Science has taught her that it is possible to provide all the vitamins, calories and other food elements needed by active people without stuffing them until they resembled the proverbial Thanksgiving turkey.

But along with the reduction in the quantity of foods served has come an added responsibility for the quality of the dishes. The few vegetables should be served more attractively and with flavor more in mind, than were the four or five dishes of grandmother's day.

In France, methods of seasoning that give added zest to vegetable dishes have long been familiar to all experienced cooks and one of the seasoning agents most frequently used for this purpose is sugar. A small amount—just a dash—helps to restore the natural sweetness which the vegetables lose after being picked, and when two or more vegetables are cooked together it tends to blend their contrasting flavors.

A few housewives have long used a little sugar in cooking certain vegetables, but not until recently has its use been general with green vegetables as a whole.

The sugar has another value recognized by science, but not so widely known to housewives. It is a quickly assimilated energy food which becomes available for muscular use within a short time after it is eaten.

Thus, with this new trick of seasoning, not only is the flavor enhanced, but the food value of the dish as well.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS AMONG FRIENDS AND FOES

Luke 10:38-42; 11:43-46, 52-54

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Far more than many may think, Jesus was a very friendly man. He accepted many invitations to be a guest and delighted in the friendships that were increased as He tarried in some familiar home. This time the incident is in Bethany, not far from Jerusalem.

The writer was at the traditional site of this place and also entered the supposed tomb and Lazarus, brother of Mary and Martha who figure in in this lesson.

Both of these sisters have probably been overestimated by their critics. Martha "also" delighted to sit at His feet and learn of Him. Mary had probably attended to her part of the house work that morning. Martha wanted to overdo in the matter of the menu that day, and this was merely in accord with oriental custom. Today many a visit is spoiled for both guest and host by too much entertaining. Mary wanted spiritual uplift rather than physical indigestion. It looks as if Martha had been worrying herself with self-pity and the fretting was allowed to increase until she exploded against her sister and before the Company.

Foes are seen when the Pharisees come around to find fault with this new Teacher Who presents such different rules for daily living. They have added more rules to the Old Testament scrolls than the people can keep in mind, let alone practice. They had fixed a certain day in each year when every grave must be white washed lest some step thereon, but they would not do any thing to help the widow of the man whose body was buried there. Jesus wanted principles observed that would help mankind along the daily pathway. "Ye are my friends if ye do the things which I command you" is the Golden Text.

The Family Garden

SPRING GREENS

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture)

Spring greens are important in any year, for they are among the first things to come from the garden. They are exceptionally important this spring, however, because the winter reserve from last year's garden, not large to begin with, is almost exhausted.

The time to start greens is now. If the garden was broken last fall or at some time during the winter, and a generous coat of manure turned under, soil preparation is complete except for making the surface fine, either with a 5-tooth cultivator, or with a rake. The deeper the final seedbed is, the better, but even three inches is deep enough, for the greens are all shallow-rooted, and the season during which they grow is normally moist. Lacking the coat of stable manure, chicken manure may be scattered at the rate of one bushel to 300 square feet and worked in while the finishing touches are being given the seed bed.

Many persons think of spring greens in terms of a spring tonic, and approach the season determined to make the best of a healthful tho mootonous proceeding. Greens are a valuable change from the heavy diet of the winter, but their use need not be monotonous, for there is quite a variety to be had.

The most common green is mustard; Chinese or White is the variety. Spring or "smooth" kale, a seedsman's adaptation of rape should be added, for the flavor is quite different from that of mustard. In the past few years, an entirely new green has come on the market. Its name is "Japanese mustard spinach." Its quality and flavor are distinct from either of the two greens just named, and a planting of it should be included to introduce variety, and because it is really an excellent green crop. It has the advantage of earliness over the other two, in that it takes but 25 days to reach edible size. Last, but by no means least, is spinach, whose flavor is different from all the others, and to some palates, the most pleasing of all. The best variety is King of Denmark.

The most common way of sowing spring greens is broadcasting, but it is better to sow in drills so that insects may be more easily controlled. The rows may be as close as 11 inches if cultivating is to be done with a garden plow; 30 inches are needed if horsedrawn tools are to be used. The seed should be sown at the rate of 2 or 3 to the inch, and barely covered. One ounce of spinach seed will sow 100 feet; for the others, only ¼ ounce is needed for 100 feet of row. It is advisable to thin the seedlings to a stand of one inch.

PESTS

Sometimes the greens are bothered by plant lice. If the seedlings are still small, the control is spraying with tobacco extract, but if they are almost ready to harvest, it is better to use any of the pyrethrum sprays that have lately come on the market. Occasionally, the cabbage worms are troublesome. Pyrethrum is the control, since it is not poisonous to man, but, if as much as three weeks can pass before harvest arsenate spray may be used.

Ancient Indian Pit

An Indian pit, believed to date from the Algonkian period of 1,500 years ago, was uncovered at Willow Point, near Binghamton, N. Y., It has not been determined whether the pit was used for feasts or for cremation. The skeleton of an Indian girl also was unearthed.

Thoughts of Life

By BRUCE BARTON

DOING THINGS FOR PEOPLE

I have a friend who occupied a prominent official position in Washington for a number of years. After his retirement he opened an office and let it be known that he would act as an adviser to individuals and companies having business to transact with the government.

Recently he told me that his first year's income was about ten times as large as he had dared to hope for.

"The only way I can explain it is that I am now cashing in on my lifetime habit of doing things for people" he said. "When I was in office I never could see why it wasn't worth while to go to a little trouble for folks if you could do it properly. So when a man came to me I didn't try to side-step by saying 'You will have to take that matter up with such and such a department.' I just tried to help him out.

"I wasn't scheming about it. I had no conscious notion that I was laying up treasure in Heaven, or anything of that sort.

"But apparently people remembered and appreciated, and now they are taking pleasure in paying me back."

Neither by temperament nor conviction do I belong to the United Brotherhood of Pollyannas. I do not hold that we live in the best of all possible worlds, nor that selfishness is always punished and virtue always rewarded.

On the contrary, I see many notable examples of men who have apparently never done a gracious thing in their whole lives who yet have achieved fortunes and are quite serene and contented in the enjoyment of the good things of the world.

But at several different times in my own exeperience I have been surprised by having bread which I had cast on the waters and forgotten come back to me spread with good butter and even considerable jam.

One of the most valuable contacts of my business life grew out of work which I did for a certain charitable organization, with no thought of personal gain. And a large piece of business once walked into my office, sent by the brother of a man whom I had been able to help many years before, and in an entirely different part of the country.

Speaking generally, I should say that the chance of being rewarded for good works is sufficient so that any man is justified, from a purely selfish standpoint, in going out of his way occasionally to be kind.

To say nothing of the fact that doing things for other people brings a personal satisfaction which is, in itself, a reward.

Hints for the Home

By Nancy Hart

Veal Loaf

Two pounds of veal and a half pound of salt pork, chopped fine together, half a dozen soda crackers, rolled fine and moistened with eggs well beaten. Mix all thoroughly together and season with pepper, salt, all-spice, grated lemon peel and nutmeg. Bake about an hour and a quarter, basting occasionally with a little butter and water until the last fifteen minutes. When done pour out the fat that may have fried out in the pan. Then make a gravy.

Baked Veal With Tomato Sauce

One thin veal cutlet, one teaspoon drippings, one teaspoon chopped onion, one teaspoon chopped parsley, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Trim edge of cutlet and spread on board or platter. Fry onion in drippings until tender; add breadcrumbs and parsley mixed with enough water to hold them together; spread on cutlet and roll; tie in three or four places. Dust with salt, pepper and flour. Place in and add one-half cup hot water. Roast in hot oven thirty-five to forty-five minutes, adding water if needed. Remove to hot platter; pour tomato sauce around meat and garnish with parsley.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

A PEPTIC ULCER,

A man sixty years old came into my office about three months ago. He was short, "tubby" in build, and complained of full stomach, shortness of breath on exertion, and vague, neuralgic pains that flitted about through his lungs when he ascended the stairs. He said the symptoms were sometimes relieved by eating a little; that most of his "fullness" was felt when he was sure the stomach was empty. He was disabled from work by reason of this thing which had been creeping on him for something like a year.

He had been studiously eating "roughage," as well as every sort of "health food" that he could hear of; had avoided meat, believing that it was deadly poison for him. In fact he had arrived at the point when he was suspicious of all foods.

Without resorting to X-ray, I diagnosed ulcer of the stomach; in fact, I did not even pump out and analyze the gastric content I simply put him on SMOOTH diet, telling him boiled or stewed meats would do him no harm. I gave him a slightly astrigent antiseptic powder to take between meals, and forbade all articles of food that even hinted at irritation of the stomach lining. I gave him a gentle liver stimulant.

The man came into my office less than an hour ago, and declared himself free from any unpleasant symptoms, had been so for two or three weeks; every complaint had been corrected.

"Roughage" of any sort works harm in many, many cases of disordered digestive tract, especially so in peptic ulcer. I am getting farther away from the "rougage" idea as evidence accumulates against it. Self-diagnosis and self-treatment almost invariably had the patient to try "roughage," when every symptom calls for "smoothage."

If I should be fortunate enough to have a physician in my audience, I believe he will agree with me. I feel sure he will, if he has become field enough to forsake a worn-out idea.

BUSY FARMERS SHOULD USE COMMERCIAL BABY CHICK STARTER FEED

Commercial starter feed for baby chicks is an economy on farms as compared with the hit-or-miss rations prepared by busy folks during the rush season in spring, says Prof. R. L. Cochran, Dept. of Poultry Husbandry, Iowa State College.

On most farms, poultry is just one of several important enterprises. At the time most farmers get their baby chicks, the busy season is at hand—when crops must be put in; when pigs are arriving; and a hundred jobs seem to be calling for help. If under these conditions the farmer tries to prepare the starting mashh, he is taking away time from other important tasks. Furthermore, few can spare time to prepare an adequate feed.

It is economy, therefore, to let the wife who usually is the real poultry raiser, drive to town and buy the baby chick starter feed already prepared. An increasing number of farm folks are beginning to aopt this practice.

Union county farmers will sow 40, 00 to 50,000 pounds of korean lespedeza.

Owen county farmers used cribs, cisterns and ice pits as emergency silos last fall, finding them profitable and satisfactory.

Backwoods of Kinship

Part of Southern Life

Perhaps less of the most characteristic modes of behavior in the South is in the business of kinship, in which particular the southerner surpasses even the New Englander, Howard Mumford Jones writes, in Scribner's Magazine. It sometimes seems to me that everybody in Virginia or South Carolina or Georgia is related to everybody else.

If a marriage takes place, the fact is conversationally recorded; then comment turns at once to the question of the family ramifications involved. If a political appointment is announced, it soon appears that the appointee is cousin to somebody else.

The system is so intricate that the tactful northerner, after one or two unhappy blunders, learns to preface any comment on a public character, literary, political, or what not, with the polite hope that the subject's relatives will not misunderstand his remarks.

In a day when the family is supposed to be breaking up, the business of "claiming kin" in the South probably is less patent than it used to be; yet it is one of the most powerful forces in southern life, and one the implications of which, I believe, few southerners realize.

Had Strong Objection to Oversupply of Rain

One summer during a record-breaking drought in Georgia the colored brethren and sisters coagulated for the purpose of praying up a rain.

The parson was on his knees reasoning with the Almighty in the following words:

"Good Lawd, dis kentry am dried up! She sho' am pahched! De crops am done cooked en de watah supply am runnin' low! Yo' people am sufferin' scandalus. Sen' a rain, good Lawd! Sen' a rain! Not none o' dem drizzle-drazzle rains dat don't do no good noh get nowhah! Sen' a big rain; a gully-washeh; a trash-liftah."

"Hol' on dah, pahson!" shouted an old lady in the back of the church, rising excitedly from her knees. "Hol' on whah yo' is at! Don't yo' go prayin' foh no trash-liftin' rain! I done buried mah son-in-law jist ystiddy!"—Collier's Weekly.

Egyptian Curse Believed

Ignoring arguments against the curse of the pharaohs, there are few in Ireland who do not retain their belief that the tomb of the kings of Egypt must remain untouched. In Ireland are heard many tales regarding the touching of graves of even the poorest of the people. Should a body be buried in a wrong grave in the west of Ireland none of the relatives would sanction any change. A woman visiting Ireland from the United States was shocked at the condition of the family burial place, and had great difficulty in gaining permission to have the cemetery drained and improved. On the west coast the raising of a body after burial is supposed to bring a great storm.—Detroit Free Press.

Not to Be Outdone

"You don't seem to have any notorious spots here?" said the exacting tourist to the guide at the famous beauty spot.

"You know, in the last village we stopped at they showed us a place where a man had lain in wait for his rival in love, and had attacked him with a fiendish gusto."

The guide had never heard of this terrible crime, but his professional pride was roused.

"That is quite true, sir," he answered; "but you are not aware, perhaps, that the villain afterwards made his escape to this village, and you are standing on the very spot where he threw away that fiendish gusto!"—Weekly Scotsman.

Gave Bride a Shock

A clergyman recently gave a young woman of his acquaintance a very bad quarter of an hour. On her wedding day he sent her a telegram which, as received, ran: "John 4:18."

On looking up the text the girl was horrified to read: "For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband."

After they had restored the young woman to consciousness, inquiry was made at the telegraph office, when it was found that the operator had omitted the letter or numeral indicating the first Epistle. John I 4:18 reads: "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."—London Tit-Bits.

Magnificent Elm

Although New England is the leading habitat of the elm, the record specimen is to be found at Marietta, Ohio. It is reputed to be about 500 years old. It has a girth at the waist of the trunk of twenty-seven feet two inches, and at eighteen inches from the ground is thirty-two feet. Originally it had a spread of 165 feet, but recently this has had to be cut back fifteen feet. At about eight feet above ground it divides into five great branches, each as large as an ordinary full-grown elm.

Chicago is the most congested city in America. Of 40 leading cities in the United States, the average population is 5.02 persons per acre. This compares with 11.63 people to the acre in Chicago, according to recent figures.

Origin Many Desired Recognition's Alma Mater

The late Sherman Whipple, one of Boston's best known lawyers and famous characters, was unique among his colleagues, owing to the fact that he went through Yale instead of Harvard. It was almost marriage and proved a decided drawback at the beginning of his career. This is no slam at Yale, but merely states the fact that in the eyes of Bostonians, a local boy who went there instead of to Harvard has committed a social error.

Of course, Whipple had intended to go to Harvard, but as expense had to be considered, his prudent mother wrote to both Harvard and Yale asking them to send catalogues.

Yale promptly sent a catalogue. Harvard replied that one would be sent on receipt of 50 cents.

So Sherman Whipple went to Yale. —Los Angeles Times.

Short Short Story, but Neatly Pointed Moral

A certain king sent to another king, saying, "Send me a blue pig with a black tail, or else—" The other replied, "I have not got one, and if I had—" For these words they went to war. After many men had been killed they wished for peace. But before peace could be got they had to explain the words they had used. "What did you mean," asked the second king of the first, "by saying to me, 'Send me a blue pig with a black tail, or else—'?" "Why," said the other, "I meant a blue pig with a black tail, or else some other color. But what did you mean by saying, 'I have not got one, and if I had—'?" "That if I had one, I should have sent it." Both kings were pleased, and peace was made. Many quarrels are pretty nearly as foolish as the war about the blue pig with the black tail.—Montreal Family Herald.

Great White Way

In 1815 a considerable part of London was lighted by gas, and experiments were being performed in this country. Six years later gas-lighting in Baltimore proved a success.

The new agent of civilization was sneered at by the skeptical, frowned on by the conservatives and generally scouted by the great body of people who had used oil lamps and candles and who were incredulous of any change for the better.

In 1823 the first gas-light establishment was organized in New York city, and in 1826 there were 120 gas lamps installed on Broadway from the Bowery to Grand street, replacing 75 oil lamps. Thus started the "Great White Way."

Shawls for Men

In the closing years of the Civil war the cost of garments made to order was so great and money was so scarce that it was no sign of poverty to wear a shawl. Most men wore them, says an article in the Milwaukee Journal. Men's shawls were mostly good, heavy wool, dark gray or brown. Some were striped and some were checked with dark blue or green. Men folded their shawls lengthwise. Worn that way, a shawl was good protection to the neck and shoulders and took the place of both coat and muffler. Most men were dressed warmly underneath. They wore red flannels and sometimes chamois vests.

Venice of Holland

Not every one has seen a water village, but in Holland this is the privilege of the traveler. Of none can it be said more correctly than of lovely Aalsmeer, which can be reached from Haarlem in a short time. It is one long, straight village street, no more than a towing path, with a canal on either side. Small swing bridges connect the houses with this path, and many of them are entirely surrounded by water. It is a rural Venice, but, unlike Venice, it is a flower and fruit-laden village, and its shrubs, cut into grotesque shapes, are world famous.

"Doves" and "Pigeons"

The words "dove" and "pigeon" are practically synonymous, but in ordinary usage "pigeon" is a somewhat broader term and is applied to all birds belonging to the family Columbidae, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. Both terms are applicable to the domestic pigeon and to various wild species, but some of the smaller species of the family are specifically called doves, such as turtle-doves, mourning doves, ground doves, to distinguish them from the larger species more commonly called pigeons.

Got Too Hot for Pup

Cold weather sent a dog owned by Stanley Gavel of Stamford, Conn., into the ash pit of the Gavel furnace in search of warmth. The dog warmed up rapidly, but when live coals began dropping on his hide he retreated to the back of the pit and set up a wild yelping. Efforts of the Gavels to get him out were unavailing. They telephoned to the fire department. Three firemen went to the house with fire hooks and hauled the dog out, slightly scorched.

MILK THAT BRING COWS THIS YEAR

Dairy farmers who milk high producing cows should be able to make money this year, even at the reduced prices for butterfat, says the annual agricultural outlook report of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. It will be necessary, however, to cull out the poor producing cows and feed well the good producers. Only good cows should be purchased.

The number of cows being milked has increased in the last few years. While production was cut by the drouth last summer, mild weather and cheaper feeds resulted in heavy production during the winter. This, together with business depression, brought about lower prices for dairy products.

While improved business conditions would tend to make for better butter and milk prices, still farmers are cautioned that high producing cows given good care will be necessary for profits this year.

TO HOLD NINE FARM BUILDING SCHOOLS

A series of nine farm building schools will be held in the state in the interests of acquainting material dealers, contractors, carpenters, farmers, county agents and other persons with the best types of farm buildings for Kentucky.

Representatives of the Ky. Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, the Portland Cement Association, local dealers and builders, farmers, county agents, farm engineers from the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, and others will take part.

The state has been divided into nine districts of seven to 12 counties, with a one-day school for each district as follows: Bowling Green, March 2; Hopkinsville, March 3, Owensboro, March 4; Mayfield March 6; Shelbyville, March 9; Mt. Sterling March 16; Williamstown, March 19; Danville, March 23; and Barbourville, March 25.

LITTLE HOPE FOR HIGH LAMB PRICE

Lamb prices are not expected to be high this year, and sheep raisers should make every effort to make their lambs of good quality and get them on the market before the western run begins, says the annual outlook report of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

The sheep situation is not in as satisfactory a condition as it has been in some previous years. Numbers have increased until they probably are the largest in the history of the United States. Marketings of lambs last year were the largest on record, and a large supply is expected again this season.

Kentucky sheep men are considered to be in better position than producers generally, as the number of sheep in states which compete with Kentucky is about the same as a year ago, while there has been a decrease of 6 per cent in this state.

Light movements of lambs into feed lots in the late feeding districts indicates a smaller supply of finished lambs during the next four months than during the corresponding period in 1930. Larger receipts can be expected, however during the latter part of the year, especially if weather conditions are favorable during the lambing season, and if feed conditions, particularly pastures, are favorable for finishing lambs.

Prices of poultry, beef and pork are expected to continue low this year, which fact will tend to hold down lamb prices.

World wool production continues near record levels, and consumption has been reduced by the business depression. Stocks are large. Domestic demand is at a low level, and little improvement is expected until business conditions are better.

March 11—Swine sanitation, Grady Sellards.

March 13—What farm folks are asking, L. C. Brewer.

WOULD ENCOURAGE LAMB CONSUMPTION

In an effort to promote the consumption of lamb, a series of educational lectures and demonstrations will be held over the state during March, the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, announces.

Prof. E. J. Wilford of the College and Max O. Cullen, of the National Live Stock and Meat Board, will appear before groups of housewives and meat retailers where they will demonstrate the cutting up of the lamb carcass and the preparation of the various cuts.

Housewives will be shown the advantages in using all cuts of lamb, rather than just a few. Too many persons, it is said, think of lamb only in terms of chops and legs, whereas all parts of the carcass can be made into tasty dishes if properly prepared.

The demonstration before retailers will endeavor to show how the carcass can be cut and displayed so as to attract customers to purchase more lamb.

The purpose of the demonstrations and lectures will be to encourage greater consumption of lamb, which is one of Kentucky's prime farm products. Although relatively low in price, consumption of lamb is low.

The meetings will be held under the auspices of county home demonstration agents as follows: Covington March 9 and 10; Winchester March 11; Lexington, March 12 and 13th; Frankfort, March 16; Owensboro, March 17 and 18; Paducah, March 19 and 20; Hopkinsville, March 23, and Bowling Green, March 24th and 25th.

Rats, Rats and Smuts

The cost of the plant ills of this country is estimated at a billion and a half dollars. If it were not for their attacks the wheat crop would be 97,000,000 bushels greater, and the corn borer and other pests account for 271,000,000 bushels of corn. Canada's loss amounts to about $45,000,000.

THE REASON

Why

A QUESTION frequently asked is "Why do electric light and power companies sell power to a factory at a lower rate than to the Home? It costs no more to generate one kilowat than another; why, then, a higher rate to the domestic consumer?"

The reason is that the rate for each class of electric service is established not alone by what it costs to produce power in the generating plant, but also by what it costs to deliver that power to the consumer.

In order to deliver electricity to the domestic consumer we must build lines and keep them in repair, read meters, bill, collect. This means wages to engineers, linemen, "trouble shooters," office force, and others.

The transmission and distribution costs per kilowatt-hour are smaller in the case of the industrial user, because line, metering and accounting costs are considerably lower.

Therefore, the reason why power rates are lower than domestic rates is THAT IT COSTS LESS PER UNIT TO SERVE THE WHOLESALE POWER CONSUMER.

PASTURES CHEAP FEED

Good pastures is worth $9.00 per cow per month compared with hay at $30.00 per ton. Good pastures is the cheapest and one of the best feeds we produce according to county agent H. R. Forkner.

Farmers who lost considerable parts of their pasture last year should be giving the pastures for the coming season careful consideration. Pastures can best be improved thru use of better seeding mixtures. use of good seed, proper management in putting of the seeds on the soil, use of fertilizer and care of the crop after the plants are up along with several other considerations.

Careful consideration should be given the seeding mixture. A county committee after careful study has recommended for general conditions a mixture of at least two legumes and two grasses in each mixture. Red clover, alsike, white clover, sweet clover, Japan clover, Korean lespedeza, alfalfa and several other legumes may be used. Timothy, Red Top, Blue grass and orchard grass will give good results as the grasses for the mixture.

Special Caution—A number of farmers have been buying seed brought in by truck and other means from Indiana and on which not germination or purity test has been made. Farmers of Boone county are advised not to buy these seed until AFTER such a test has been run by the experiment station or other reputable institution. Tests that have been run on a few samples show that many are of exceptionally poor quality and a big part obnoxious weed seeds.

Deaths

OBITUARY

James William White, eldest son of Wm. S. White and Sarah Ryle White, was born Jan. 19th, 1866, in Boone County, Kentucky, lived in various parts of the county of the county all his life. Died very suddenly at his home on Ashby Fork, Boone county a little afternoon on Nov. 19, 1930, being 64 years and 10 months of age.

He seemed in his usual health but a short time before his death had talked with friends just about one and one-half hours before he was found dead in the home. He had been dragging in wood with his team all forenoon preparing for a woodsawing. On Jan. 26th, 1887, he was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Voshell, daughter of Geo. C. and Mahala Johnson Voshell. To this union five children were born, three of whom with the wife have passed ahead of the father.

He faithfully stood by and ministered unto his wife in her long illness with steadfast devotion. Death relieving her sufferings December 12, 1929. Whenever anyone was sick or needed help he was always willing to lend a hand and spent many a night at a sick friends bedside.

He joined the I. O. O. F. Lodge of Belleview, Ky., many years ago, he and his wife also were members of Evergreen Rebecca Lodge No. 24 at the same place.

He leaves to mourn his loss one son William and his wife, of Petersburg, Ky., one daughter Mrs. Raymond Yandles and husband of Elizabethtown, Ohio, one granddaughter Jean Ann, to whom he was devoted, besides one brother H. Clay White, Jr., of Petersburg, Ky., two sisters Mrs. Mary Rector, of Waterloo and Mrs. Pearl Craig of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and other friends and relatives.

RETIRED FARMER TAKEN BY DEATH

On the morning of the 26th of February the sun rose up beautifully over the eastern hills without a cloud to mar its beauty. Everything was beautiful in the sunlight. The little birds sang their beautiful carols in the tree tops, everything said what a lovely day we are going to have but it was not to be that way for God had directed it otherwise.

In a few hours a dark cloud encircled he sun, shutting out every ray of sunlight, and darkness had encircled the earth and all the beauty of the morning was gone, for at this time J. B. Coleman had passed away.

In a few hours the storm had spent its fury the desolation and distruction was over all the earth, the beautiful trees were twisted and torn from their roots and in a few hours the sun shown out again over the earth making it as beautiful as ever for a beautiful life had gone to the one who gave it.

When the news spread over Latonia and Covington that J. B. Coleman had passed away every head was bowed for a moment to pay their respects to this wonderful man. Mr. Coleman was not only known in the business world but in the society circles in which he and his good wife moved.

On Sept. 11th Mr. Coleman was married to Mrs. Mae Evans Snyder, of Petersburg, Ky. He leaves his wife one daughter, Dr. M. C. White, three grandchildren, one great-grand child, one brother, one sister and a host of other relatives. Mr. Coleman was loved by every one who knew him. He was a christian man, always ready to lend a helping hand to those in trouble—his greatest wish on this earth was not to be granted, and that was to live to make his good wife happy, but after all God knows best.

Only the passing over from this world of care to the Home where sainted loved ones are waiting to welcome him there.

A FRIEND

School Notes

BURLINGTON SCHOOL NOTES

The last scheduled game this year was played last Friday night Feb. 27. The Tomcats and Kittens broke even with the fast Southern Ohio Business College teams, the Kittens winning their game by a large score and the Tomcats losing by a large score. In the last two games the Kittens have played some real basket ball which means that Coach Lamb is going to have a real girls basket ball team in the District Tournament and they are going to make some team fight to go to Paris. Friday night in their game they made 15 points in the first half while S. O. B. C. made 5 points, but in the last half the Kittens did not do so well and were able to get only 8 points while the S. O. B. C. was fortunate enough to get three points. Phillips and Akin for the Kittens were the high point makers while L. Ryle, A. Burton and E. Ryle showed up with several points each. When the game ended the score stood 21 to 8 in favor of the Kittens. The Tomcats lost their game by a score of 33 to 15 but let the S. O. B. C. boys know that they were up against a fast team. The S. O. B. C. did not have any trouble getting a start on the Tomcats, but it was done on account of their height, while the shortest man on their squad is 6 feet and could very easily reach over the Tomcats tallest man and get the ball. This they did time after time making the goal. In the first half the Tomcats had 6 points while the S. O. B. C. boys had 21 points, but in the last half the Tomcats came back and made 9 points while the S. O. B. C. made 12 points. J. Williamson was the high point maker for the Tomcats with Greenup, Ogden, Stephens and D. Williamson right behind him with a good game. Next Friday March 6th, the Tomcats and Kittens will play at Walton where they will enter the 21st District Tournament. In the drawing the two teams were fortunate enough to draw "Bye" which means the Kitten will play the fast Union girls team and the Tomcats will hook up with the Petersburg Bulldogs. So let's all go to Walton and see our team come out on top.

Ruby Mitchell and Marie Snelling were absent last Wednesday.

Ralph Maurer, a member of the Tomcat squad, while practicing last Wednesday fell into some chairs, injuring his leg very severely, which kept him out of the game Friday nite, but, due to the careful attention he was given, he will be back Friday for the Tournament.

Everybody welcome.

J. L. Morgan, who recently moved to the property of the late C. H. Yowell on the Florence pike, is one of our latest subscribers. The Morgans are said to be splendid citizens and neighbors and it is well known that they acquired one of the most attractive country homes in this entire section.

The Fiscal Court at its monthly session this week, changed he wage scale on the county roads from $2 to $3.00 per day. The downward change was made in January, the argument being used that he county was paying more than the state for labor on their roads. However, the last change seems to have struck a popular chord with most of the county's citizens.

FEDERAL SEED LOAN

The first Federal Seed Loan check was received at Burlington on Monday. The amount of the check was $300.00. This is the first installment on the $600.00 loan.

The number of seed loans from Boone county is not expected to be large as the majority of the farmers of the county can secure credit thru the local banks. The local banks are not flush with money but under the conditions are probably as strong for their size as any in the state. The number of applications for loans to date have only totaled seven.

African Province Found to Be Flea-land Oasis

A plague-prevention survey of Africa resulted in the discovery of a spot which is absolutely free of fleas and the incident was regarded as so remarkable that the investigators married for some explanation of the unusual situation. This favored spot was the town of Pretoria and the country immediately surrounding it. Fleas are notoriously good carriers of the germs of this disease and therefore the entire wide reaches of Africa were systematically searched for animals carrying infected specimens of "pulex irritans." Hence it happens that certain dogs at Pretoria, which lies on the Karroo prairies of the Cape of Good Hope province, were searched for fleas by the medical men.

Not a solitary jumper could be found. Every cur, even the most neglected and mongrel native-owned brutes, was absolutely devoid of them.

The theory of some residents is that the nitrates in the barren lands surrounding this particular settlement act as a natural disinfectant.

Living Characters Used on Ancient Chessboard

The Mughul emperors of India carried out some strange plans in connection with their domestic life, and a visitor to the famous fort in Agra will be able to see some of the beautiful buildings used as part of the zenana. One of the most interesting features is the open space in the center of the fort, known as the Anjuri Bagh. This space is divided into many squares, marked off by marble slabs, and covered with green grass. There are broad marble causeways between the separate blocks. It is generally believed that the Mughul emperors used these as chess-boards, and the "pieces" used in the game were young slaves, who changed their position according to the directions of the players, who would be seated in one of the marble pavilions. The game played in those days did not correspond with the modern chess, but was known as pachesi. The size of the Anjuri Bagh is about 280 feet square.

Where Pigeons Fail

The use of carrier pigeons has not been attended with any great degree of success by the members of the royal Canadian air force on forestry patrol. Birds were carried on airplanes with the hope that they would prove valuable in case of emergency. Several birds were released 500 miles from home, but a small number reached their objective point. They had encountered an electrical storm and were lost in the struggle. Those that did get through were very late. In another test one bird reached the home cote, but it had lost its message. This was a genuine call for help and the unfortunate flyer was compelled to walk many hundred miles.

Fear of Premature Burial

In ancient times the authorities took even greater precautions against premature burial than are taken today. Tobb and Vollum Hadwan, in their book "Premature Burial," say:

"To prevent such unspeakable horrors, the Egyptians kept the bodies of the dead under careful supervision by the priests until satisfied that life was extinct previous to embalming them by means of antiseptics, balsams and odoriferous gums.

"The Greeks were aware of the dangers of premature burial and cut off fingers before cremation to see whether life was extinct."

Authorship in Dispute

The saying "But for the grace of God, there go I" has been wrongly attributed to John Wesley and many other famous persons. The Dictionary of National Biography gives credit for it to John Bradford, an English Protestant martyr of the persecution under Queen Mary. Accused of preaching seditious sermons, he was kept in prison for two years before he was burned at the stake in Smithfield. There is a tradition that on seeing some criminals going to execution he exclaimed: "But for the grace of God, there goes John Bradford."

Gauging Age of Stars

The age of the earth according to ordinary time standards is enormous, but when compared with the age of some stars our earth is extraordinarily young.

Three different astronomical methods can be applied to the calculation of the age of the stars, and all three astronomical clocks show the same time, 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 years. If the age of a human being is one second, of the human race six hours, then the lower limit of the age of the earth is one year, and the age of the stars is 5,000 years.—George von Hevesy in Science.

"That's what worries me," replied Senator Sorghum. "Any number of people are liable to remember those speeches and quote them when I am anxious to talk about something else."

Old Timer Showed Boys Old Game of Football

Both on the stage and in the field of sport, there are those who long for the good old days and claim that the modern performance is but the shell of the real thing. This has been claimed more than once by old-time football fans and at Yale, for one, it is believed that the old-timers may be right.

It was the old, giant guard, Pudge Heffelfinger, who put doubt in the mind of Old Eli. He returned to the campus at the age of fifty and after watching the Yale varsity for awhile turned to Tad Jones, coaching at that time, and complained: "They don't charge the line properly."

"Well, why don't you go in there and show them the way you used to charge?" Jones suggested with a smile.

"I'll do it," said the fifty-year-old Pudge, earnestly. He charged the Yale varsity line the way he used to when he was a guard, back in the good old days and in a few minutes had ripped the Yale team to shreds and had Tad pleading with him to get out of the game before he ruined the team beyond repair.

The old boy went away at last, mumbling that football had become a children's game. It is a matter of record that he was never again invited to charge a Yale line.—Exchange.

Magistrate Had "Called the Turn," Unknowingly

The president of the Oxford union completed his term of office and came down to London to see some friends. The friends were congenial, not to say convivial, and in the early hours of the morning the president of the union was found reposing in a wheelbarrow in the middle of Piccadilly circus by a policeman.

Before the magistrate, the president, having very little recollection of what had happened, decided to bluff it out. The magistrate wanted to know why he had chosen a wheelbarrow for a resting place.

The president replied that he was there "for purely valetudinarian reasons."

The magistrate pointed out the offender's lack of responsibility and respect for the court. "You talk," he added, "as if you were 'er, well, president of the Oxford union."

And the president leaned over the dock and in a very soft and tender voice said:

"We are."—London Tit-Bits.

Coast Guard Ranks High

The Coast guard constitutes, under the law, a part of the military forces of the United States, which shall operate under the Treasury department in time of peace and operate as a part of the navy, subject to the orders of the secretary of the navy, in time of war or when the President shall so direct. It is composed of the former revenue cutter service and life saving service. The Coast guard has played a distinguished part in every war in which the United States has been engaged. In time of peace it has made a distinguished record in saving life and property at sea and in the performance of its many other important functions.

Ghost Stories Revived

People of Portchester, England, are more certain than ever that ghosts inhabit the famous ancient castle of the place. They point to the recent finding of three skeletons at a spot where they say ghosts were definitely seen to vanish on at least three separate occasions last winter. The castle was once an early British camp, then a Roman fortress, later a Norman stronghold, and in the Napoleonic war a jail for French prisoners. Smallpox and other epidemics broke out several times among the French prisoners and a great number of them died and were buried there.

Fisherman's Lucky Day

To catch a pike and a hawk in the same net is something which does not happen to many fishermen, but Karl Sohlman, of Toemte, in the province of Vermland, Sweden, recently accomplished the feat. A large and powerful pike was caught in his net and a hawk, watching the attempts of the fish to free itself, swooped down in the hope of a meal. But its claws became entangled in the meshes and Sohlman hauled in a double catch. The bird was an unusually large specimen, measuring more than one meter (3.28 feet) between the wing tips.

Hero Gave Name to City

Although Houston's fame is based principally on its exceptional development in recent years as a shipping point and as an industrial center, yet no southern city has a more interesting or romantic background. It was named after Gen. Sam Houston, hero of the Battle of San Jacinto, when the republic of Texas achieved her independence from Mexico. The battlefield, now a state park, is located about twenty-two miles from the city.

Fisherman's Odd Catch

Mark O'Neal of Toronto, Wash., went fishing. He came home with one trout and a slot machine. He worked half an hour landing the heavy machine his hook had snagged under the water, and an hour and a half making it disgorge a nickel he dropped in to see what would happen. Nothing happened.

THE COMMUNITY AND ITS BANKS

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

While upon the individual bankers there rests without qualification the direct responsibility for the prudent, honest conduct of their institutions, nevertheless the soundness of banking as a practical matter of fact is a community problem in which the public has a part to play as well as bankers and government officials charged with the supervision of banks.

R. C. STEPHENSON

In the first place, the assets of a bank, outside its government bonds, consist mainly of loans to business men and of investments in securities created by corporate enterprises. The deposits of a bank are not kept in the vaults as idle cash but are employed in these loans and investments to earn the money to pay the expenses of the bank so that it can render services to its customers and also pay them interest on such deposits as bear interest. If there were no such thing as unsound business men or enterprises there would be no such thing as unsound assets in a bank.

It is of course the unquestioned duty of the banker to choose only sound loans and investments, but the difficulty of such judgment, and human judgment is never infallible, is plainly increased in such times and under such conditions as we have been passing through, with many businesses not making expected earnings and therefore hampered in meeting their obligations. Unfortunately some investments and loans created by persons outside the banks which found their way into the banks in a relatively few instances have reflected the unwise business policies and conditions that became more than usually prevalent in our business activities and contributed to the difficulty of banking. The vast bulk of bank assets, however, are 100 per cent sound above all question.

"Hard Boiled" vs. "Easy" Banker

In another aspect the people of the community have a part to play in maintaining the soundness of their banks, and that is through the medium of patronage. The existence of a bank is dependent on public patronage. If only those banks were patronized in which the most careful policies were practiced and the most conscientious and able men in charge, it would go far toward maintaining the standards of banking. If business men in a community when refused loans by their banks for good and sufficient reasons because conditions are not favorable, thereupon withdraw their business to banks where less careful methods prevail, they clearly contribute to the creation of a less sound banking situation.

Also if, in the heat of competition, a banker offers higher interest rates or more free service to attract customers than the earnings of conservative banking justify, and is encouraged by the patronage of the public as against a more conservative banker, obviously the public is again playing a part in bringing about a less sound banking situation. It is an unfortunate fact that the banker who is strict, "hard boiled" if you please, is liable to be less popular than the "easy" banker, and by that same token the public itself has a voice in influencing the character of banking. Also it is the public in the end which pays the main part of the penalty if unfortunate results follow.

Still again the public can exert an influence in shaping the character of banking by supporting the purposes of bankers to maintain intelligent, independent, honest banking supervision by the public banking departments through insisting that this function of government shall be kept as free from political influence as the judiciary itself and shall be manned only by men of the highest ability and character.

In still another way can the people themselves contribute to maintaining the ability of their banks to meet their obligations, and this is by granting them the fullest possible confidence. As I said, the deposits are not kept as cash but are invested in loans and securities. Even the soundest assets of this type require some time to reconvert at full value into cash deposits. In many cases of bank troubles the only thing wrong with a bank was an unduly suspicious and apprehensive state of mind in its customers created by no act or condition of its own but by baseless rumors which sometimes led them to destroy the value of their own deposits by demanding them immediately, forcing a bank to sacrifice its assets and otherwise disrupt its financial operations.

Bankers Help

During the year 1930 the Bankers' Association of Langlade County, Wisconsin, worked out the finances for a cooperative milk plant, which entailed the raising of $100,000, and also sponsored an active 4-H Club campaign that culminated in an "Achievement Day" program, in which upwards of 400 young people participated. The increase in the number interested in this work was 200 per cent over the past two year period.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Christy entertained Sunday in honor of Wm. Hill and bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis Gaines called on Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Berkshire last Sunday eve.

This community was greatly shocked last Thursday a. m., when the sad intelligence went out of the sudden passing of Mr. J. B. Coleman at the home of Mrs. Mary Witham below town where he and his good wife (nee Mrs. Mary Evans Snyder) were overnight guests. Joseph Breckinridge Coleman came into this life on Sept., 11th, 1859. He was married to Miss Ella Wright on Nov. 21, 1882. To this happy union was born one daughter Mrs. Edith Coleman White with whom he made his home. On Sept., 11, 1930 he was married to Mrs. Mary Evans Snyder, who with his daughter, three grandchildren, one great-granddaughter, one brother Samuel Coleman and one sister Mrs. J. T. White remain to mourn the going of this good man. The funeral services were held from the Lutesia Christian church, Rev. H. C. Bourgon, in his beautiful, sympathetic and expressive manner read the last and rites spoaking of Mr. Coleman, he said: "A finer friend, a more courteous gentleman, a better citizen could not be found. Of a jovial disposition—it was a pleasure to be with him." His family have the sympathy of all who knew and loved him.

CONSTANCE

Founders Day was observed at the recent meeting of the Constance Parent-Teacher Association. A large birthday cake with thirty-four candles representing the thirty-four years since the organization of the National Congress of Parent-Teacher was the center table decoration. People of the school stood around a candle lighting ceremony.

The Value Sensation in a Year of Sensational Values

Developing Powers of Observation in Child

Teach a child to be observant of everything around him, and you give him one of the soundest starts in life. Her observations are very rarely wasted.

The Japanese are a race who appreciate to the full the value of observation, and their babies are taught it unconsciously almost from their cradles. They learn it as a game. The Japanese mother will give her child a tray of objects to look at for a few minutes, then the tray is taken away and the child tells her all about its contents. It is quite a thrilling game when there are lots of things to remember, and children take to it very quickly.

To be able to observe swiftly and accurately will often help one very substantially in life. To take in one's surroundings quickly, and to be able to sum up characters fairly accurately, are two very useful assets and each derived to a certain extent from observation.

When there are decisions to be made, it is possibly the man or woman who has been taught to observe from childhood who stands the best chance of making happy ones.

Cobra Worshipers Hold Deadly Reptile Sacred

Every year the dreaded cobra is responsible for the death of many thousands of persons in India, but so sacred is the snake considered that it is difficult to get the Hindu to assist in killing one.

In many Hindu houses these deadly reptiles have regular homes, and are daily fed with milk, and solemnly worshiped morning and evening.

At a place known as Subramanyaim, cobras are to be found in practically every house, and on certain festival occasions special services are held in their honor in the temple, thousands gathering from long distances to participate.

Although at any moment some member of the households harboring the snakes might accidentally be bitten—which means certain death — no one dare destroy the cobra on account of its sanctity.

Even where the living snake is not worshiped images of the cobra, carved in stone, are common, and in the early morning one can frequently see men and women offering gifts before these "snake shrines."

Quality in Marble

Marble which may be grained with beautiful shadings, while it is beautiful in appearance, in reality is not pure marble. The colored marble is that which at some time has been fractured and during the period of consolidation following coloring matter has made its way into the fracture and brought about the grain that is so desirable in certain classes of marble installations.

Black and grayish shades are due to the presence of carbonaceous matter, usually flake graphite. Red, pink or reddish-brown shades indicate the presence of manganese oxides. Hydrous oxide of iron accounts for the yellow-brown, yellow and creamy shades, while other colors, such as the bluish tints, are so far of undetermined sources.

All for Fashion

As to teeth, the Wakamba tribal custom was for all men to have them sharply filed to a point, after the fashion so prevalent in parts of the Congo and popularly supposed to denote cannibal propensities. As if this were not enough, they often extract their own teeth, then take those of animals, sheep or hartebeast, file their ends, shape their bases, and screw them into the vacant sockets. When first I read of this in a popular book I refused to credit it, but it is a sober fact.—Julian Huxley in Saturday Review.

Forestry Is a Business

Successful forest management demands application of the same investment principles that are applied in other successful businesses, viz., to perpetuate the values which will no longer earn satisfactorily. The land and improvement values, writes B. P. Kirkland in the Journal of Forestry, are mostly ineligible of recovery except through continued use as part of forest property. The chief knack of forest management consists in analysis of and proper order of the recovery of the tree investment.

Popular Northern Name

Eric denotes "ever royal" or "always kingly," from the two Teutonic words, "ei" (ever) and "rik" (a king or ruler). It was a famous name among the old Scandinavian and northern races who wrote it as Elrik and Earic. It has also a feminine form—Erica. Eric has been used for centuries among the old royal families of the North, because of its splendid meaning. Our most familiar form is "Richard" (stern king), and three kings of that name have sat upon the throne of England. —Montreal Herald.

Good Library System

A novel system for promoting student reading of good literature is used by the Portland (Maine) public library. Books are sent to every school in the city, one book to each pupil, and interchanged until every pupil has read every book. Last year more than 60,000 books had a circulation of

Hindus Eager to Draw Chariot of Juggernaut

The carriage of the great god Juggernaut now rumbles through the streets of Puri, India, a trifle faster than usual. This is due to the large number of policemen on hand, who hurry up the festival as one of the many precautions taken to prevent suicides. Juggernaut's chariot has thirty-two wheels, wide of rim, seven feet in diameter, and it is under these that impulsive devotees as part of the centuries-old ceremony have cast themselves. The Puri festival is one of the most celebrated in the Hindu calendar and annually attracts thousands of pilgrims. Great ceremony attends preparations for the journey of Juggernaut, lord of the universe, and his brother and sister, to the Garden temple, where the three gods pass a week. Hindus believe that when God comes to the earth he incarnates himself in one of ten forms and that on the day of the festival God incarnates himself as a "Vaman" or dwarf and appears in Juggernaut's car. Those who are fortunate enough to see him, they contend, attain salvation. The orthodox Hindus believe, too, there is much virtue in aiding to drag the car about a mile, from one end of the town to the other, which accounts largely for the eager rush to Puri each year.

Health Associated With Slimness and Laughter

The old advice, "Laugh and grow fat," is out of date. Not many years ago fatness was regarded as a sign of robust health, but we know now that it is undesirable even in babies or young children.

Dr. Lechmere Anderson, medical officer for Doncaster, England, claims that the phrase should be "Laugh and grow healthy." "Laughter," he says, "is essentially associated with good health, but adipose tissue, if at all undue, cannot be regarded as a favorable condition. Leanness of body is far more likely to be associated with strength and energy."

The fat person, he explains, has to make his heart and his muscles work far harder than they were designed to do, since they are called upon to deal with an extra load of from one to many pounds. For those who wish to become slim and healthy Doctor Anderson recommends the taking of little sugar, bread, or starchy foods—and laughter.

Dutch as Money Lenders

In addition to their banking activities the Dutch people have long been identified as world money landers. As early as 1700 a decree issued by the states general ruled against "foreign loan transactions without consent." Various other restrictions, called "placaten," were issued, which prohibited Dutch participation or active interest in any foreign corporations. The prohibition against foreign corporate financing, rather than foreign government loans, was designed to prevent Dutch capitalists from financing foreign concerns competing with Dutch trading companies.

"Ain't" Mere Colloquialism

The word "ain't" has no standing, except as a colloquialism, though on account of common usage and convenience many persons would like to include it. Crowell's Dictionary of English Grammar calls it a vulgarism that is incorrect in any context, and not a true contraction of "am not, are not" or "is not." There is a temptation to use "ain't" in the interrogative first person singular because there is no proper contraction for "Am I not?" but "ain't" cannot be used properly even in this case.

Insects Aid Ripening

A curious use is made of the wild fig, or capri-fig, in some warm countries. When the fruits of the common fig are growing, branches of the capri-fig are cut and placed over them. These bring insects which pierce the immature fruit to lay their eggs, and by killing it hasten its ripening. Thus earlier crops are obtained and the cultivated trees are induced to give further, speedier crops. The process is known as caprification and is commonly employed in the countries lying along the Mediterranean sea.

Customary Procedure

A man went into a small country store and informed the owner that he was about to leave the community. The storekeeper walked to his file and pulled out the list of unpaid bills, and approaching the man, said, "I know you will never pay these bills so I have written 'paid in full' and charged them to my loss account."

The man looked at the bills for a few minutes and then remarked, "When bills are paid you always give a sack of candy for the kids, don't you?"—Forbes Magazine.

TELLS HOW TO COOK "FLAVORED" VEGETABLES

Many housewives do not like to cook such vegetables as cabbage and onions because of the strong odor which penetrates the house. It is possible to cook them, however, without the odor. The secret, says Miss Florence Imlay of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, is to cook them in a large amount of water in an uncovered kettle.

Put the vegetables into boiling salted water and bring back to boiling point as soon as possible. Use two or three times as much water as vegetables and add one to one and a half teaspoons of salt for every quart of water.

Cook until tender. Cabbage will cook in 8 to 10 minutes. When vegetables are tender drain them and season with two tablespoons of bacon fat or butter for every quart of vegetables. Small pieces of crisp bacon or cooked ham may be added if the family likes vegetables with a meat flavor.

Cabbage and onions are both delicious served with a white sauce.

The liquid in which vegetables are cooked contains valuable minerals, and should be saved and used as a basis for soups or in sauces.

There is an old idea that children should not eat cooked cabbage, but even small children can eat it without difficulty when it is cooked quickly and mildly seasoned with salt and a small amount of fat.

Creamed Cabbage—Use 4 cups of cooked cabbage 1¼ cups of milk, 3 tablespoons of flour and a fourth of a teaspoon of salt. Melt the butter in a saucepan and add the flour. Mix well and add the milk. Bring to the boiling point and cook until the consistency of cream. Pour over drained cabbage and serve.

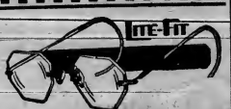
OUTLINES CLEAN CHICK PROGRAM

A system of poultry raising whereby 90 per cent or more of the chicks started can be raised, is announced by the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. It is called the "Clean Chick" program, and consists of five steps—(1) Clean chicks; (2) clean and satisfactory equipment; (3) clean ground; (4) a well balanced ration, and (5) careful management.



Information on the first step points out that clean chicks are the first essential for raising a large per cent of the chicks put in the brooder house. Bacillary white diarrhea, or pullorum disease, causes heavy chick mortality each spring. Drugs and medicine will not cure this disease because it is transmitted from the hen to the baby chick through the egg. The method of control lies in the elimination of the disease from the breeding stock. This is accomplished by means of the blood agglutination test and then disposing of the reactors.

Persons who buy chicks should buy from a breeder or hatchery that hatches only from blood tested stock or from a hatchery whose chicks are known to have lived well for other people. Do not set eggs from tested and untested flocks in the same incubator. Do not breed chicks from tested flocks with those from non-tested flocks at the same time in the same brooder house.

Administrator's Notice

All persons having claims against the estate of the late C. E. Beemon will present them before the undersigned proven according to law and all of those who are indebted to the said estate will please come forward and settle.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

FEDERAL CROP LOANS COMING TO KENTUCKY

Thousands of dollars already have been received by Kentucky farmers, under the provisions of the Federal crop loan, according to a statement issued by Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

County advisory crop loan committees are functioning smoothly, he said, and many loans already have been approved, the money being forwarded installments to help farmers purchase seed, fertilizer, work stock feed, tractor fuel and spray materials for this year's crops.

Local loan committees are receiving applications in practically every county in the state. County farm agents and other local interests are rendering valuable service in encouraging farmers to take advantage of the loans, and in advising and giving information regarding methods of securing them loans, Dean Cooper said.

Choir Blinds Evidently Not Granted on Pastor

Music in parish churches was not always distinguished by its charms. This was partly due to the fact that in other ways wrong from ancient instruments of the harmonium order and before that, of course, by the village fiddlers and bands armed with wind instruments.

It was probably after suffering severely from these that the vicar of Ashton, 50 years ago, was driven to record in the register that "On the second Sunday after Trinity the wind instruments in the choir happily ceased, and no instruments allowed but a violoncello."

To the Puritans an organ was a pagan instrument, and even the late Charles Haddon Spurgeon resisted all attempts to have one installed in his tabernacle. He compromised by allowing a cornet player to lead the singing. On one of his evangelizing tours he and his cornet player were supping with a country host, who asked, "Tell me, Mr. Spurgeon, can a cornet player be a Christian?"

"Yes," he answered, "he might remain a Christian, but his next-door neighbor cannot."—London Morning Post.

When the Light Dawned on Obstinate Merchant

The editor of the local paper was unable to secure advertising from one of the business men of the town, who asserted stoutly that he himself never read ads, and didn't believe anyone else did.

"Will you advertise if I can convince you that folks read the ads?"

"If you can show me!" was the sarcastic answer. "But you can't."

In the next issue of the paper, the editor ran a line of small type in an obscure corner. It read:

"What is Murphy going to do about it?"

The business man, Murphy, hastened to seek out the editor next day. He admitted that he was being pestered out of his wits by the curious. He agreed to stand by the editor's explanation in the forthcoming issue, and this was:

"Murphy is going to advertise, of course."

Having once advertised, Murphy is still advertising.—Forbes Magazine.

"Affected" Literature

The term "Precieux" was applied to the affected style which developed in France during the Seventeenth century. It was the outcome of a movement for purity and refinement in language and was fostered in various Parisian salons, notably in that of the Hotel de Rambouillet. It soon became a menace to the language, degenerating into a mere affectation. Under this influence, fantastic terms of speech replaced simple expressions to such a degree that the whole movement acquired a ridiculous character and led Moliere to write his brilliant satire, "Les Precieuxes Ridicules," which gave the death blow to the school.

No Haste in Holland

Hustle and hurry seem to be associated with travel everywhere except in Holland where you find more travelers in repose than elsewhere. Instead of the automobile, the leisurely bicycle wheels along, instead of the rushing train, the gentle canal boat with its almost noiseless use of wind and water cares for your pilgrimage. Little single-street towns, with gardens dipping into the water, slip quietly into cities whose streets are water, and a network of multi-colored houses, embowered in groups of playing children, lie amid long meadows that have never known the heading peevish haste of the flying hours.

Whisky of Arabian Origin

Whisky, according to Francis Tate, a British government chemist who has written a work called "Alcoholometry," was distilled first by the Arabians at a time when the inhabitants of Great Britain were clothed chiefly in blue dye.

England's contribution to whisky, he says, was in the Twelfth century, under the name of "Usquebagh," 100 years before Scotland sampled it. At first it was used purely as medicine, and the monks, who were the only doctors in those days, also were the founders of the distillery industry.—Detroit News.

Collegiate

President Hadley of Yale used to answer the question "should everyone go to college?" by saying:

"It isn't the going to college that counts, but what one accomplishes after getting there. For certain people, four years in college would be a grand waste of time; for others, even a single term might be of inestimable value.

"It is sad, but true, that sometimes the polish of a college education seems to show mostly on the shoes and hair."

Largest State Capitol

The Texas statehouse at Austin is said to be the largest state capitol in the United States. It was built between 1881 and 1888 by Chicago capitalists in return for 3,000,000 acres of land. The site of Austin itself was selected by a commission appointed in 1839 by the Republic of Texas to find the most attractive spot within the boundaries of the country for the seat of government.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Koreans Cling to Old Customs in Marriage

It is the rule in Korea for a newly wedded woman to enter the family of her husband, though in a few cases the man makes his home with her family. Marriage cannot be contracted between near relatives. Monogamy, taught by Confucius, has been observed from ancient times, but as the chief object of marriage was the perpetuation of the family, concubinage was formerly recognized when a marriage proved childless. The marriage of young people is usually arranged by their guardians without regard to their wishes, but there is a tendency to respect the will of the parties themselves. Until the day of marriage the engaged couple do not meet and have probably never before seen each other. A wedding is always conducted at the bride's home and after that the bridegroom takes her to his house. In the days of the Korean government the prescribed age of marriage for males was 15 and for females 14, although many males were married younger. Since 1915 no marriage of a male under 17 or of a female under 15 is legal.

Provisions for Regular Sessions of Congress

Each congress covers the period from the fourth day of the March following the congressional election in which its members were chosen, to noon the fourth day of March of the second year thereafter, or a period of two years.

According to the Constitution, congress must meet in regular session on the first Monday of December of every year, and special sessions may be held upon the call of the President. The "long session" is the one beginning in the odd-numbered years, because it may continue until business is finished. It usually ends, though, in the early summer. The session beginning in December of the even-numbered years is called the "short session" for the reason that it may last only until March 3, owing to the expiration of the terms of the members.

Knew His Orthography

She had double-parked her car in Washington street. When she came out of the downtown store in which she and her friend had been shopping a sticker glowed from the windshield.

"The big bum!" she exclaimed, expressing her disapproval of the policeman who had ticketed her car. "I'll bet he can't spell Washington street."

A few days later the friend who accompanied her on the double-parking tour inquired how she came out in traffic court.

"Did he know how to spell Washington street?" the friend inquired.

"I'll say he did—say, the guy could have spelled Gelsendorff street if it had been parked there!"—Indianapolis News.

The Radiometer

The radiometer is an instrument in which radiant heat and light may be directly converted into mechanical energy as devised by Sir William Crookes. It consists of an exhausted globe of glass in which is a needle support carrying a rotating four-disk vane, the face being blackened on one side. The blackened side absorbs more of the radiant energy than the other side and the molecules of residual air that strike it are thus given greater energy. The resulting pressure does not become quickly equalized for the two sides, as would be the case in air of ordinary density, hence the vane rotates.

Welcome Beacon

The palm tree is always a welcome sight to a traveler in the arid plains of the East, for there is always sweet water to be found in its vicinity. If there are no "springing wells," or boiling springs to be seen, all natives know that water is to be found by digging near to its roots. Wherever there is an oasis in the sandy deserts its presence is made known by the tall feathery palms, which promise the wanderer shade, refreshment and in the proper, long extended season, dates, the chief food of the Arabs, as well.

Back to Nature

Many persons have seen the chimpanzees' tea party where they all sit round a table and behave like ladies and gentlemen with their tea cups, saucers and plates. Sometimes nature gets the upper hand of this artificial civilization. A coconut was once thrown to them, and within a minute the cage was in a terrific uproar as the monkeys fought for the treasure. Cups and saucers were used as missiles, and everybody fought indiscriminately. The keepers had to intervene, and the tea party came to a sudden end.

"Trade" and "Profession"

"Trade" applies to any mechanical employment or handicraft except agriculture, which is an occupation. "Profession" is used to denote a learned calling, such as clergyman, lawyer, doctor, civil engineer, teacher. A craft is a trade which requires special skill, such as carpenter, bricklayer and blacksmith. "Craft" and "trade" are often used interchangeably and not infrequently "craft" and "art" are about the same. "Business" is almost exclusively used to describe commercial or mercantile occupations.

WASHINGTON

they are to receive scraps of paper representing a juggling of accounts in the Treasury. The right hand must understand that actual cash will be received therein; but the left hand, the taxpayers, which puts up the cash, must be fooled into believing that the transaction is "mere bookkeeping." Shade of P. T. Barnum, look down upon an effort to put over this ancient piece of exploded political chicanery, then hide your diminished head in shame.

President Hoover has vetoed the misnamed bonus bill. Not for one moment did anyone doubt that he would do so. By the time these lines are in print it will be known whether or not his veto and the strident tones of "His Master's Voice" have sufficed to stem the stampede on Capitol Hill. Washington is inclined to think that they have not. "Once started, they run till they drop dead," they used to say.

And then, once again, the cat came back. Some old Muscle Shoals. One may or may not be in favor of government ownership and operation of public utilities, but over-zealotry is altogether too apt to result in overshooting the mark. The ferrer Senator Norris has injected into his bill can be inferred from his statutory specifications for persons appointed to manage Muscle Shoals. "All members of the board," reads the resolution, "shall be persons that profess a belief in the feasibility and wisdom" etc., so "that by reason thereof the corporation may be a self-sustaining and continuous success."

"Any manager of Muscle Shoals who subscribes to that specification," said Representative Fort, "must be either a Socialist or a liar." It is easy to visualize the Senate debating for days whether an appointee submitted for confirmation is sufficiently firm in the faith.

Representative Eaton evidently believes that the antidote of fanaticism is humor. In describing the stipulation that one per cent of the fertilizer shall be given free to farmers to acquaint them with the product, he said: "You might as well ship free coffins to undertakers at Government expense to let them know there is such a thing as death." And Representative O'Connor, of Oklahoma, observed with humor partly subtle and partly broad that "at the other (Senate) end of this building where sits 'the greatest deliberative body in that end of the Capitol' there is a restaurantthey lost $76,000 last year. If the Government cannot run a restaurant or a barber shop, how are they going to operate Muscle Shoals?"

Some time ago the editor of a small-town weekly criticized a correspondent's letter for the reason that he did not want his readers to get the impression that Washington was "a 3-ring circus." His solicitude for the preservation of ancient traditions, of course, is to be commended; his faith in and loyalty to a fallen idol doubtless is to be admired. But "pigs is pigs" and facts are facts and today no super-patriot is worrying for fear political Washington will be confused with a 3-ring circus. What the fears is that it will be disparagingly compared with a lunatic asylum.

Petersburg Winner Of Class "B" Title In District Tourney

COUNTY TEAM LOSES TO COV. INGTON IN CLASH FOR BOTH DIVISIONS CHAMPIONSHIP

Petersburg with a fast finishing and hard fighting team were the winners in the Class "B" basket ball championships at Walton last week. In a valiant effort to clinch both the class "A" and "B" titles they fell before the heavier and more experienced team from Holmes High School, Covington. Through their win in the class "B" race Petersburg won the right to show their powers, at Paris, in the Regional championships.

Burlington lost out to Petersburg in the semi-finals of Class "B" by the close score of 13 to 2. Both teams won praise from spectators for their efforts and the gallery witnessed one of the best games of the twenty-first district tournament. In the finals of the tournament Petersburg took the district class "B" title by defeating Crescent Springs 23 to 15. With this victory they became class B champions of the twenty-first district.

In class "A" the Holmes High School Bulldogs scored a win from Walton in the semi-finals by a score of 21 to 19. The Covington quintet met Ludlow in the Class "A" finals and won 24 to 15

In the finals of the tournament, to decide between the winners of the class "A and B" Covington and Petersburg met. Holmes High of Covington ended the clash with a 24 to 11 victory over Ueterburg. The score of the game was but a poor indication of how hard a struggle the basket shooters from Covington had to register a win.

ed with the cup which signified that they were winners of the championship of the district. The cup for the class "B" winners was given to Petersburg.

The Walton team took the annual trophy awarded for team sportsmanship. The sportsmanship cup for girls was awarded to the Union team. The class "A" cup went to Hebron in the girls championship. The Crescent Springs girls returned to their town with the class "B" cup.

For the second straight year Anderson the star of the Covington team was awarded the prize for the best individual sportsmanship. In the girls division this prize went to Miss Harrison of Ludlow.

The judges of the tournament decided that Romanowitz, of Ludlow, was the best boy player and Miss Jackson of Hebron, the best girl.

School Notes

Burlington High School

The 21st District Tournament is over and the Tomcats and Kittens are no higher up in the basket ball world than they were this time last year. The Kittens lost their game to the fast Union girls by a large score. The little midgets slipped around like they had grease on them, making goal after goal. Union making 26 points while the Kittens made 1. The Union girls were defeated by the fast Crescent Springs girls for the B. Class Championship Saturday by a score of 41 to 29. In the A. Class division the Hebron girls won out by defeating the strong Ludlow team. Good luck Hebron, go on to the finals at Lexington. The Tomcats and Petersburg Bulldogs played one of the fastest games played in the tournament. The score swayed from one side to the other up to the last minute of the game game ended the Bulldogs were one point ahead. Petersburg 13, Tomcats 12. Saturday afternoon the Petersburg Bulldogs defeated Crescent Springs boys for the B. Class Championship. The Tomcats wish the Petersburg boys all the good luck in the world and hope they go to Paris with the same old fight they had in 21st District Tournament. Here's hoping Boone county will have a team in the state finals at Lexington held on 19th 20th and 21st of March.

Marvin Moore was absent Monday.

Due to bad weather Monday there was an open space in the school rooms of old B. H. S. Old Man Winter must have not gone home but was just around the corner and bluffed some of B. H. S. pupils from school.

The affirmative debating team met Erlanger at Lloyd Memorial Thursday night. We will debate Piner at Piner on Thursday of this week. Erlanger here on Monday 16th and Piner here on Thursday 19th.

We are glad to have Marjorie Botts, a freshmen from the Lloyd High School Erlanger, to enter our school, and hope she will soon like B. H. S. like she did Lloyd.

The Freshmen Class is finishing the "Lady of the Lake" which was enjoyed by all. The boys enjoyed it because it was full of action, while the girls were thrilled with the way in which Fritz James acted, and hope some day they will meet some "Romeo" that is as brave and fearless as he.

In the last three weeks Martha Blythe, Alvin Stephens and Bailey Greenup have been troubled very much with an unwelcome visitor, the sore eye. First it visited Martha then Alvin asked to take it home and old Bailey stopped at Alvin's home, and it liked Bailey so well that it accompanied him home. Bailey slipped and fell last Friday night and it fell off and was covered over by snow.

Burlington Will Be Host To Farm Bureau Members, March 31

DISTRICT MEETING WILL HEAR ADDRESSES BY PROMINENT STATE FARM LEADERS

A district meeting of all the county Farm Bureaus of north and north central Kentucky will be held at Burlington on Tuesday, March 21. Representatives from Boone, Kenton, Pendleton, Harrison, Owen, Gallatin and other north central Kentucky counties are expected to be present in goodly numbers. The Boone county organization will act as host to the out of county members attending.

A number of state and out of state farm leaders will be on the program. The event is an important one from the farmers standpoint. All who are interested in cooperative farm organizations are invited to attend.

The annual Boone county winter meetings will be held on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. The meetings on Wednesday will be held at J. W. Goodridge's in the morning and Jameson Aylor's in the afternoon. The meetings Thursday will be held at F. H. Sebree's in the morning and DaleHudson's at Verona in the afternoon.

Mr. W. W. Maill, field agent in Orcharding from the College of Agriculture will lead in spray, fertilizer, orchard management and commercial variety study discussions at all of the above meetings.

The March meeting of Boone Co. Utopia Club No. 2 will be held at Burlington Thursday night, March 19th. The Burlington [illegible] will be in charge of the [illegible]

Miss Edith Lacy, field agent in Home Economics from the College of Agriculture will speak on home projects for Utopia club members. Mr. Carl Jones, specialist in Older Boys and Girls Club work will be present to assist in the business program.

Enough tobacco seed to plant an acre will be furnished Boone county 4-H club members free of charge by Mr. J. V. Shipp of Midway, Ky. The seed is of the Experment Station 36-12 variety. It is not only one of the best market varieties but is highly root rot resisting. Members may secure their seed at county agent H. R. Forkner's office.

County Agent H. R. Forkner has secured a supply of Market Growers application forms for those Boone county truck growers who will sell vegetables on the 12th Street Market in Cincinnati this year. An ordinance passed December the 10, 1930, requires that all growers who will sell on the above market secure certificates by filling out the above application forms.

The county agent states that there is no charge for the application forms or his service in filling them out. The application must be signed by a notary public and the city of Cincinnati charges a dollar for issuing the certificate.

The Federal Farmers' Seed Loan has been amended to the effect that farmers can now borrow money for cows, poultry and hogs.

A total of $75.00 may be borrowed or this purpose. Fifteen dollars per cow with a $45.00 maximum, $10.00 for chickens and $20.00 for hogs represents the maximum that can be borrowed or feed for the above livestock.

The order of the Eastern Star held their regular monthly meeting last Thursday at which time plans were made for a St Patrick's Day party for members of the order and their families to be given on Tuesday, March 17th.

Friends of Mr. C. C. Hughes will be glad to know that his condition is somewhat improved.

Miss Katherine Clore was the guest of friends in Georgetown, Ky., over the week-end.

Mrs. Lorana Cropper had as her guest for the week-end her son Earl Cropper of Paducah and as guests Harold Garr, of Erlanger.

BOONE COUNTY

NOT IN DROUGHT AREA IN THE MONTHLY REPORT RED CROSS NURSE SHOWS

Because of a few destitute cases searching for material relief and the fact that the public generally have read and heard of the discussions and problems confrontoing the Red Cross because of the complications of the Drought and its subsequent disaster to the people of some sections of our country, some of my people begun urgently summoning me to make investigations and also to give aid in the way of provisions or money. It has taken considerable of my time the past month to explain to many that I am appointed by the National Red Cross to my position of Public Health Nurse, that my work is primarily to teach Health Practices and assist all of the county people in promoting health by every means possible and necessary to bring better health to our citizenry, but that I can wise give material relief. First of all it is not my work, and would play havoc with my schedule of work which consumes all of my time and strength. We are convinced that helping people to become stronger and healthier physically will to some considerable degree help them to help themselves which is our best help to any one.

Then Boone county is not truly speaking in the Drought District [illegible] the same I did much investigating when requested to do so, and made a report to the Fiscal Court, at its meeting in February as to the conclusions gained on these visits.

Our class in Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick was completed at Bellevue during the month. A little play was given presenting some of the health procedures taught in the course. Red Cross Certificates were awarded the ten girls who took the course. Now we have an interesting class at the Petersburg school.

I have carrie six people into Cincinnati for examinations and treatment during the month and have appointments for three more for early in March.

Out of 64 children given physical inspection during February I find 2 who have had some correction of defects since I last saw them, that is a high per cent, practically one-third of the whole number. This makes me quite happy, as I contemplate the advantages this will bring to these children as they take their places of responsibility on leaving school, because of better health.

EUNIE B. WILLIS,
Red Cross P. H. N.

Mrs. Herbert Kirkpatrick and children of Petersburg, were the guests Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kirkpatrick.

B. B. Fleeman, a printer in the Old Soldier's Home at Dayton, Ohio, was the guest of friends in Burlington and Petersburg this week.

Due to the heavy snow that fell the last part of the week state foreman O. R. Porter has had his crew of men clearing the highway from Florence to Williamstown. They worked a day and night shift.

Mr. Manley Ryle, representative of the W. T. Rawleigh Co., in Boone county, will move this week to rooms over the Farm Bureau.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Fowler, who have been spending the past few months with their daughter Mrs. C. H. Bridgewater,, of Akron, O., have returned home.

TOO MUCH BASKET BALL

The editor of this old sheet is ill again this week, and has been ordered to remain away from business or any kind of excitement for two weeks. Had it not been for our old friend and former co-worker, John Salt, of Erlanger, there might not have been an issue of the Recorder this week.

One Man Filibusters Sees End Of Fighting Congress

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Holmes)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder)

Washington—With gnashing of teeth, a howl and a snarl at one end of the Capitol, and relaxation, quips, jokes and music at the other, the hell-bent Seventy-first Congress both stormed and eased its way into history last week. The Senate died in the arms of a one-man filibuster: the House in the arms of the goddess Muse, with college-boy hilarity and good fellowship, sweeping aside partisan lines and singing its swan song, "The End of a Perfect Day."

It is doubtful if ever in the history of these traditional closing festivities has the Capitol witnessed such scenes of jubilation as marked the adjournment of the House. The lower chamber took on the appearance of a campus fraternity house as Speaker Longworth descended from his rostrum and pounded out on the piano "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny" and other favorites, while practically the entire membership gathered round and gave voice to some rare close harmony.

In striking contrast were the tame and dreary closing scenes in the Senate, but beneath the surface of its prosaic finish were manoeuvers and implications of political significance not appreciated in the crowded galleries where came the interested and the curious to see a dramatic show and then departed, subdued and sad, feeling that they had been cheated. On the morning of its closing day the Senate at 9 o'cloop, expecting to dispose of a number of last-minute matters before the gavel fell at noon. But Senator Elmer Thomas, of

UNKNOWN LANDS

Bertram Thomas, an English explorer, has lately accomplished a feat which no man has ever performed before. He has traversed the entire width of the Arabian dessert, a section of the earth's surface about which we have known as little as we do about the moon.

One by one the hidden spots of this old world are being revealed. Commander Byrd's explorations last year disclosed facts about the Anartic continent not previously understood. Russell Owen, the newspaper correspondent who accompanied Byrd points out that there are still a dozen great regions about which nothing is certainly known. In our time the interior of Africa has been pretty thoroughly explored, but there are still great areas in the upper Nile valley about which we know nothing. The great Australian dessert has defied explorers so far. There are at least three areas in South America, one of them half as big as the United States, which civilised men have never penetrated. In Siberia, in Tibet, on the shore of Hudson's Bay and around the North Pole are still other unknown fields for adventurous men to explore.

Sir Hubert Wilkins is starting shortly for the North Pole in a submarine which will travel under the ice. Commander George M. Dyott with a party of eighteen scientists is setting out to explore the "Green Hills of Amazonia" up the Xingu river in Brazil, with a fleet of airplanes with which to map this tropical jungle. Both expeditions will keep in touch with civilization by means of radio. Commander Dyott's party will have a complete broadcasting equipment, so that for the first time explorers in distant lands will be able actually to project their voices to the folks back home.

These explorations may have no immediate commercial value, but everything that adds to the sum of human knowledge is valuable. Such quests as these not only provide an outlet for the spirit of adventure which is our common heritage, but they furnish thrills for those of us who merely stay at home and read about and listen in on the stories of the perils and triumphs of the young discoverers.

The Family Garden

ASPARAGUS

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture)

Every garden should have a row or two of asparagus. It is easy to start and easy to care for. The reason, doubtless, why not more asparagus is grown in home gardens is that it slips the mind of the gardener at the time arrangements for including it should be made. That time is now.

Inasmuch as the life of a planting of asparagus is from 10 to 30 years, the place where it is to be put should be chosen carefully. To begin with, there should be no interference with plowing. Located at the edge of the garden, this is taken care of. The soil should be deep, and drainage must be good, even in the winter. The nature of the soil should be such that there is a reserve of moisture. Furthermore, there must be plenty of plant food, for asparagus is a gross feeder.

The best way to start an asparagus bed is to turn under a heavy coat of manure, and to break deep. Six inches of manure is not too much, and 14 inches is not too deep.

The next step is to stretch a line to mark the row, and to dig a trench 12 inches wide and from 8 to 10 inches deep. In the bottom sprinkle a high-grade fertilizer (3-8-6) at the rate of 1 pound to 10 feet, and work meal and half wood ashes may be used instead, but at the rate of one pound to 6 feet. On the bottom of the trench the crowns are set, with the roots carefully spread out.

A word as to the plants: There is no advantage in using two-year-old crowns; good one-year-old crowns are better, in fact. It is of advantage to buy half again as many as are needed, and to discard the smaller ones. The rows, if there are more than one, should be 36 inches apart, and the plants 24 inches in the row. For a family of five, 100 plants provide enough asparagus for two servings a week, and some for canning.

The only variety to use is Washington, which is not attacked by the rust disease.

The crowns should be barely covered, but the rest of the soil drawn into the trench in cultivating. Weeds should be kept in check: beyond that no care is needed the first year.

In the spring following the soil over the row should be stirred to a depth of at least 4 inches, and after that stirred to keep the weeds from starting. No cutting should be done this year.

In the second spring after setting the early stirring should be given, and cutting may begin, but it should not be continued for more than three weeks. At the close of cutting, the surface should be worked as deeply as possible, not to injure the crowns, and a heavy coat of manure applied.

This is the annual program from now on, except that cutting may last for a month to six weeks. Manuring should be done, always at the end of the cutting season.

This is the way to produce green asparagus. I should mention 'white' asparagus, but merely in passing, for the 'green' is so much better quality, and so much easier for a home gardener to raise, for there is no cumbersome ridge to make and to maintain. Besides, the returns are so much larger, from 'green' asparagus.

The Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

SCRUBWOMEN

One hot day, when the business depression was worst, I visited two of the largest corporations in the world.

I talked with the treasurer of one and with the chairman of the finance committee of the other—and these are men, I may tell you, in whose make-up sentimentaly plays very little part.

They had been looking at red figures until their eye-balls burned. They were entirely unwilling to predict when their industries would improve.

But each of them uttered the same fervent exclamation: "If only we can pull through without having to cut wages!"

When you stop to think about it, that is an astonishing phenomenon. Twenty-five years ago men in similar positions would have said immediately: "Business is off ten per cent; slash wages twenty per cent."

The same sort of executives who used to assume that the way to cure depression was by cutting wages, are now convinced that the way to cure it is not to cut.

That is one principal fact which makes the current depression different from its predecessors. That is progress!

History has a curious way of upsetting contemporary judgments. Many of the events which seem important to men and women while they are living, prove insignificant in the eyes of the ages. And some very little things later loom large.

Who was king of Spain in 1666? I do not remember. But I do recall that in 1666 an apple fell and hit Isaac Newton.

What was Warren Harding? Who were Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover? Some future school boy may be puzzled by those inquiries.

But unless I am very much mistaken every future history book will lay emphasis on two developments which have taken place under our very eyes.

They will tell that a boy named Lindbergh flew across the Atlantic Ocean.

And that a man named Ford announced that he would pay all workers, even scrubwomen, a minimum of five dollars a day.

The idea that high wages makes prosperity, that the key to good business lies not in the safe deposit boxes of millionaires, but carried in the pocket of every worker—this is something entirely new.

It holds the hope of the future. Whatever else may have to be discarded, American business must not surrender that American idea!

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

LAW VIOLATORS

The fellow that takes a gun and goes out among the people to collect a living, is a criminal, duly accredited as such, with many tomes of expensive statutory laws, built for his especial treatment. Multiplied millions are expended each year for his "care," all paid by burdened, harassed, struggling mass of unrequited people who are all Americans.

Sometimes I think—and that's the substance of this letter—that the most FOOLISH violator of infallible law, is the man or woman who goes out and commits crime against SELF. So many thousands, regardless of their position in church or state, rush pell-mell into crime against their bottles, to reap penalties more certain than any human court can assess! And the doctor is called in to help smooth matters over for the "villain." Which would appear humorous were it not such a serious matter.

They go about the business, armed with everything from corn whisky to mince pie, to commit crimes that always draw a verdict of guilty with punishment following immediately. In my night-visits about town, I see young men and even girls—lined up at "hot-dog" counters, stuffing themselves at all hours with combinations that put the real crackman's "jimmy" to shame—yet no statuory law is here to prevent the youngsters from having a "good time," provided they are not too hilarious.....committing CRIME against their wonder-young bodies!

And sexual crimes—affronts to nature that are never unpunished. What a race we might be—what splendid men and women would be, were all obedient to NATURAL laws! The roue, the common-law wife, the courtesan, the boy and girl "friend." Foolish criminals, committers of crime rarely if ever uncovered by state law. Servers of sentences that are just, that are assessed by the designer and Creator of man.

Remember, the reward for obedience to NATURAL LAW, is LONG AND HAPPY LIFE, because health. Sin against self is sin against GOD.

DEAN COOPER URGES FARMERS TO PRODUCE MORE FOR HOME USE

A plea for greater production of farm products for home use is made in a statement issued by Dean Thos. P. Cooper of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

"Living from the farm enables the farmer to tide over bad years and hard times that would otherwise be ruinous," he says.

"A careful study of the outlook for this year indicates that staple crops do not offer opportunity for expansion, except at the risk of overproduction. There is one phase of farm operations, however, which may be expanded this year without risk and that is the production of supplies for the family living.

"Garden vegetables, milk and other dairy products, eggs and poultry, meats, honey and syrup should be expanded so that production will fully meet the family needs and provide quantities for preservation and storage during the non-productive time.

"Irrespective of what prices may be, few farmers can attain their greatest success without getting the larger part of the family food supply from the farm. This represents one of the most profitable enterprises. Surveys made of a large number of farms indicate that the value, at wholesale prices, of family living obtained from the farm approximates $300 a year. At retail prices, this figure would be doubled.

"A recent outlook report stated that providing an adequate supply of all farm products for home use is a cornerstone upon which successful farming in 1931 will be built. With practice of economy in all matters involving cash outlays, and the 'live at home' program, which means the production of sufficient supplies on the farm for home use, there is excellent opportunity to make farming more profitable in 1931."

Sunday School Lesson

THE USE AND ABUSE OF GOD'S GIFTS

Luke 12:16-21, 41-48

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Though the lesson text does not deal directly with the subject, the quarterly temperance lesson must be penned with special earnestness. Therein we have one of the livest topics of the day. Test this out by reading the daily paper for a week seeking down the date news on this subject.

In parable form Jesus tells the people in Perea about the man who thought only of his personal gratifications and desired to do as he pleased regardless of any influence on others. In story form a rich gormand was portrayed. This man was headed for the gout, judging by his objectives in life. He had productive fields which yielded far more than enough for his needs.

When the climax was reached all were startled by the question which Jesus asked. What will you do with mere things when thy soul is required of thee this night? That inquiry brings each one face to face with the Judgment Seat of God.

Peter brought forth the next story and we have the parable of the steward who was unfaithful to his trust while he thought the owner was far away. Thinking power was taken away by the indulgence in strong drink. When in that condition the supposedly trustworthy man harmed his fellow servants and also himself. Society can never be safe when right-mindedness is taken away by any habit forming drug. The corrective is made very clear in the Golden Text: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot, but be filled with the spirit," Ephesians 5:18. The Government will be increasingly effective in stopping commercial violations of the law. The Sunday School must meet the non-commercial violations thru education.

The commonest of all place-names in England is Newton, which occurs no fewer than 72 times in various parts of the country.

One Kind of Efficiency

An efficiency expert strikes us as the kind of fellow who, before trying to put a large lump of coal in the furnace, would carefully measure it to see whether it would go through the door.—Louisville Times.

Cullinan Diamond Supreme

The largest and in most respects the most remarkable diamond ever found is the Cullinan diamond. It weighed 3,024¾ carats, or 1.37 pounds, and measured 4 inches by 2.5 inches by 1.25 inches.

Old Spanish Dance

There seems to be some confusion in regard to the English equivalent of the Spanish Zapateada. Professor Shields says that "jig" comes nearest to expressing it, as it is a solo dance. A "clog dance" also approximates the Zapateada when particularly animated.

Phoenicians Had Above "Seeking" the Quibble

Putting art works on an to make a selling article appear rare and valuable is an old, old trade, and was practiced by Phoenician traders to fool their Etruscan customers in Italy, more than 2,500 years ago.

A vase, which is now recognized as one of these ancient art forgeries, was dug up recently in Italy, and for a time it has perplexed archaeologists at the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania. But the mystery now is solved.

The vase bears symbols which are apparently Egyptian hieroglyphics. But Egyptologists pronounced the markings meaningless. It appears that the Egyptians were famous as glass makers and workers in ceramics at the time this vase was made, about 700 B. C., and Egyptian ware was in demand among connoisseurs of Italy. Some Phoenician traders who sold such articles overseas, made cheaper vessels and covered them with designs and hieroglyphics to look like Egyptian, and so cheated the Etruscans.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Balm of Gilead Prized for Healing Qualities

It is very evident that balm from trees or plants was quite commonly applied as a salve in Old testament times, and that the Balm of Gilead derived from a tree known as the Tzeri, in the beautifully wooded and fertile land of Gilead, by far the most highly favored part of Palestine, then as now, was esteemed an exceedingly valuable, perhaps and most valuable of all balms.

At the time of the Crusades, the Sultan Saladin and his physicians were credited with the possession of salves—"balms" or "balsams"—of almost miraculous healing potency for wounds. No doubt the knowledge of the value of the Balm of Gilead had been well preserved through many generations by the Arabs, and was still made use of by the Moslems, who had much to do with the spread of information which led up to the present position of medical science.

Increasing Caution

"You are compelled to devote a great deal of study to certain questions?"

"A great deal," agreed Senator Sorghum.

"You must consider popular sentiment as well as the principle involved?"

"Of course."

"And is that why you are so slow in making up your mind?"

"Partly why. But the main reason for deliberation is that the longer you study any subject in which your public is informing itself, the more cautious you become about going on record with a vote."—Washington Star.

Reminiscing

The two w re talking over old times. Said one: "You remember my saying one time that if I ever got married it would be good-night to my hunting or keeping a dog, don't you? Well, I was right and I knew I was right when I said it. So when you come around wanting me to go hunting just keep in mind that we're on a business trip, and if we take a dog remember that the dog travels in your car. The missis has got a nose that tells her at once if I've had a dog in our car and she can spot a dog's hair a mile away. If I use a little diplomacy I can get away with a good time once in a while."—Brockton Enterprise.

The Caves at Han

One of the most beautiful spectacles in Belgium is the famous grotto of Han. The nearest rail point is Rochefort. After making the ascent from the village of Han-sur-Lesse by tram to the Faule rocks one enters the grotto and fresh wonders, wonders which have been fashioned at the caprices of centuries of time, appear before the eyes at every step. The exit is by canoe and the sudden reappearance of daylight, framed in verdure, which so strikingly cuts across the absolute obscurity when one emerges, leaves upon the mind an indefinable impression of coming to the last page of Arabian Nights.

Divisions of Poetry

The three principal classes of poetry are epic, dramatic and lyric. An epic poem is a long narrative poem dealing with events in the life of the hero or heroine. For example, "Evangeline" and "The Eneid" are epics. A lyric is a brief poem which expresses the sentiment of the poet. As Dr. William A. Wilbur expressed it, "An epic is always the story of some one other than the poet." This is contrary to the lyric. The word "drama" means the deed. A dramatic poem is one the emphasis in which is upon action.

Anthracite and Bituminous.

The word "anthracite" is derived directly from the Greek "anthrax," meaning coal. It is a noun and is applied to hard coal, namely, coal composed of nearly pure carbon. Accordingly we should say simply "anthracite," not "anthracite coal"; the latter is tautological and equivalent to "coal-like coal." "Bituminous," on the other hand, is an adjective and should be followed by the word "coal." Bituminous coal is soft coal, namely, coal that yields considerable volatile bituminous matter when heated.

Authorities Differ on Soldier's Mercy Appeal

Several theories have been advanced to account for the military phrase to "give quarter," meaning to spare the life of an enemy in one's power. A French writer named Le Brieux asserted in 1872 that the phrase to "give quarter" arose from an agreement between the Dutch and Spanish whereby the ransom of a soldier was to be a quarter of his wages. Thus, according to this theory, where a captured soldier begged for quarter he offered his captor a quarter of his pay to spare his life; if the captor turned down the offer he refused to grant quarter. This theory, as the Oxford dictionary points out, is at variance with both the spirit and sense of the phrases to give and receive quarter. Since "quarter" is applied to a place, and the tents or barracks where soldiers are lodged are called their quarters, it is more probable that "give quarter" originally referred to the sending of captured troops to an assigned quarter or place in the camp or fort to be held until liberated, ransomed or condemned to slavery. Therefore, if this theory is correct, giving a soldier quarter at first meant sending him to the quarters of the captors, while to refuse him quarter meant to dispatch him without mercy. Another theory deserves mention. One of the meanings of "quarter" is friendship, amity, or peace. It has been suggested that to beg quarter originally employed the term in this sense and meant to ask for peace.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Single Copies Scorned by This Book Borrower

As a general rule, book publishers in this country depend mainly on lending libraries for their sales. In Denmark publishers are taking more drastic steps. One firm there is trying to prevent libraries from lending its books unless they pay double the ordinary price for them. Here, as conditions are at the moment, the libraries are the publisher's best friends. There are very few people who want to buy books, and large numbers who want to borrow them. The greatest book-borrower in history, however, lived at a time when people who wanted books had usually to buy them. He was the duke of Somerset, who was lord protector in the reign of Edward VI. He borrowed the whole of the books in the London Guildhall library, loading them onto carts and taking them away to read at his leisure. And he never returned a single one. Three years ago a manuscript belonging to this collection was found. It is the only survivor.—London Mail.

When Eggs Were Cheap

The fresh egg, that succulent article which frequently graces the breakfast table, is not usually associated with bridge building, says an article in the Edinburgh Journal. Nevertheless the upper North Water bridge which spans the river North Esk near Montrose, contains this strange ingredient in its fabric. The bridge was constructed about 1780, and at that period eggs were costing about one penny per dozen of 14, but were not then regarded as of any special food value. Hundreds of dozens were brought from the village of Fettercairn and the surrounding district to the scene of the work and mixed into the mortar, thereby increasing its tenacity and assuring durable workmanship when the bridge was completed.

"Centers of Population"

By center of population, as used by statisticians, is meant the point about which the total population of a district or country is conceived to balance. In other words it is the center of gravity of population, assuming that the district is a plane and that each unit of population has the same weight. Suppose all the people of the United States are conceived as resting on a weightless plane having the size and shape of the United States. The center of population would be the point where the plane would balance on a single suport.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Asset

An interviewer asked J. P. Morgan if he found the delights of living on his country estate compensated him for the time and trouble occasioned in going to and from his New York office.

"Indeed they do," replied Mr. Morgan heartily. "Country life pays big dividends in rest and health. Yet, to me, these are not the greatest assets. I find that the best part of country life lies in the people you don't meet."

Ashes in High Grave

At Kirkstone, Pass, England, Mark Atkinson, landlord of the Kirkstone inn, gave instructions on his deathbed that his body should be cremated and buried in the highest grave in England, on top of a mountain 2,500 feet above sea level, and that his favorite mountain pony, Billie, should do no more work after carrying the ashes to the grave.

She Was All Right

Two business men met on the street and exchanged the usual commonplaces.

"Well, how is everything over at your house?" inquired the first affably.

The other stared innocently at his friend. "Oh, she's all right," he said, as he walked down the street.

Last "Trial by Battle" Under Old English Law

The case that resulted in the discontinuance of "trials by battle" in England was the murder of Mary Ashford by Abraham Thornton, May 27, 1817. The defendant using the statute of Gloucester, pleaded not guilty and was acquitted. English law permitted the next friend of the deceased to bring a second suit within a year and a day, and this was done by the brother of the girl, who was most brutally murdered. The defendant at this second trial again pleaded not guilty and threw down his glove demanding trial by combat, which the judge (Chief Justice Ellenborough) decided was according to English law in the following statement: "The general law of the land is in favor of the wager of battle and it is our duty to pronounce the law as it is and not as we may wish it to be. Whatever prejudices therefore may justly exist against the mode of trial, still as it is the law of the land the court must pronounce judgment for it." The brother of the girl, William Ashford, was weak and frail and, following the procedure of the law, was permitted to cry craven and recede from the trial. This resulted in practically an acquittal for Thornton, who disappeared and is said to have gone to America. This trial resulted in an act of parliament passed June 23, 1819, which received the royal assent abolishing trials by "battle."

Quaint Rental Payment for English Freeholds

The ancient ceremony of rendering quit-rent services by the city of London took place before the king's remembrancer, Sir G. A. Bonner, at the Law Courts building recently. One of the services is in respect of a piece of land—the location of which cannot today be identified — called "The Moors," near Bridgnorth, Shropshire. The other is by "the tenants and occupiers of a tenement called 'The Forge,' on a piece of land once used by the Knights Templar for their tournaments and now covered by the Law Courts building. The ceremony dates back more than 700 years, when rents were paid in kind instead of in cash. The city solicitor rendered service in respect of "The Moors" by cutting two small bundles of faggots with a hatchet and a bill-hook. Thereafter, he counted out, one by one, six horse shoes and 61 nails in respect of "The Forge."

That Other "Clod"

Two fellows were playing a ding-dong golf match, into the exciting spirit of which even the caddies had entered.

Going to the last hole all square, one man sliced badly while the other had an equally wild pull. The first man found himself in a jungle. His first niblick shot raised a huge divot and moved the ball about six feet. He took turf with his second effort also, but got the ball well away.

"By the way," he said, as he replaced the second divot, "what happened to the other clod?"

"Oh," said the caddie, with satisfaction, "he's playing six out of a bunker."

Nature

How insipid a thing is the countryside, and what poor company for militant thinking! That calm, that silence, that immobility, those great trees with their leaves wilting in the heat, curling back like webbed feet . . . It is all a delight for women and children and lawyers' clerks. But does not the thinking man feel ill at ease before the enemy, as before the work of God which will in time consume him, making manure and pasture of his philosopher's brain? In the stone of cities you escape these ideas.—Goncourt's Journal, May, 1857.

Running the Gauntlet

The word "Gauntlet" came into use at the time of the Thirty Years' war (1618-1648), as "Gauntlope," meaning the passage between two lines of soldiers. It is derived from the Swedish "gata" way, and "lopp" meaning course. "Running the gauntlet" was a punishment common among soldiers and sailors. The delinquent had to run between two lines of men provided with rope ends, each of whom hurt him as much as possible. The phrase now means to be attacked on all sides, or to be severely criticized.

Good Use of Criminals

In the reign of Henry VIII a thriving trade was carried on in killing men, whose bodies were sold to surgeons for dissection. The human body became a part of medical education in 420 B. C., under Hipprocrates. In 300 B. C. criminals condemned to death were turned over to the medical fraternity for dissection and experiments, the only requirement being that the surgeon at the end of his experiments should put the criminal to death.—Detroit News.

Stoned by Monkeys

According to a report from Paris, a Frenchman was killed in Algeria by a stone thrown by a monkey. Large monkeys in northern Africa, it is said, are sometimes extremely dangerous. They travel in large bands, and often different bands engage in battles, using stones as missiles. The Frenchman in question was killed when a band of monkeys bombarded the taxi in which he was riding.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Delusions, no less than convictions, are often a part of injection.—Anon.

Vitamins in Dried Fruit

Experiments show that dried peaches retain 86 to 100 per cent of the vitamin A content of fresh fruit, while dried prunes retain 24 to 81 per cent.

Hebrew Money

The monetary system of the Hebrews was based upon the Babylonian system of weights. The ratio of the value of gold to silver was 1:13 1-3 and prevailed over all western Asia.

Self-Imposed

What actually does the word "ignorance" denote? The refusal to learn by reflected intelligence. The word comes from a Greek root meaning to ignore.

Unpleasant Abode

Falcon Island, in the South Pacific, is the most restive and changeable piece of land in the world. It has the habit of disappearing below the waves and then suddenly bobbing up again.

Worked With Enamel

Cloisonne is the name applied to a method by which enamel is laid out in a pattern with strips of flat wire. The spaces are filled in with enamel paste, which is then fused into place.

Concerned in Crucifixion

The dispersion of the tribes of Israel occurred centuries before the time of Christ, so at that time there were only the united tribes of Judah and Benjamin living in Palestine.—Exchange.

Mrs. Walter Gaines entertained the "Circle Girls" royally at her home on Woolper Heights last Friday evening. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Davis Gaines.

The W. M. S. of the Christian church met last Wednesday with Mrs. Fannie Gaines. A splendid program and a fine fellowship hour were enjoyed by all, as well as the delicious luncheon. The April meeting will be at the church on Wednesday April 1st at 2 p. m.; as these ladies are observing the week of prayer.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Jarrell spent the week-end with Mrs. Jarrell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Rector near East Bend.

Miss Corda Early spent several days last week with Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Norris in Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Mr. and Mrs E. P. Berkshire's dinner guests Saturday evening were Mrs. Herma Mathews, Mrs. Cora P. Stott and Miss Elizabeth Walton.

Chas. and Dorothy Walton and Joe and Gertrude Randall were among the guests at Miss Eva May Grant's birthday dinner Sunday.

Mrs. Otto Deck and children were week-end guests of relatives here.

Mrs. LeRoy Cox and son spent last Tuesday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Burns near Hebron.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Black spent Saturday evening with Mr. and Mrs W. T. Berkshire.

Word has been received here that a resident of Boone county has been honored at the College of Law, University of Cincinnati, by membership in the local Hamilton Inn chapter of Phi Delta Phi, international professional legal fraternity.

He is Joseph C. Bullock, of Hebron. Bullock was graduated from Wittenberg College, Springfield, O., in 1928 with a bachelor of arts degree. He is now a first-year student in the Cincinnati law college.

"Phi Delta Phi, founded at the University of Michigan in 1869, is a professional fraternity devoted to mutual helpfulness among its members and to the promotion of thorough legal scholarship," Professor Merton L. Ferson, law college dean, said in announcing Bullock's initiation.

"Men are admitted only on the unanimous vote of the members already in the chapter and are selected on the basis of scholastic ability and such personal qualities as make for success in the legal profession."

This Hebron man is attending the law college from which have been graduated a president and vice-president of the United States, a chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, three speakers of the federal House of Representatives, and other notables. It is the third oldest law school in the country, founded in Delta Phi was established there in 1833.

ONE MAN

Oklahoma, who had obtained the floor late the night before, held it then for about two hours and was entitled to it again, continued talking until Vice-President Curtis announced adjournment sine die.

The filibuster was caused by the fact that Senator Thomas failed to get action on the Nye resolution providing for a special committee of five Senators to investigate conditions in the oil industry. With the galleries thronged and Senators impatient to get their favorite bills disposed of, Senator Thomas talked on and on and read aloud. As a result of this filibuster, the Vestal copyright bill, the Jenkins immigration restriction bill and the maternity bill all failed of passage, various nominations failed of confirmation and minor measures were blocked.

There are many who believe with Senator Thomas that in connection with present conditions in the oil industry "Something is rotten in the state of Denmark." But the Oklahoma Senator did not claim to be spokesman for any clique, bloc or group. Alone he "held the fort." With a slight strain of fancy, he might have repeated the Gilbertian refrain: "Oh, I am the Cook and the Captain Bold and the Mate of the Nancy Brig; and the Bo'sn Tight, and the Midshipmite, and the Crew of the Captain's Gig."

For the second time and by another President the Norris proposal to put the government into the power business on the Tennessee was returned to Congress without executive approval. President Hoover submitted a number of sound reasons for his veto of the Muscle Shoals bill, but the first of them ought to be enough to cause even the most ardent proponents of government ownership to "stop, look and listen." The proposal is disapproved because it will not work. Entirely ignoring the $70,000,000 or more already spent upon the now antiquated nitrate plants, deducting the sums properly chargeable to the navigation and flood control features of the project, and considering only the capital invested in the existing power facilities and those new ones which must be constructed under the Norris bill, the President finds that the government's power business would start off, even with efficient management and an exceptionally favorable marketing basis, piling up losses at the rate of $2,000,000 a year.

It is said that one historical distinction belongs to the Congress which just the other day, full of fire at one end and ashes at the other, wound up its career with a cross between stimulation and strangulation. It holds unchallenged the record as the heaviest spending peacetime Congress. In all it has appropriated about ten billions of dollars for Government uses. Beside the nine regular annual supply bills, vast sums have been provided at this short session for emergency construction to increase employment and for drought and farm relief. In addition, the permanent appropriations, made automatically, exceed $1,200,000,000 to pay off the nations debt, interest on outstanding obligations and provide funds for the veterans' service certificates sinking fund.

President Hoover, accompanied by members of his cabinet, visited the Capitol soon after 11 o'clock on the day of adjournment. He went to the President's room at the Senate end of the Capitol and signed bills up to the time Congress adjourned. Owing to the Thomas filibuster, the Senate did not name a committee to wait on the President and advise him that it had completed its work. However, the House followed precident and named the committee.

Congress having succeeded in passing all of the appropriation bills, no extra session will be necessary, and the expectation of leaders is that President Hoover will call none. Congress is not expected to convene in Washington again for nine months, or until the first Monday in December. Nor is expected a special session of the Senate to consider executive matters.

The death of Louis XIV of France was announced by the captain of his bodyguard from a window of the state apartment. Raising his truncheon above his head, the guard broke it in the center, and throwing the pieces among the crowd exclaimed in a loud voice, "Le Roi est mort!" Then seizing another staff, he flourished it in the air as he shouted, "Vive le Roi!"

And echoes a wearied but still hopeful U. S. citizenry: "The king is dead! Long live the king!"

Female Uniformity

After much measuring and many calculations a European scientist has announced that while women may vary greatly in their individual heights there is a surprising uniformity in the distance between their elbows and the ground.

BOTH OF SERIES

The picture last week was that of Miss Helen Stephenson, now Mrs. Clayton Brown. Now for this one.

UNION

Mrs. James A. Huey is home from a pleasant visit in Hyde Park with her sister Mrs. Lula Crouch Quizzenberry.

Mr. and Mrs Everett Judge and children will move in a short time to the Clay Booth farm which he purchased recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Rouse, of Erlanger, were Sunday afternoon guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Dunn.

County Attorney Ben H. Riley came in Friday from Cincinnati where he has been a patient in Dr. Charles Jones' private hospital for a tonsil operation

Rev. Walter V. Hopkins and Mrs. Hopkins, of Park Hills, drove out Monday afternoon for a brief visit with Mrs. W. M. Rachal.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ferguson opened their attractive home "Elm Tree Place" Monday evening to a delightful gathering of about twenty young friends.

The old stone house just north of town, so many years in the Smith family, has been bought by J. Henry Koening, of Cincinnati, from its present owner Mrs. Richard Smith. The Koening's will occupy this lovely old residence as soon as the extensive remodeing on it is finished.

Our plucky little basket ball team met defeat at the hands of the fast Crescent Springs five Saturday afternoon at the Tournament to the great disappointment of the devoted fans who had braved the weather and hied themselves to Walton to cheer them on to a hoped for victory.

Mr. and Mrs. Leslie R. Barlow were in Hebron Thursday afternoon to attend the funeral of their kinswoman Mrs. Mary Surface Graves.

Mrs. Katherine Hicks-Rachal and friends Mr. and Mrs. Ray Falkner, of Cincinnati, spent the week-end in Owenton with Mr and Mrs. George Vallandingham.

Mrs. James Smith Head came in Saturday from a visit with Mr. and Mrs. and Mrs. Dan Barrett, who are quite attractively located at their country place near Mariemont on the Wooster pike.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Presbyterian church met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. W. H. Smith.

Mrs. Kirtley Adams came out from Covington Sunday for a day with her mother Mrs. N. S. Bristow.

Mrs. Joseph A. Huey was called to Crittenden last week by the serious illness of her sister Mrs. Joe Collins.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Robert Huey were dinner guests Sunday night of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hicks.

Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Cleek have been ill and confined to the house for several months to the regret of their many friends who miss them in the community life.

The Florence X-Ll-All Club met at the Florence school house March 5th for a business meeting, and the following officers were elected: Joe Dringenburg, President Neville Hoffman, Vice-President; Marion Sullivan, Secretary.

27 members were present. Mr. Forkner gave a short talk after which a motion to adjourn was made.

Falsehood

There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be discovered in a lie; for as Montaigne saith: "A liar would be brave towards God, while he is a coward towards man; for a lie faces God and shrinks from man."—Bacon.

Freaks of Lightning

Pictures imprinted on the skin are a common freak doing of lightning. Natural objects, trees, ships and patterns of ferns have often been found on man's, woman's or child's body after it has been struck.

Both Ways

Certainly many men owe their success to their wives, and quite a number owe their wives to their success.—London Tit-Bits.

World's Great Debt to Copper and Electricity

The Diamond Jubilee of science as though reunions of their interdependence upon one another, marched on the world hand in hand. For instance, Capt. Jonathan Carver caught sight of the famous "Ontanagan boulder," a nugget of pure copper weighing six tons, in 1766; Alexander Henry, a visionary Englishman, tried in vain to remove it and to mine in Ontanagon county during the three years from 1771 to 1774. Russel Gore writes in the Detroit News. In 1786 Luigi Galvani—whose name is emblazed in the amber of our language in the word "galvanic"—discovered that electricity applied to the dismembered legs of frogs convulsed them with the appearance of life. In fact, he thought he had discovered the life force—the elan vital of the French—the energy that animates alike the unicellular activities of the amoeba or the complicated mental processes of a Dante or a Voltaire.

Alexander Volta, professor of physics at the University of Pavia, wrote the magic word, "volt" into the language of electricity, by carrying the Galvani experiments to the climax known to electrical historians as the Voltaic Pile. In the year in which Doctor Houghton was born, 1806, the great English scientist, Sir Humphry Davy, foreshadowed the age of electric light when he exhibited a voltaic arc based on the discovery of Professor Volta.

Early Samplers Called for Expert Needlecraft

At first "samplers" were long, narrow bands, on which had been worked out patterns for delicate lace, cut and drawn work, and stitches both simple and intricate. It is recorded that the famous Italian "punta tagliato" was introduced into France by Catherine de Medici, and this gives us a new sidelight on the activities of that historic courtlady. Also, Mary Stuart, while an exile at the French court, learned to do the "punta tagliato" and brought samples with her to England. Many royal women of early days were skilled in needlecraft as well as in court intrigue.

Thus we learn that the original sampler was a pattern sheet having the latest and most popular designs for milady's workbasket. But in the Seventeenth century there came a change. Orderly rows of stitches and designs; then letters, name of workers and dates of birth, and often sentiments or lines of verses were added, all this giving evidence of originality, skill and patience, which, made the sampler a thing of beauty highly prized by its maker, who could be rightly proud in adding her name and date of birth. The body of the sampler was linen or canvas, and when the former was used the work was more delicate and intricate.

"Rome of the North"

The country which today seems to stand at the crossroads of Europe is Czechoslovakia. To many this name is a "terra incognito," but when the eye picks out Prague, Carlsbad, Marienbad, Franzenbad and Pilzen, it is immediately recognized as an old haunt of tourists. Prague was a favorite city with Goethe, Chateaubriand, George Sand, Prevost and Brandes, who praised it as "the Rome of the North." Here is the famous Hradcany, ancient seat of the kings of Bohemia and now the residence of the President. Here also is the majestic Gothic cathedral of St. Vitus and the beautiful Charles bridge over the Vintava. The most striking natural beauty of the land is the resorts in the Tatin mountains.

Surely Champion Optimist

You simply couldn't depress Smythe. He'd come home from a rotten game of golf or a barren day's fishing full of beans. He'd back the whole program without getting one placed horse and exude good humor. When business got so bad that he had to move into a smaller and cheaper place, much to his wife's disgust, he tried to console her with the fact that she hadn't such a big house to look after.

The first wet night she met him at the door with the news that the roof leaked and water was dripping into the dining room.

"That's all right, dear," he said; "put your aspidistras under the drip, and it will save you watering them."

Football and Chemistry

Football was indirectly responsible for making Sir William Ramsay one of the world's greatest chemists. When as a youth his leg was broken in a gridiron scrimmage, he read Graham's Chemistry through, partly to relieve the tedium of convalescence but, more particularly to find out how to make fireworks. On his recovery he became a passionate chemical experimenter. For the next four years his bedroom was full of bottles and test-tubes and often of strange odors and startling noises.—Gas Logic.

English Weather

During the World war, at a party given by members of a London church to some Australian soldiers, one of the hosts offered a prize for the briefest and best description of the English weather. Immediately one of the men jumped up and gave the following reply to the challenge:

"Weather you have none; samples many, none up to standard."

P. S.—He won.

Picked Out Wrong Time to See Model Children

People wondered at her frailty, but enjoyed them, and droll stories are still told of the adventures of those days. Mr. Emerson and Margaret Fuller were visiting my parents one afternoon, and the conversation having turned to the ever-interesting subject of education, Miss Fuller said:

"Well, Mr. Alcott, you have been able to carry out your methods in your own family, and I should like to see your model children."

She did in a few moments, for as the guests stood on the doorsteps a wild uproar approached, and round the corner of the house came a wheelbarrow holding Baby May arrayed as a queen; I was the horse, bitted and bridled, and driven by my elder sister Anna; while Lizzie played dog, and barked as loud as her gentle voice permitted.

All were shouting and wild with fun, which, however, came to a sudden end as we espied the stately group before us; for my foot tripped, and down we all went in a laughing heap; while my mother put a climax to the joke by saying, with dramatic wave of the hand:

"Here are the model children, Miss Fuller."—From "Louisa May Alcott. Her Life and Letters," by Edna D. Cheney.

Popularity of Cuckoo Clocks Well Deserved

Cuckoo clocks originated in Germany, in the Black Forest district. The first one was made by Franz Anton Ketterer, in Schosenwald, in 1730. Copies soon became popular, the appeal made by their quaintness and novelty being reinforced by their good workmanship and excellent time-keeping qualities. The mechanism of the cuckoo clock is very ingenious. By the thrust of a wire the body of the bird is bent forward, the wings and tail are raised and the beak is opened. Simultaneously two small bellows are raised and dropped. The notes are produced by little wooden organ pipes, one tuned a fifth above the other, to which the bellows are attached. Almost every home in the Black forest possesses one of these clocks, but on this continent they are now less popular than formerly, possibly because modern homes have not the right atmosphere. Moreover, the competition of other trick clocks has become increasingly strong.

Satisfied by Figures

You would think that a mathematician who had worked out the position of a new planet would be interested in having a look at that planet, when discovered, wouldn't you? Yet Leverrier, the Frenchman, who did the figuring that located Neptune in 1846, was once in the observatory with Flammarion, the astronomer, who at that moment had Neptune showing in the telescope, and asked Leverrier if he would like to see it. He replied:

"No, I have never seen it."

He had discovered Neptune's position by mathematics and there his interest in it ended. The joy of a mathematician is the discovery of a theoretic truth, or the confirmation of a calculation by experiment.—Kansas City Star.

Ancient Weather Vanes

Its use on famous old structures in England shows that the weather-vane must have been invented at a very early date. On towers, castles and secular buildings its usual form was that of a banner, but on churches it usually took the form of the rooster. The large tail of the cock was well adapted to turn with the wind.

Many churches have for a vane the emblem of the saints to whom they are dedicated. St. Peter's, London, is topped by a large key, and St. Laurence's, a gridiron. St. Sepulchre's church has four pinnacles, each having a vane, leading to the saying: "Unreasonable people are as hard to reconcile as the vanes of St. Sepulchre's tower."

In Old Nuremberg

Trips on many days can be made in the beautiful old city of Nuremberg, one of the quaintest in the whole of Germany. Most Americans go first to the home of the great artist Durer. It is a Fifteenth century Gothic structure, now owned by the city as a shrine. Here you may see beneath its heavy timbered roof the furniture of his own day as well as many of his works, though mostly copies, as the originals are in the greatest museums and galleries of the world. The modern Durers are toy makers and their products are in the happy nurseries of all nations.

Land-Locked Nations

Jests about the Swiss navy might be applied to many nations, the National Geographic society says in a bulletin noting that there are 15 countries that have no sea coasts.

Europe has eight land-locked nations—Switzerland, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Andorra, San Marino, Liechtenstein and Luxembourg.

Switzerland is developing its aerial lines to the highest degree to make up for its lack of access to the sea.

Not Talking

Martha Lou was jealously watching her favorite aunt fondling her new brother and telling him how cunning he looked in his pink blanket.

Presently the four-year-old said: "You might as well put him in his basket, he won't talk to you."

LOCAL HAPPENINGS

Mrs. R. G. Sayre, Mrs. Cassell Cropper, Mrs. Herbert Snyder and Mrs. Geo. Parker attended the Style Show at the Netherlands Plaza Hotel in Cincinnati, Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Newton Sullivan, Jr., entertained friends at their home Saturday evening.

The many friends of Robt. Brady are sorry to hear of his illness, and hope for a speedy recovery.

Rev. and Mrs. L. A. Garriott and little daughter Emma Florence, were the guests of Mrs. Laura Martin, Sunday.

L. M. Jones, of Covington, is remodeing the home of Dr. Yelton he recently purchased from James D. Acra.

Mr. and Mrs. Galen Kelly entertained with a six o'clock dinner on Sunday in honor of Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Senour and daughter Geraldine, of Erlanger, Ky.

Miss Maude Berkshire, of Covington, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Snyder over the week-end.

Mrs. Kirtley Cropper recently entertained with Bridge for Mrs. C. G. Kelly, Mrs. Newton Sullivan, Jr., and Mrs. Carroll Cropper.

Mr. Earl Smith is ill at his home on the Petersburg pike.

Mrs. Albert Pettit has been called to Covington on account of the serious illness of her sister.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Renaker spent Sunday at Dry Ridge, Ky., as the guest of relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Beckham Courtney were visiting their parents in Falmouth, Ky., Saturday and Sunday, and when they attempted to return home Sunday afternoon they found that the snow had drifted so that they were not able to return home until Tuesday.

Carlos Cason, of Middle creek neighborhood, was in Burlington Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Ryle were the guests of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Mark Cook, Sunday.

HEBRON

Mrs. Nellie Garnett, who was on the sick list last week, is improving.

Mrs. Laura Conner is improving after several days illness.

Milton Aylor moved from his farm last week to Hebron.

The remains of Harvey Harper Hood were interred in the Hebron cemetery last Saturday.

The Hebron girls basket ball team not were to say "on to Paris" but were triumphant over Crescent Springs, who were winners of Class B. The score being 27-40. The Hebron and Erlanger game played on Friday night proved to be the hardest battle the girls had to fight during the tournament, the score when the bell rang was 14 to 15. The Hebron girls not only brought home the trophy for winners of Class A. but their captain Etheleen Jackson, was the fastest player to be seen on the Walton floor, carried off the trophy for the individual player. So on Thursday, Friday and Saturday they intend to be seen at Paris, Ky.

After an illness of several months the spirit of Mrs. Mary Jane Graves, (nee Surface) took its gentle flight to her Heavenly home about noon Monday March 3, 1931, at the age of 74 years. She united with Hopeful Lutheran church where she took great interest in the welfare of her church. Her Beautiful Christian life has been a radian reflection of the sunshine of God's love. Having spent such an active life in service here; She was prepared to meet the Heavenly father. She was married to Wm. Graves, who preceded her to the grave several years ago. To this union two children were born, a daughter, Mrs. Wm. Crigler, and a son Edgar, besides her son and daughter she is survived by four grandsons, a sister Mrs. John Hogan, of Erlanger, two brothers John and Eli frSuface, of Florence and many other relatives and friends who will miss her.

Funeral services were conducted at Hebron Lutheran church Thursday at 1.30 p. m. Rev. Heibert, her pastor delivered the discourse.

Her popuolarity was demonstrated by the large crowd of sorrowing relatives and friends who attended, to pay the last sad tribute of respect to this good woman.

The remains were laid to rest by the side of her husband in Hebron cemetery beneath a covering of beautiful flowers. Dr. Edwin Crigler and wife, John Crigler and Robt. Graves carried flowers. The pall-bearers were Wm. and Stanley Graves, Harvey Utz, Wm. Howe, Jos. Surface and Harold Garr. Funeral director W. A. Bullock had charge of the arrangements.

Working "Corpse Lights" Due to Decomposition?

There was in fortune days a time so bad in "dead reckon," apparently a sort of natural rocket that issued from the ground and burned before the window of the room where a dying person lay. "Corpse lights"—blue flames that burned, as rather marsh over the grave of anyone who had been murdered—were equally believed in.

A certain weaver, early last century, took as his assistant an ill-looking journeyman. After a time the weaver disappeared, and the journeyman carried on the business, declaring that his master had gone on a long journey but would return after some months It happened, however, that two gentlemen, driving past the weaver's cottage one night, saw the "corpse light" near the cottage, and brought the sheriff to the place next day.

The journeyman, on being questioned as to the weaver's whereabouts, denied all knowledge of where he had gone, but persisted in his story that he would eventually return. The sheriff, however, set his officers to dig where the light had been seen, and when the weaver's body was found the journeyman broke down and confessed that he had murdered him.

It is said that about 1866 these lights, which were probably due to decomposition, might have been seen almost every night in the over-full churchyard of Greyfriars in Edinburgh.—Weekly Scotsman.

Exportations Now Meet Demand for Pine Nuts

How many people know that there is only one single-leaf conifer in North America, the pinyon or single-leaf pine, and that it not only yielded the winter provision of the Indians, but that it now yields an annual harvest of pine nuts convertible into cash? As early as 1833, Zenas Leonard, the clerk of Capt. Joseph R. Walker, who was the first westbound white man to cross the Sierras, makes note of this tree that played so important a part in the home economics of the Indian. John C. Fremont in his memoirs also refers to this species, which was the cause of bloody battles fought by the Piutes and Washoe tribes over possession of the territory in which the prolific trees grew.

The Indians gather after hard frosts to collect the cones that yield the nutritious seed or nuts after being exposed to the sun or artificial heat. The seeds are eaten after they are roasted or are dried and ground into meal. The white man has now discovered this delicacy, and four carloads of pine nuts were shipped to distant markets after the past season. The Indians were paid about $35,000 for this commodity, which is new to eastern markets.

Bright Pupil Answers

The annual inspection was taking place. Fortunately, the brightest class of all was the first to undergo this ordeal.

One after another the inspector's questions were answered correctly. At last he decided to give the pupils a really hard test.

"Now, who can give me an example of nothing?" he inquired.

After a short pause a tiny hand was raised.

"Well, little girl," said the inspector, "what's your definition?"

The smallest child in the class rose to her feet.

"Please, sir," she said, "it's a legless stocking with no foot in it."—Yorkshire Post.

Rhymes About Months

Bartlett's "Familiar Quotations" gives several versions of the rhyme, "Thirty days hath September, April, June and November," the earliest of which is in Latin and is found in William Harrison's "Description of Britain," prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicle, dated 1577. Other versions are in Richard Grafton's "Chronicles of England," 1590; "The Return from Parnassus," London, 1606, and one current in the New England states. A rhyme said to be current among the Friends in Chester county, Pa., ran: "Fourth, eleventh, ninth and sixth, Thirty days to each affix; Every other thirty-one, Except the second month alone."

Has No Scientific Basis

There is no known scientific basis for the popular belief that underground water, oil, mineral deposits or hidden treasures can be located by means of a forked twig carried over the surface in a certain manner, says Pathfinder Magazine. But the faith of certain people is not diminished.

The belief is probably a relic of ancient methods of divination. Early in the Fifteenth century miners in the Harz mountains of Germany prospected with hazel twigs, and this practice, which was introduced among the Cornwall miners in the time of Queen Elizabeth, later was adopted as a means for finding veins of underground water.

Thinkers

Beware when the great God lets loose a thinker on this planet. Then all things are at risk. . . . There is not a piece of science, but its dank may be turned tomorrow; there is not any literary reputation, not the so-called external names of fame, that may not be revised and condemned. The very hopes of man, the thoughts of his heart, the religion of nations, the manners and morals of mankind, are all at the mercy of a new generalisation.—Emerson.

Sympathy of Quilters Will Be With Deceased

One morning a more or less sleepy fool discovered (as occasioned as usual by the alarm clock. He proceeded out of bed, but instead of shutting off the alarm and proceeding about the leisurely process of dressing, he merely reset the clock and climbed back into bed. His wife noted his unusual behavior with some surprise.

"What's the matter?" she asked. "Don't you feel well?"

"Keep quiet!" he grumbled, and went about the intensive business of going back to sleep.

He explained everything later, and in spite of her huff the mistress of the household got a laugh out of it. It seemed that the alarm clock summons interrupted a dream in which the husband was engaged in an exciting game of golf with Bobby Jones.

"Well," his wife observed, "how does that explain your hopping back into bed again?"

"I wanted to finish that match," her husband replied, "and I wanted to give one particularly offensive pest a good punch in the nose. And the sad part of it is I can't for the life of me remember whether I did or not."

Linen "Textbooks" Used in Early Schoolrooms

"Your lesson for tomorrow will be on the blue handkerchief."

Children in the primary schools of Wisconsin, during the days of a century ago, fully realised the significance of the school marm's words.

In the absence of textbooks, linen handkerchiefs, full of prints depicting the great moments and the great men of history, were used to instruct the youngsters. This method was used to teach children how to read and to spell. Different lessons required different handkerchiefs.

Fortunately, little Mary and little Johnny did not have to tote pocketful references. A handkerchief a day made schooling pay.

In a shaded corridor of the Historical museum, on the University of Wisconsin campus, one may see the faded linen, once the pride of a studious child. George Washington is the lesson text. A full-length print of George in characteristic Napoleonic pose fills the center of the foot-square goods. To the right, in large type, still legible, are the birth, death and other vital facts.

Byron's Pet Goose

Byron, though he sneered at many other British institutions, seems to have retained a truly John-Bullish hankering after roast goose at Michaelmas, a Manchester Guardian writer observes. Countess Guiccioli records how one year, in Venice, the poet bought a goose early in August with the idea of hand-feeding it in readiness for September 29. Sentiment, however, interfered with the plan, for he and the bird became so attached that when Michaelmas arrived he could not bear the thought of killing it. He bought another bird for his table; and had a cage made for the pet goose, which he suspended under his carriage when he traveled.

Recalls Famous Nurse

Withered and wrinkled by years in a museum, the carriage Florence Nightingale used in the Crimean war now occupies a place of honor in St. Thomas' hospital at London.

It was at St. Thomas' that the "Lady With the Lamp" started her training school for nurses after the war.

Black with age, the carriage is ten feet long, five feet wide and about eight high. A four-wheeler with a leather hood, it was built to be drawn by two horses.

Technical Shop Term

The bureau of standards says that a "Dutchman" is a shop term applied to makeshifts which may or may not be justified, depending upon conditions. More specifically, "dutching" a sheet metal roof is the term applied to the fastening of the middle of the sheet to the sheathing below when the metal roof becomes noisy after years of use. When the wind blows, the sheets of metal slap up and down. After fastening, a cap is soldered over the nail (or screw) to prevent leakage.

Exit the Ghost

The tourist was making a tour of inspection of the very ancient-looking hostel.

"Charming old place," he mentioned to his companion, a regular boarder.

"Yes," mumbled the other, steering his head past an old oak beam just in time to save a nasty bruise.

"They say it's haunted," went on the tourist enthusiastically.

"Yes, it used to be," replied the regular boarder, "but the management raised the prices so high the ghost left."—London Answers.

Whist In History

Few of the many bridge enthusiasts today realize that the original of their favorite game was whist, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. And fewer, if any, know that whist was once looked upon as a pastime fit for servants and the "lower classes" only. But they may take heart and break their silence, for once the grand old game broke into the "upper class" society about 1740, it became so popular that even children gave whist parties. But only in the present century was whist "bridged" to its present form.

First Telegraph Line Regarded as Mere Toy

In 1832 Thomas Davenport, a blacksmith of Brandon, Vt., exhibited at Springfield and at Boston a working model of an electric car running on a small track. He had studied the ideas of Michael Faraday with the object of applying the only half-understood electrical energy to the propulsion of a vehicle. Russell Gore writes in the Detroit News. Unfortunately, the world was not yet ready for electric street cars, even if it had available—which it had not till the Michigan deposits were developed—the copper to make them run.

But the discovery of the magic metal lagged just around the corner, while electricity took some shy peeks to see if the way was clear. By 1835 Morse was exhibiting a model telegraph machine, based on the system of dots and dashes. Two years later the first telegraph line was installed on the London & Northwestern railway.

The first was regarded as a toy and was not even used for railroad business. Not until it was pressed into service to tell the London police that a notorious criminal, one Tawell, wanted for poisoning a woman, would step off the train in the metropolis, did its magic dawn on the world. Tawell, astonished, was arrested by the London police, who were almost as much astonished as he was that a slender strand of copper wire had carried a message faster than the fastest courier could carry it. Tawell, a crook, was electricity's best press agent in the infancy of the telegraph.

Ball Playing Traced to Theory of Resurrection

It is interesting to read in Prof. Elliot Smith's "Human History" that the common origin of ball games may be traced to the fact that the ancient Egyptians' theory of the universe depended "upon the view that the death and resurrection of the god Osiris was essential for the maintenance of life." In the periodical dramatic representations of this belief, Professor Smith explains, "the conflict of the followers of Osiris with those of his enemy Set was enacted," and not only the bullfighting of Spain, and the cockfighting of Asia . . . but also the tug-of-war, football, hockey, tennis, cricket, polo, and, in fact, all ball games are the modified survivals of the Osirian competitions in which the representatives of the rival parties struggled for the mummy of the king god or his head, the ball."—Montreal Family Herald.

Island Dwellers

There are only two good ways to come to Stockholm. One is to approach slowly by the canal from Goteborg, and the other is to arrive by sea through the glorious channels between its 75 miles of islands. The rugged sea and landscapes of these rocky islets not only made artists happy, but many families of the city make their summer homes on an island, and the business men commute daily by launch to their work. Everybody has a yacht or some more modest craft and they spend nearly all day on the water.

Valuable Health Rules

Irving Fisher's health rules are: "Ventilate every room you occupy; wear light, loose, and porous clothes; seek out-of-doors occupations and recreations; sleep out of doors if possible; breathe deeply; avoid overeating; eat sparingly of meats and eggs; eat some hard, some bulky, and some raw foods each day; eat slowly; move the bowels regularly and frequently; do not allow poisons and infections to enter the body; keep the teeth, gums, and tongue clear; stand, sit, and walk erect; work, play, rest, and sleep in moderation, and keep happy."

Bad Telephone Manners

Alexander Graham Bell lived to deplore the casual manners his invention had introduced.

"Nobody," he said—according to Catherine Mackenzie in her biography of Bell—"would dream of coming to one's house and demanding an audience while one dined, or bathed, or slept; but every one made these peremptory interruptions by telephone."

He always made indignant protest when any member of his family left the table to answer a telephone call.—Kansas City Times.

"This Is So Sudden!"

They were strolling in the moonlight, this couple of the Stone age days, she slim and lively, he big, hairy and muscular. The dinosaurs and mastodons respectively slithered out of their way at their approach.

Suddenly, for no obvious reason, he reached over and laid her skull open with a vicious swing of his quartz club. As she sank to the ground, her eyes opened in wonderment.

"O, Oswald," she cooed. "And didn't know you cared!"—Exchange.

Novel "Change of Air"

Mr. Bata, Czechoslovakian boot manufacturer, is a very busy man, and his time is valuable. When his doctor told him that he must go to a mountainous district for a change of air, he decided that he could not spare the time. Instead of going to the mountains, Mr. Bata bought a balloon, anchored it to his factory chimney, and used it as an office. Thus he was able to enjoy the pure air of the heights and carry on his business at the same time.

Statesmen Not Always Masters of Foresight

It is curious how great things befall. Chancellor Livingston, at the time our minister in France, vexed with Napoleon's offer of the Louisiana territory without authority from government and to the dismay, so one reads, of Jefferson.

In the war with Mexico, Calhoun, who was secretary of state, sent Nicholas P. Trist, chief clerk of the State department and husband of a granddaughter of Jefferson to confer with Santa Anna about ending the war. Santa Anna offered Trist the treaty of Guadalupe, which gave us New Mexico, Arizona, upper California, and the Rio Grande as the southern boundary of Texas.

He gave Trist two days to take it or leave it. Trist lacked authority to accept it, but did so and carried it back to Washington, where it gave great dissatisfaction and got Trist into trouble, but it stood.

Mr. Seward, who had a vision of the destiny of the United States, bought Alaska and fairly earned credit for that. He had imagination and large ideas. The Philippines we got because it was not convenient to dodge them. They were left on our doorstep and are not a popular acquisition even now.—Edward S. Martin in Harper's Magazine.

Earliest Use of Horse Probably for Warfare

In Babylonia the first domesticated horse appeared about 2000 B. C. It was introduced into Egypt by the Hyksos, or shepherd kings, who came from the north and east of Syria, and conquered lower Egypt in the Seventeenth century B. C. In both these cases it is to be noted that the horse was preceded by many centuries by the ox and the ass. From these facts and a few other scraps of evidence one may picture the first domestication of the horse as occurring in central Asia. Probably it was accomplished by a people of nomadic herdsmen to whom the convenience of riding would be obvious. Sooner or later the mounted nomad came to realize the measure of his advantage over the man who traveled and fought afoot, and was encouraged to wander farther afield, conquering as he went. In any case, the horse (either as a charger or yoked to a chariot) became in very early times an important factor in war. The use of the horse for the workaday purpose of transport and tillage is comparatively a modern development; in Britain, for example, oxen were the common plow animals until the end of the Eighteenth century.

Early English Glassmaking

In Old England the glass making industry was concentrated in the county of Sussex, where an ancient glass works was dug up recently. James I issued a proclamation forbidding the melting of glass "with timber or wood or fuel made of the same" fearing, no doubt, that the forests were being depleted too rapidly. But, in spite of this order, glass works increased. Later on, in 1633, the import of foreign glass was prohibited by government order, although an exception was made in favor of Venetian ware. The most important glass factory was at Chiddingfold, which dates back to 1240. It provided Henry II with white and colored glass for his abbey of Westminster.

Famous Japanese Trees

Among extraordinary trees of Japan is the geba-sakura, at the base of fuji-yama, whose branches begin less than a yard from the ground. The trunk measures 26 feet around and the leaves are reddish, the flowers white.

Four big trunks with a total circumference of 34 feet grow from the same root of the Ishido kaba-sakura. The rosary-hanging cherry tree of Daigo temple, has seven trunks growing from the same root, while the main trunk stands dead and rotting.

The stone-splitting cherry tree has its roots buried in the cracks of a great granite rock in the grounds of the law courts in Morioka. It is one of the famous cherry trees protected by law.

"Hearing" Tree Fall

The word "sound" is used in two senses. From the viewpoint of the psychologist, sound is a sensation; from that of the physicist, sound is that form of vibratory motion which may be perceived by the ear. In the case of a falling tree, there would be no sound in the sense in which the word is used in psychology, but as it is used in physics there would be sound, because the tree in falling would set up vibrations of the air which would be capable of affecting the ear, if one were present. This explanation is from Henderson's "Physics in Everyday Life."—Washington Star.

Standish Story Myth?

Apparently there is no evidence to support the assertion often made that Capt. Miles Standish, military commander of the Mayflower group of Pilgrims at Plymouth, lost one of his legs in battle and wore a "cork" leg. None of the contemporary historians and chroniclers mention the fact, and it is not so stated in the reputable histories of Plymouth colony. It is not known who started the story. Perhaps it originally arose from a confusion of Standish with Peter Stuyvesant, the one-legged governor of New Netherland.—Pathfinder Magazine.

World Slow to Grasp Benefit of Sanitation

Philadelphia in 1845 sought to prohibit, by ordinance, bathing, in the house, from November to March, but the measure lacked two votes. Virginia laid a state tax of $30 a year on bathtubs. Hartford, Providence, Charleston and Wilmington quadrupled water charges to owners of bathtubs. But the tub came into real fame when President Fillmore installed one in the White House. He had tried the tub in Cincinnati in 1850 and liked it.

If you think modern cities are dirty and that modern smoke problems are difficult, consider the plight of musicians who came to London in the Eighteenth century and lost three whole notes in the range of their voices from the smoke of that city. There were few factories then, and most of the smoke came from the fireplaces of the homes. The homes, too, were dirty and furnishings were covered with soot. Sudden drafts down the chimneys drove the smoke through the rooms and deposited the soot on everything. A historian says that the lungs of the duchess of Orleans were permanently injured by London smoke.

The fireplace furnished the heat for the house, but even in the great homes in the Eighteenth century only the main hall and, at the most, one or two other rooms, were heated even in this way.—Exchange.

Judicial Ear Inured to Lies on Witness Stand

Perjury, writes a columnist in the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian, is a very terrible thing, but perjury is not, as may have appeared from recent comment, more in evidence now than in the past. It is a good many years since Commissioner Kerr made his dry comment while presiding in the City of London court: "David said in his haste all men were liars; if he were sitting in this court he would have said the same thing at his leisure."

To the past also belongs the even drier remark of Mr. Justice Byles: "A man's word in the city of London is as good as his bond—but you can't stamp it." And quite mid-Victorian was the reply of Justice Maule to a man who declaimed, "My lord, you may believe me or not, but I have stated not a word that is false, for I have been wedded to truth from my infancy."

"Yes, sir," growled Maule, "but the question is how long have you been a widower?"

"Tools" Used by Mosquito

Nature has provided the mosquito with a neat outfit for boring operations. When she settles unnoticed upon your arm she first applies a little fluid to soften the skin. Next she brings into operation a sharp-pointed saw with which she proceeds to make a hole. The softening fluid enables the saw to cut easily—so easily that you don't feel her at work. When the hole is made she inserts a miniature hosepipe into it and through this she pumps up the blood.

It is the softening fluid which causes the subsequent irritation. Scratch the place and you cause it to spread, making matters worse. Further, there is always the danger of introducing microbes into the hole the mosquito has sawn. Ammonia or washing soda will calm the irritation and a dab of iodine will serve to prevent infection.

Concerning Loneliness

A botanist is not lonely when he is soul-alone on the flank of a mountain, bending over the alpine flowers and shrubs of the snow-line, for all that there is no place above water that is lonelier than a mountain. He has for his companions the floral growths that interest him; he has the mountain, and the sublimity of it—but most of all he has himself.

An angler is not lonely when he is far from other men, in a canyon threaded by a wild stream, though he may have fancied himself to be ever so lonely when he was one of many thousands in a city. He has the canyon, the stream, and his employment—but most of all he has himself.—Portland Oregonian.

When Snakes Had Legs

Undoubtedly all snakes at one time walked on four legs. It is believed that they lost their limbs at a time when they lived in dense vegetation where locomotion by lateral undulations was especially advantageous. All snakes have vestigial hind limbs and in the pythons and boa constrictors these rudimentary legs are still used to some extent. Snakes are really lizards that have lost their legs and undergone other modifications. The so-called glass snake, which is classified as a legless lizard, is an example of a lizard in the process of becoming a snake. It is a connecting link between the true snakes and the true lizards. —Pathfinder.

Nowhere Not Popular

If you received a letter addressed to you at Nowhere, would you like it? You would have to if you lived in the town of Nowhere, England. Residents of the place want the name changed now that the people of Bugsworth have resumed their village Buxworth. Citizens of Rotten End, Ugley, Pig street, Swinehead, Swineside and Swine, all in England, are considering new names for their town or village, and Muck Island, Ireland, also has the question up. But Houndsditch, England, objects to changing its historic name.

Nation Christian Only as It Is Understood

The assumption that the United States is a Protestant country is correct only in the sense that the great majority of its inhabitants belong to the Protestant religion. The federal Constitution does not state that the United States is a Protestant, nation, or even a Christian nation. Article VI says in part that "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States" and the First amendment says in part that "congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." In a treaty signed with Tripoli, a Mohammedan country, in 1796, Article XI begins "As the government of the United States of America is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion." However, in a Supreme court decision rendered in 1892, it was declared incidentally by Justice Brewer who rendered the decision, that "This is a Christian nation." This, it should be remembered, was not the point at issue in the suit before the court.—Detroit News.

Variety of Acacia Used in Building Tabernacle

It is in Exodus XXV that we first find mention of shittim wood, when the Lord was giving directions to Moses for the building of the tabernacle, the temporary church of the Israelites, while like a tribe of Arabs they traveled about in the desert.

No one doubts that the shittah tree, or shittim wood tree, is one of three varieties of the acacia which is common in eastern lands. This particular variety is known as acacia sepal, and is the one from which gum-arabic is obtained.

It grows in the very driest situations at the present time, in that self same desert. Every little oasis, every little declivity, on the side of every rocky hill it may be found, a sturdy good-sized tree. In the spring it is beautiful with its hairy-like yellow blooms, and during the summer it produces pods, gathered for provender but of very slight food value—in fact "the husks which the swine did eat" in famine time.

Saved Jackson from Trap

A wild ride by two loyal Confederate women saved Stonewall Jackson from marching into a trap set for him by Generals Fremont and Shields in the Virginia campaign, the Baltimore & Ohio Magazine recalls. One of these women, Esther Washington, was the daughter of George W. Washington of the same family as the first President. Her father had learned of the Union generals' plan to trap Jackson, and since his sons were in the southern army and he himself was unable to make the ride to Charlestown, Esther and Rebecca volunteered. They made the trip on horseback and were complimented by Jackson, who immediately proceeded to make things hot for Fremont.

Scottish Religious Shrine

Iona stands first in its religious significance among the islands of Scotland, for Scotland's destiny is linked with it, and it has stirred the imagination and rapture of poets, literateurs and religious zealots of many generations. Here the saint Columba founded in 563 the monastery which for a century and a half was the national church of Scotland and from which the emissaries of the Christian faith penetrated into the mainland. The existing monastic buildings are of later date than Columba's time, but they are linked with the beginning of Christianity in Scotland and are an object of veneration to countless pilgrims.

Ancient English Official

The original title of the office, Clerk of the Hamper, was hamper man, an official in charge of the hamper or treasure chest of the sovereign. In 1577, Sir T. Smith devised the office: "The Clarke of the Hamper is hee that doth receive the fines due for every writ sealed in this court." Murray's English dictionary quotes Shakespeare's Act 19 of King Henry VII, "Fine and fee to your highness in your hamper." The earliest allusion is that of 1392, when it is recorded that villiens seized the King's hamper.

Comprehensive Map

A "Mercator map" is a map constructed on the principle of Mercator's projection. The meridians are drawn parallel to each other, and the parallels of latitude are straight lines, whose distance from each other increases with their distance from the equator, so that in all places the degrees of latitude and longitude have to each other the same ratio as on the sphere itself. This produces an apparent enlargement of the polar regions, which when translated into distance is approximately accurate.

Rewarded

The papers recently carried the story of a pair of negroes, one of whom was arrested on the charge of stealing watermelons. It seems that two darkies were concerned in the theft, so the prisoner was asked what had become of his companion.

"He done died from eatin' too much watermelon," the prisoner explained. Then he added:

"Yes, suh, he was favored by de Lord. Providence sometimes puts us in paradise afore we goes to heaven."

Opportunity to Reveal "Real" Washington Lost

The man who enjoyed real and big opportunities to paint Washington was Colonel Trumbull, his aide-de-camp and closest observer, writes Helen Albert-Levin in the Baltimore Sun. Seriously mindful of Washington's demeanor on the field, on horseback, in society, in barracks, Trumbull painted a head of Washington from memory. In the autumn of 1780, upon his return from Europe, he began sketches of the chiefs and statesmen of the revolution; these were later embodied in the pictures adorning the rotunda of the capitol at Washington.

Trumbull's best and most spirited portrait is dated 1792. It was his aim to portray Washington's full military character at its most sublime moment, the evening previous to the battle at Trenton, when through Washington's mind there flashed like blazing lights the various details of his position; the vast superiority of the British; the impossibility of recrossing the Delaware or of retreating down the river; the daring solution.

Trumbull unfolded the plan for the painting to Washington, whereupon Washington "looked the scene" with all its desperate chance, wild hope, hazardous determination. The portrait was executed and copied numerous times. But it was not calm and peaceful enough for popular sentiment. Reluctantly, then, Trumbull asked Washington to sit for another with his every-day face.

Neither Lion Nor Tiger Are Forest Denizens

It is commonly but erroneously believed that lions dwell in great forests and jungles, and they are frequently so represented in conventional drawings and pictures. These animals, however, are not natives of the forest and jungle. They live chiefly in rocky places, on sandy plains where there are thorn thickets, and in the tall grasses and reeds along the banks of rivers. The lion is found in both Africa and Asia, while the tiger is exclusively Asiatic. Tigers have a wide range in Asia, being found in almost all suitable parts of the continent and on the islands of Sumatra, Java and Bali. Unlike the lion, the tiger is frequently found in forests, although it prefers grassy plains or swamps. Lions and tigers sometimes interbreed. In 1924 the Maharajah Jam Sahib presented the Zoological Society of London with a "tigon," or tiger-lion hybrid, which had been bred at Nawanagar, India.—Pathfinder Magazine.

American Library in France

The American library in Paris is at 10 Rue L'Elysee. The library was founded in 1918 by the American Library association in connection with war work. In 1920 the book collections and library equipment, together with $25,000 toward an endowment fund, were presented by the A. L. A. to a society formed to make the library a permanent institution. The greater part of the library's income is from the endowment fund, a three-year grant by the Rockefeller foundation, and special gifts from patrons and life members.

Eagle Brooks No Rival

The American bald-headed eagle is still master of the air. His supremacy again was established the other day near Crows Range, Mont., in a battle against a kite which, soaring 1,000 feet in the air, had invaded his realm. Angered over the trespass, the great bird attacked. Down it shot like a plummet, talons first. It ripped the kite to shreds and as the man-made plaything fluttered slowly to earth the king of birds circled slowly and triumphantly over the scene of his latest victory.

No "Gee" Nor "Haw"

Near Thorntown there is a little Indian burial ground, unkempt but undesorated.

A hundred years ago the remnant of the Indian tribe living in the vicinity gave up its ancestral land to the white settlers. The Indians excepted their burial plot. Their treaty stipulated that the white man should never "gee" nor "haw" his horses in it. This agreement, with its quaint phraseology, may be found in the Boone county records today.—Indianapolis News.

Zeppelin's First Success

Count Zeppelin's first ascent in a balloon was made at St. Paul, Minn., during a visit. This is said to be the incentive of later experiments. In 1900 he built an airship which rose from the ground and remained in the air for 20 minutes, but was wrecked in landing. In 1906 he made two successful flights at a speed of 30 miles an hour and in 1907 attained a speed of 36 miles. He retired from the army in 1891 and devoted his time and wealth to experiments in connection with dirigible balloons.

Symbols of Jewish Faith

A phylactery is a reminder. It is, in reality, a small leathern box containing slips of parchment on which are written Scriptural passages. Two such boxes are worn by Jews, one on the head and one on the left arm, during the time of prayer on all mornings except those of Sabbaths and holy days. The passages are Exodus, 13:1-10, 11-16 and Deuteronomy, 6:4-9 and 11:13-22, and are reminders of obligation to keep the law.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Indian Tribe in Which Women "Rule the Roost"

It's a masculine hand that rocks the cradle among the Tzapotec Indians on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec in Mexico.

"You can go there today and find women sitting in the market place trading in vegetables and pottery while the men are at home minding the children and running errands," writes Grace Robinson in Liberty Magazine.

"If any clash arises between Mexican authorities and the tribe, the police go to the women, not the men, for adjustment. Likewise the priest in spiritual matters carries on his business with the women.

"The women are tall, with regal carriage, due to the practice of carrying bundles on their heads, and their bodies are strong. The men are runts by comparison. The women are alert; the men stupid and slow.

"In many primitive societies, woman has been the dominant sex in all civil departments of life. Racial histories show that the dominant sex always delegated to the subordinate sex housework and care of the children."

Here's Job That Might Really Be Termed Soft

As life becomes more complex, new and unusual professions are created overnight. And there is always someone ready to step in and fill the post, even if no previous training is available.

For instance, there is the "professional hospitality critic." One New York hotel has such an official on its staff, and those who labor over desks or in manual lines will envy him. His duties, as explained by the manager, are as follows:

"His job is to sleep, eat, dance, get shined, pressed and shampooed at the house's expense, provided he renders a critical report of what takes place. For a year at least he must periodically play the part of a guest, with the eye of one who knows hospitality at its best. By this arrangement the hotel has first call on new ideas and services discovered in the profession of eating and sleeping."

And he probably gets paid for it!—New York Sun.

Early Alarm Clock

Devices for telling time are as old as history itself. The Greeks, points out Modern Mechanics Magazine, had the water clock, the Aztecs the calendar stone, the Saxons of England the handle clock, and other peoples the hour glass and sundial.

The first alarm clock was developed soon after gunpowder was invented. A sundial was placed over a miniature gun. When the sun came to a certain hour position the rays, focused on the fuse port by the burning glass, ignited the powder. The chief differences in the ancient and modern timepieces lie in the mechanism. Where the ancients put nature to use to indicate time, modern man uses machinery.

Lost Sense of Colors

Color blindness generally affects both eyes, the functions of the eyes being otherwise normal, and it is often hereditary. Complete color blindness or the loss of appreciation of colors is almost exclusively seen in acquired color blindness, occurring in optic nerve atrophy, although a number of cases of congenital color blindness has been reported. Color blindness cannot be corrected, as it is a permanent defect. Color blindness confuses red and green only; the other colors appear to be normal. This is, of course, true of color blindness in the ordinary sense, not in total color blindness.

Telephone "Cities"

Telephone companies divide cities into sections, each with several thousand telephone subscribers. Each section is a telephone city, has its own central office and a name, such as "Columbia" or "Potomac," to designate it. When a number is called that is within the same telephone city, the connection is made in the local central. When a number is called outside the telephone city, the local central connects with a trunk line which leads to a central office in the proper telephone city. There connections is made with the subscriber wanted.

Mythological Belief

The "Delphic Oracle" was the priestess known as Pythia who sat upon a tripod over a crevice in the rocks of Mount Parnassus. Overpowering vapors, assumed to be the divine breath of Apollo, were supposed to influence the priestess who gave utterance to Apollo's words. Her mutterings were recorded by priests who interpreted them in verse. Delphi, the headquarters of the oracle, was an ancient town in Phocis, Greece, called Pythe in the stories of Homer. It is on the southern slope of Mount Parnassus.

Simple Arab Burial

In Algiers the body of a native is usually put in a cheap pine box and carried through the streets on the shoulders of friends, who transport it to the burying ground. Arab cemeteries are near every village. Friends form a procession and take turns in carrying the coffin. Little solemnity is observed. The friends chatter and laugh and greet the passers-by. At the burying ground the coffin is simply put into the ground with practically no ceremony.

Words Can't Describe Good Karnak Did Me

"I just know there is nobody in all the world happier than I about this wonderful medicine, Karnak. I have taken all kinds of medicines and treatments in the past ten years trying to get some relief from my suffering, but nothing helped me until I began Karnak.

"Oh, how I suffered with stomach trouble. Why, I was almost a nervous wreck from it. I had no appetite to speak of, food just didn't have any taste to me. But even though I would only eat the lightest kind of things, I would suffer just the same.

"I had just lost all my strength and at times I would feel so weak I could hardly walk across the room.

"I was so nervous and restless I couldn't get any sleep to amount to anything, and in the morning I could hardly drag myself out of bed. It began to look mighty blue for me, but Karnak has changed everything. It is too grand for words."

FRIENDS PAY TRIBUTE TO ROBERT BRADY AT FUNERAL, SUNDAY

HUGH CROWD

REVEALS RESPECT IN WHICH BELLEVIEW MAN WAS HELD DIED AT DEACONESS HOSPITAL LAST THURSDAY FOLLOWING OPERATION AT THAT INSTITUTION

(By John U. Salt)

Most of the facts in the story of the death of Robert Brady were given to the writer by Robert Berkshire, editor of the Boone County Recorder, who is confined to his home by illness. Berkshire and Brady were lifelong friends. Brady was on the opposing team in the first game that Berkshire ever played in 1913. Berkshire's tribute to his friend was that he was one of the finest gentlemen and sportsmen that he ever knew.

One of the best loved men in Boone county, Robert Brady, Belleview, died at Deaconess Hospital, last Thursday. While only 36 years old, at the time of his death, it is doubtful if many men twice his age had acquired the love and respect of his friends and neighbors, that belonged to Robert Brady. To most of his friends he was affectionately known as Bobby and in his short life he made his name one that was spoken [illegible] friends he was known as "Mike."

His funeral, last Sunday, was one of the largest that has ever been held in Boone county and his coffin and home were piled with flowers. The news of his death saddened the entire community. Though it was known to many that he was seriously ill his death came as a shock to most of his friends. His popularity was attested by the huge crowd that attended his funeral and stopped at his home, to offer their condolences to the bereaved family. Boone county has produced many well known sons and while Bobby Brady was never great as greatness is ordinarily measured the huge crowd which filled the Belleview Baptist church and the equally large crowd that stood bareheaded outside while the services were in progress proved beyond a doubt his true worth. Bobby united with the Belleview Baptist church in 1910, was ordained deacon in 1913, and has filled that office since. Brady united with the church under the pastorate of H. B. Hensley.

Of a robust constitution, ordinarily, Brady had been suffering for several years. Recently he was confined to his home and on March 2 was rushed to the Deaconess Hospital, Cincinnati, for an emergency operation. He was suffering from acute appendicitis. For a time it was believed that he was on the road to recovery, but complications, which set in, brought on his death. He died at noon Thursday, almost two weeks after the operation.

Born In Belleview

Brady was born in the community in which he died and spent his entire life there with the exception of the time he spent in the army during the World War. For the past eighteen years he has been the rural mail carrier on Grant route and every person on the route was numbered among his close friends.

In 1911 Bobby Brady started his career as a ball player. He was a natural athlete and only his firm refusal to play Sunday base ball kept him from becoming among the great stars of the game. As a local player he was rated as one of the best that Boone county has ever produced. Not only as a player, but as a perfect sportsman, did Bobby gain a reputation in this and adjoining counties. To him base ball was a gentleman's game and he played it like a gentleman. His opponents on the field were not his enemies but his friends. In the game he gave the best that was in him, for his team, but when the game was finished he had a smile for the other side whether a winner or a loser. His sportsmanship and his sunny disposition made him one of the most popular men that the old county has ever produced.

From the time that he first stepped on a base ball diamond his boyhood pals and later his friends of manhood sought to persuade him to play Sunday base ball, for everyone saw in him the beginning of a great player. Bobby Brady, however, was firm in his convictions and, without a doubt sacrificed success and money on the playing field, because he steadfastly refused to play base ball on Sunday. Sunday base ball was against his principles and while he had little to say on the subject to players he stood by his beliefs thru his boyhood and until the time of his death. While not a wealthy man he was always ready to aid his fellowmen. There are few who knew him that cannot recall something or other that Bobby Brady has done for them.

Brady was a member of the Belleview Baptist church for many years and at the time of his death was a deacon in that church and assistant superintendent of its Sunday school. It was in this church that his funeral services were held in the country where he was born and raised and always loved. He was a valued member of the I. O. O. F. and clerk of that lodge at the time of his death.

Bobby Brady stood at the top in nearly everything he undertook. He was an excellent athlete and had he assumed the privilege his name might have been emblazoned on the sport pages of more than one newspaper. In those games, which he undertook, he excelled. In church work he was as great as on the diamond. He was a leader in his church and a man who stood by his convictions regardless of the odds against him.

Friend Pays Tribute

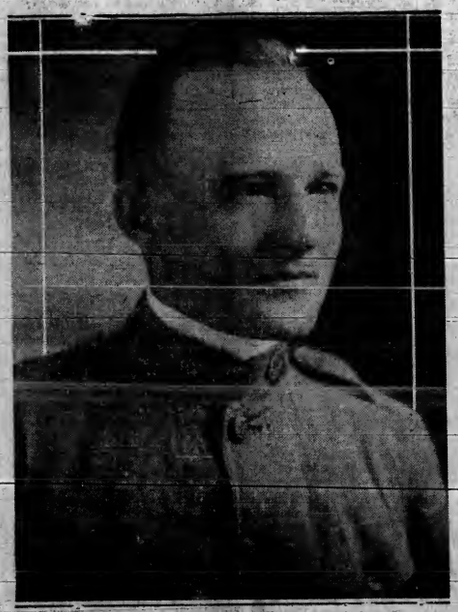
No better tribute could be paid to any man than that which was given when the funeral services were held. Friends flocked to the services from far and near and the Rev. Robt. McNeely, a native of Boone, and a life long friend of Bobby, preached the sermon. No greater tribute need be paid than his boyhood friend gave Bobby when he said: "His funeral has already been preached. His life and the love of his friends will stand as a memorial to him."

Brady was a lover of the outdoors. Many happy hours of his life were spent tramping over the hills. He loved hunting and his name was known to every fox and coon hunter of the county. He was a lover of dogs and his hounds were the envy of many a hunter.

An incident that occurred when two friends stopped at his home to pay their last respects showed his love for his four legged companions. Bobby was the proud owner of three young fox hounds. One of these friends called to the other to come outside with him. They walked a short distance from the house. "Look," was the only word that the one uttered. The three young dogs sat dejectedly in a small barn as if they knew that the master that they had learned to love in their short life, was gone from them.

Brady was the son of Hubert Brady, of near Burlington. He was the husband of Alline Clore Brady and had been married for ten years. During their married life they made their home with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clore who had loved him as a son.

During the world war Brady was stationed at Ft. Meade Maryland. He was a member of Boone Post American Legion.



Besides his wife and father Bobby is survivet by a daughter Mary Jane, nine years old, and two brothers Joseph and Sebern Brady.

IN MEMORIUM

Sleep on dear Bobby, take your rest,
We miss you most, who loved you best,
It leaves a shadow which darkens the place,
And also a vacant chair.
Days of sadness will come over us,
Secret tears will often flow,
'Tis sad to part with one so dear,
But God who knoweth best,
He'd wide his loving arms and said,
"Come unto me and rest."
The flowers we lay upon your grave,
May wither and decay;
But the love we bear for you, dear one,
Shall never fade away.
You are gone, but not forgotten,
Nor will you ever be,
As long as life and memory last,
We shall remember thee.

Robert H. Hood, Secretary of the Constance Building and Loan Association, Constance, was transacting business at the court house Monday for he association.

PHYSICIAN

WILL BE HONORED AT ANNIVERSARY MARCH 24

On his seventy-first birthday and on the anniversary of fifty years of service to his community as a physician, citizens of Erlanger and his many friends in Boone and Kenton counties will honor, Dr. Charles R. Slater, Erlanger, with a reception at the Lloyd Memorial High School Auditorium March 24, at 8 p. m.

Fellow physicians from neighboring towns will be present to congratulate their comrade on half a century of successful practice.

Dr. Slater was graduated from the Ohio Medical College February 21st, 1881. He continued his studies later in life attending the New York Post Graduate School and Hospital in 1904 and the Medical College of the University of Cincinnati in 1910. For 25 years Dr. Slater has been the surgeon for the Southern Railroad. For 15 years he has been a member of the Health Board of Kenton county.

The entire professional career of Dr. Slater has been passed in Erlanger and the surrounding territory. In his fifty years of practice he has made approximately 365,000 calls. He has attended 2,500 haternity cases. He began his practice in Erlanger when that community numbered 100 persons.

CORRESPONDENT

WILL BE HEARD ON RADIO SATURDAY, OVER N. B. C. HOOK-UP

Fred Holmes, who has written a weekly news letter to the Boone Co. Recorder from Washington each week for several years will be the speaker on a radio program to be broadcast March 21 at 11:30 a. m. The program will be broadcast by the National Broadcasting Company over a nation wide hookup.

Holmes will be the first speaker on the program of the National Grange Hour which starts March 21. A number of interesting speakers have been secured for these programs.

Burlington was well represented at the funeral of Robert Brady, at Belleview, Sunday afternoon. Robert had a large number of friends here.

Boone County Named State Representative In National Contest

LOCAL TEAMS

ARE ELIMINATED IN REGIONAL BASKET BALL TOURNAMENT AT PARIS, KY.

Both of the teams representing Boone county were eliminated in the Regional basket ball tournament held at Paris, Ky., last Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Petersburg boys playing in Class B lost to the Oddville team 26 to 24. The Hebron girls in Class A lost after an overtime game to Nicholasville 23 to 21.

Thursday afternoon Petersburg met Oddville. Altho Oddville entered the tournament as favorites the Boone county team came near upsetting the calculations of the experts. The closeness of the score shows the fight which Oddville had to defeat the local aggregation.

The game between the strong and fast Nicholasville team with the Hebron quintet was even a closer contest. Three minutes overtime were required before the Hebron girls yielded to defeat.

Mamie Lillie McGlasson of the Hebron team was chosen as one of the all-star players of the tournament.

Baker, the Hebron center, was one of the stars of the Nicholasville game. Although opposed to a much taller player she gave her team the advantage of the tip-off on nearly every play. The work of McGlasson and Jackson the forwards, showed that the local team was well trained in passwork. The play of Grant and Reeves, the guards was also noteworthy. Ryle and Riddell gave an excellent account of themselves as substitutes.

Every one of the Boone county players who attended the tournament commented on the wonderful hospitality they were shown on their trip to Paris.

JAIL BREAKER

IS RECAPTURED. TWO CHARGES AGAINST CHESTER BALES

Chester Bales, who escaped from the old county jail four years ago was recaptured Saturday. He is now lodged in the jail at Burlington and charges of assault and battery and breaking jail have been lodged against him.

When Bales was arrested he refused to admit to his right name. He had been using he name of Robinson. Bales, who officers identified him as the man who escaped four years ago. He refused to talk when questioned.

The charge of assault and battery and jail breaking was the result of aiding the Dalhoher boys to escape from the jail. At this time former jailer C. A. Fowler was beaten by the prisoners before they made their escape. Bales escaped from the jail himself by tunnelling under the walls of the old jail.

Bales was returned to Burlington by Sheriff Herbert Snyder from Cincinnati on a requisition issued by Governor Flem D. Sampson and honored by Governor White, of Ohio.

UTOPIA CLUB PLANS SPECIAL PROGRAM

Burlington group of Boone County Utopia Club No. 2 met at the county agent's office last Saturday afternoon and planned a special program for the March meeting of the club that will be held Thursday nite, Mch., the 19th.

Mr. E. E. Fish, club specialist and Miss Edith Lacy, field agent in Home Economics from the College of Agriculture will be principal speakers on the program. A St. Patrick's day program will be given following the regular business meeting.

COUNTY AGENT LISTS REQUIREMENTS FOR SUCCESSFUL LAMB IMPROVEMENT

Boone county in cooperation with the Golden Hoof Club has been selected as one of the ten Kentucky counties to represent the state in the National Lamb Improvment Contest. The county in this contest will be scored on three things: (1) per cent of lambs docked and trimmed; (2) per cent of flocks practicing recommended stomach worm control measures, and (3) number of farmers using purebred rams.

The lamb standardization program begins immediately. All market lamb producers of the county are urged to cooperate with this work. Corporation means the docking and trimming of all lambs to be marketed. This work has been practiced by the best sheepmen for several years. Where farmers of the community are not familiar with this work the county agent or local sheep raisers will be glad to cooperate by giving community demonstrations to teach principles of doing this work.

The stomach worm control program calls for the treating of all sheep in the breeding flock three or more times during the year with Black Leaf 40 or bluestone solutions, tetrachelethelyne or other recommended treatment. The first treatment should be before the ewes are turned on permanent pasture and then [illegible] more during the year. Many of the best sheepmen will begin early in the year and drench their flock once each during the summer.

The use of purebred rams has been found under experimental conditions to increase the market value of from $1.00 to $2.00 per head over lambs sired by scrub rams. Figuring forty lambs at $1.00 per head no sheepman can afford not to not use a good purebred ram.

Boone county's entry into this national lamb improvement contest simply means the doing of those things that will make most profit from our sheep industry. The carrying out of the first and second parts of the program means a cash expense of less than one cent per lamb. The purchasing of a purebred ram may mean a cash outlay of fifty cents per lamb this fall but if this ram is to last three or more years and should return from three to six dollars per lamb during this time a profitable investment has been made.

The county agent will be glad to cooperate to he fullest extent in the sheep program. Information on all of the above work is available at his office. Exact figures on any of the above statements or work is available on request.

FRUIT MEETINGS

A number of demonstration apple and peach orchards visited the past week by fruit growers, Mr. W. W. Magill from the College of Agriculture and the county agent showed that there is a high per cent of live apple and peach buds this spring. Barring killing freezes, frosts and other adverse conditions that may appear during the next two months the present prospects are for a good crop.

The four meetings held in the county the past week were well attended. A total of eighty-three people were present and showed much interest in fruit work. Mr. Magill in his message to the growers stressed the importance of spraying fertilizers and cultivation and less pruning. He said that too much attention had been given to pruning and not enough to spraying and supplying of plant food. The result has been decreased yields, lower the vitality of the trees and lowered profits received.

The apple spray schedule for 1931 should contain at least a dormant spray and three fruit sprays. The fruit sprays should be applied (1) when the buds are showing pink (2) when three fourths of the bloom have fallen and (3) about six weeks after the bloom has fallen. The [illegible]

GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

The element in politics which wants the Federal Government to go into business is neither Republican nor Democratic but Socialistic. That is the essence of Socialism, that Government should do everything, and all individual enterprise be subordinate.

That is not the way in which America has become great. It is not the way in which any nation ever became great. We in this country believe, whether we call ourselves Democrats or Republicans, that the individual is greater than the State, that government is set up to serve the individual and not to rule him. We have always resented, even in war time, the competition of Government with private enterprise.

There are emergencies, as President Hoover pointed out in his message vetoing the Muscle Shoals bill, when Government is justified in going temporarily into business, but who that remembers how the railroads were managed duriny the war would want to go back to that inefficient way of doing things? Government operation of any business enterprise means the employment of people not because they are good at their jobs but because they voted right at the last election.

The Wilson dam at Muscle Shoals and the government nitrate plant there were built as a war emergency measure. It would be desirable to utilize the water-power that is now going to waste there, but it would be simply a plunge into Socialism for the Government to enter into the business of manufacturing and selling power. It is easy enough to determine what a fair rental for the existing facilities there would be, and if private enterprise is not willing to pay that rental, that in itself is pretty good proof that the Government could not operate it at a profit. And there is no possible justification for burdening the taxpayers of all the nation with the losses of an unprofitable business enterprise which can directly benefit only a few.

The Family Garden

CABBAGE

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture)

The time for setting cabbage is almost here. In fact, the especially forehanded gardeners all over the state have already set their plants. Just how much is gained by setting too early for active growth to take place is doubtful, for even cabbage cannot grow if the temperatpre is just about freezing.

Also some gardeners grow their plants themselves, most of them depend on using the so-called "frost-proof plant" plants that have been shipped in from states too the south of us. These plants do very well in the majority of gardens, but there are instances, here and there, in which the frosproof plants will not serve.

In many old gardens it has been found that cabbage can no longer be grown even though the location of the cabbage rows is changed from year to year. The symptom of the trouble is the wilting-off of the plants at the time that heading should begin, or even before. If plants so affected are examined it is found that the stem and the roots are decayed and dead. The trouble is a disease whose germs accumulate in soil where cabbage has been grown for a long time. Its name is "cabbage yellows" or, as it is more generally called, "wilt."

Soil sterilization is effective, but obviously not practicable except in small plant beds and hotbeds, some other means for encasing it must be found. This method is to use varieties that can thrive in a "sick" soil. There are several varieties that have been tried extensively all over Kentucky and found to do well in infected soils. They are, in their order of earliness: Inscope, Marion Market, Wisconsin Hollander. Although these varieties do not appear in all seed catalogs, your seedsman can get them for you if you will ask in time.

Unfortunately, the growers of the frostproof plants do not handle these special varieties as yet; a gardener who has lost cabbage through this disease should grow his plants himself from the varieties that have been named.

Cabbage require rich soil highly manured, and the manure well mixed in by deep breaking. A coat of 2 inches is not too much. Even with such a beginning it will pay well to supply additional nitrogen in the form of nitrate of soda. This should be given as a side-dressing to the rows, at the rate of 1 pound to 100 feet. The first dressing should be given when the plants have begun to grow off, and a second may follow, with profit, two weeks later.

The varieties that may be used if no "yellows" is suspected, are in their order of earliness: Early Jersey Wakefield; Copenhagen Market and Charleston Wakefield; Early Summer and Succession.

The insect and disease enemies that attack cabbage will be dealt with in a later article.

FAVORABLE OUTLOOK FOR POULTRY RAISERS

Poultry prices should compare favorably with prices a year ago and with prices of other Kentucky farm products during the next six months, according to a statement of the department of markets and rural finance of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Storage stocks of poultry are low and market receipts during the spring and summer will be less than a year ago. Demand will be at a low level.

Lighter marketing in the fall of 1931, as a result of a smaller number of chickens that will be raise this year, rising consumption, and possibly improved demand should give additional improvement to the poultry markets in the last part of the year.

The income from poultry and eggs will probably compare favorably with the income from other farm products in Kentucky this year, although high prices are not anticipated says the statement. It therefore appears advisable for farmers to raise enough chicks to mainfain their present laying flocks. Farmers should also not overlook this opportunity to provide the farm with an abundant supply of cheap and healthful products.

The price of eggs during the first half of 1931 will probably be lower than for the same period in 1930. Production promises to be lower than in 1930 but the demand for eggs to be stored will likely be weak, due to losses of storage operators during the last year. Hatching and breaking plants will also offer a weak demand.

Improvement in the egg price trend may be expected, however, during the last half of the year. A smaller number of hens on farms, better storage stocks and heavy consumption stimulated by retail prices which have already shown sharp decline will be favorable and egg prices should show at least the normal fall seasonal rise.

MAKE LAMBS GOOD TO SECURE PREMIUM

Appeals are being made to farmers to trim, dock and carefully finish lambs before selling them this year. Packers, buyers experienced sheep raisers, the College of Agriculture and other agencies are stressing the wisdom of giving more than ordinary care to lambs this year, in order to secure the premium paid for high quality.

Farmers is competing states have learned that it pays well to trim and dock, declares Richard C. Miller of the College of Agriculture. He fears that Kentucky may lose some of its prestige unless every effort is made this year to market choice lambs.

R. S. Matheson, packer buyer, says "Choice quality Kentucky lambs stand at the top of all lambs in this country. The value of docking and castrating cannot be stressed too strongly. With lower prices for all farm products, there is still a premium being for quality, and farmers must do all possible to secure this extra price."

Cecil Embry, of the Bourbon Stock Yards, Louisville: "During 1930 I bought 90,000 lambs. The price I paid for ewes and wethers was fully $1 a hundred higher than for buck lambs. I urge 100 per cent trimming of lambs this year."

F. C. Giltner, Eminence, Ky., farmer and stock raiser, says that "Nothing the farmer can do at this season of the year will produce higherwages for the time expended than the few hours required to dock and trim his crop of lambs. Packers pay $1 to $2 a hundred less for buck lambs and prefer ewe and wether lambs at the higher price."

WHAT TO PRODUCE IN 1931

What farmers should produce this year has been asked the county agent and others many times this winter and early spring. A survey of leading farmers, bankers and a summary of the outlook report prepared by the Economics and Marketing departments indicates that a few general principles for what ever is raised should befollowed out.

1—Produce what your farm and equipment is best adapted. Don't try to change to something else..

2—Produce at low cost. Keep down the cost of production. Individual farms represents a greater difference in the cost of production than any other one factor.

3—Make quality first aim and quantity second. Don't try to over produce but what you do, aim to do well.

4.—Raise a good garden. Produce as near as possible all the food necessary for family consumption. Preserve and store a good supply of food for next winter.

5.—Before attempting to enlarge too much on any one commodity consult the Market Outlook for that product. Market Outlook report for all leading agricultural commodities is available at the county agent's office.

The above recommendations may look simple but they are fundamental. Some may think that there was an attempt to dodge the question but with the exception of including plenty of hard work and thought the question is covered.

POINT PLEASANT

(Omitted Last Week)

Mrs. A. D. Hunter entertained on Feb. 28th for Mr. Hunter's birthday, also for Mrs. W. D. Carder whose birthday occurs in the same month, ach receiving several nice and useful presents. The evening was very pleasantly spent in cards and music, also the wholesome lunch that the hostess had prepared for the occasion was very muchly enjoyed by all. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Slaline and daughter, of Loveland Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. C. Reeves and family, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Marsh, Miss Lorena Regenbogen, of Ludlow; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dolwick and family, Mrs. Kate Dolwick, Prof. and Mrs. R. V. Lentz, of Constance: Miss Mabel Dolwick, Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Riddell and family, Mr. and Mrs. hayman LGoodridge Goodridge and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wash Tanner, Raymond Carder, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Powell and sonn, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Carder and daughter, also the host and hostess. All left at a late hour wishing Mr. Hunter many more returns for the same occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Wernz spent last Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. James Huston and son and Mr. and Mrs. John Huston, of Cincinnati.

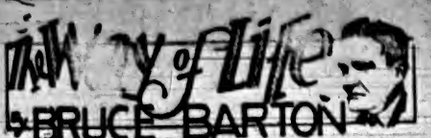
Worth Kelso, of Detroit, Michigan, is spending a few days with his sister Mrs. H. H. Souther.

Miss Mabel Dolwick and Miss Edith Carder attended the Palace Theatre last Monday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Souther and family spent Sunday with relatives here.

Excuse for Idleness

It is idleness that creates impossibilities; and where men care not to do a thing, they shelter themselves under a persuasion that it cannot be done.—South.



Habits of Land Crabs

Some land dwelling crabs of the mud flats dig very intricate burrows with labyrinthine cross and side galleries. Some species live a communal life. Each crab has his own burrow, but each has a passage leading into a large central hall which seems to be a community gathering place. Others are intensely individualistic. Each crab builds an elaborate labyrinth under the mud, considers it his own home and vigorously defends it.

Economic Injury

Injury of individuals almost always happens with economic readjustment of conditions. For instance, when the fertile lands of the Mississippi valley were tapped by building railways from the East, the cheap wheat from these lands began to enter the markets of the East, where the price of wheat had been relatively high. The result was to lower the price in the East. This reduction in price injured the New England farmer, who could not produce wheat as cheaply as the Western farmer, but who could produce other things which the Western farmer could not produce as cheaply as he could wheat. Injury of individuals almost always happens with economic readjustment of conditions.

New Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

NAZARETH

I was at Deerfield Academy visiting my boy, and on the way back I had an hour between trains at Northhamptom. It was Sunday evening. The main street was almost deserted. I walked into a side street and past the little two-family house where Calvin Coolidge lived until a few weeks ago.

I went around to the old building in which he and his law partner used to have their modest offices. I stood in front of the square town hall. It was interesting to think of the days when he was mayor. One could picture him coming slowly up the street after breakfast.

"Morning, Cal," people would say.

"Morning, he would answer.

And a stranger in the town would probably have exclaimed: "Is that your mayor, that quiet little fellow? He doesn't look like much."

If any one had suggested that the quiet little fellow might one day be President of the United States, the laughter would have echoed from one end of Main Street to the other.

A few years later, when Coolidge had become governor of Massachusetts, a merchant in Boston named Frank Stearns began to make the presidential suggestion. He came to New York and persuaded a few of us Amherst graduates that the thing was not impossible.

Even then the idea was usually greeted with smiles, especially by folks in Massachusetts. "That's all right for you fellows in New York," they said. "But distance lends enchantment. We are his neighbors; we know him."

And one of the wisest men in the Commonwealth remarked to the son of Frank Stearns: "Calvin Coolidge is nothing but a figment of your father's imagination."

Nazareth is the immortal illustration of the attitude of the home town. After Jesus had gone out into the world and become famous; after He had performed His miracles in Capernaeum and even in Jerusalem. He went back home.

A crowd of His old neighbors greeted Him in the synagogue, but there was no pride or confidence in their attiude. Their skeptical expressions spoke louder than words. "You may have fooled them in those other towns, but we know you. You are only the boy who used to work in the carpenter shop." And the record says sadly; "He could do there no mighty work, because of their unbelief."

It's a wonderful thing to realize that Greatness is growing up somewhere around us all the time—that the most unprepossessing freckled boy may be a feature consumer. Unfortunately most of us can never believe that the home town could possibly produce anything better than ourselves.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

FIELD NOTES

The physician who is literally in the harness," encounters many very stern difficulties as he goes about doing the best he can for suffering humanity. His is a hand-to-hand encounter with his brother's arch-foes, disease and death. He has little time for sentiment or empty theories: none for political debate; his purpose is embodied in the one principle, that of relief for suffering and the conquering of affliction, fighting even to death's door.

A few days ago I was called to the bedside of a man seventy-five years of age; he had been indisposed two or three days previous and had supposed he had a "cold." A year ago he had hal an attack of dropsy of heart and renal origin; from this he had only in part recovered. He was a very poor risk for the case of "flu" which he had mistaken for a severe cold.

I found him with a well-established case of broncho-pneumonia; the "linnets" were chirping all over one side of the chest; fever and disturbed breathing; a very irregular heart, with feeble pulse at the wrist; cool extremities; "foggy" mental condition; in fact, a condition that boded one chance in ten for recovery, which at best meant the meager existence of an enfeebled old man—but he had a right to that! It was my affair, my business to keep him alive for his aged wife and other loved ones, as long as possible.

Dear reader, I prescribed alcoholic stimulants, to be combined with nourishment; fire cannot burn long without fuel. He used a pint of yhiskey in the next four days! It was not a very difficult matter to control the cough—to keep the temperature with in safe limits Today the old man is recovering at least his usual health.

Neither I nor my aged patients are "wets." We are no wetter than you, dear sir, I care not how "dry" you claim to be. I am very sure my patient would have died, had it not been for the timely use of the alcoholic stimulant, which was here simplest best. My moral is, I permit no theory to step between me and the man who trusts me with his wife. I demand freedom in cases like this.

URGES PRODUCTION OF FOOD ON FARM

The College of Agriculture thru its Extension Service is making an extraordinary effort to bring to the attention of farmers the importance of producing as much as possible of the family food supply on the home farm.

The experiences of the past year and the tragic situation prevailing in many sections at the present time, serve to emphasize the importance of making the farm supply the food for the home.

A generation ago the farm was largely a self sustaining unit, but under modern conditions the farm has become considerable more of a commercial unit producing crops and animals for sale and using money to purchase home supplies including food. This must largely continue but home canning ad drying, stocking the meat house providing dairy and poultry products from the home farm serves a double purpose. It relieves a drain upon the cash income and provides insurance against actual hunger.

Observance of such matters is especially important for tenant farmers or those on small farms in the less fertile sections. Even in a year of drought the spring garden or the fall garden can, with diligence, be made to yield a surplus for preserving against the time of scarcity and the most frugal families carry over a considerable surplus from year to year.

Conditions do not seem to warrant expansion of crop or animal productios for market but so far as home supplies are concerned a good market possibilities is assured at home. Greater possibilities of well planned gardens, improved methods of canning, drying and preserving, better cutting and curing of meats, and even the canning of poultry at seasons when poultry is cheap, are among the matters that the College is trying to emphasize through the use of the radio, the press, circular letters, demonstrations and meetings of farm people.

CORNCRACKER CLUB MEETS

The Corncracker 4-H Club met with H. R. Forkner, county agent and community club leaders at the Constance school house Friday Mch. 6th.

Project captains were selected for the poultry and garden projects, but the election of sewing project captains was postponed until the first sewing meeting. Five new members were voted into the club. They were Betty Hempfling, Earl Dolwick, Harold Dolwick, Harold Prabel, Margery Dolwick and Kenyon Clore.

Friday April 3 was set for the next club meeting.

JESUS, THE WORLD'S SAVIOUR

Golden Text-Acts 10:38

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

The quarterly review gives fine opportunity to fix in mind the studies during the past three months. We are in the midst of a six months course on the Life of Christ and all the lessons are based on the Gospel of Luke. First read chapters 1-ip. Do this with a map at hand. You can supplement by reading parallel and other events in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark and John. Only by getting all the content of each can you obtain the fullest picture of His wonderful life among men.

The title is a fine generalization. After thirty years at Nazareth Jesus announced the Kingdom of God and stated its active principles, as in the Sermon on the Mount. Some of the disciples of John the Baptist left the wilderness preacher to sit at the feet of the Master Teacher. From a large number of such students, Twelve were chosen as apostles and had more intensive training. These men journey often with Jesus. School was held by the wayside in the siesta periods of resting and when they camped at night.

Three general periods define the reception of Jesus. At first He was in Obscurity. Then favorable attention was gained because of His miracles. During the long ministry in Galilee He was in popular favor. This continued until He refused to be their bread making king, after the feeding of the five thousand. After that there was a period of retirement and a still more intensive training of the twelve. During more recent weeks we have been journeying with Him in His approach to Jerusalem through Perea. The Golden Text indicates what it is all about; "Jesus of Nazareth—who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with Him." Acts 10:38.

Hints for the Home

by Nancy Hart

Pears

Peel and core cooking pears and simmer until soft in thin syrup to which the juice of half a lemon has been added. Drain, reduce the syrup by rapid boiling, and add to it two tablespoons of grape juice. Pour over the pears and serve ice cold.

Orange and Apple

Better even than the popular Waldorf salad is the combination of oranges and apples. Slice four oranges, add one apple which has just been cored, peeled, and sliced into thin slices. Squeeze a little orange or lemon juice over the apples as soon as they are sliced to prevent discoloring. Serve on crisp lettuce or watercress with French dressing.

Corn Muffins

Sift together one cup of flour, two teaspoons of baking powder, one-half teaspoon salt, two teaspoons of sugar; add one and a half cups of yellow or white cornmeal. Beat one egg until light and add a cup and a half of milk.

High Compression Still

Attached to the Seal

We still preserve something of the reverence paid to sealing in the ancestral lands from whence we got the custom. For instance, when the lord chancellor in England, or the secretary of state in Canada affixes the "great seal" to a statute, a commission, or any other official document, it becomes something which has all the force of an invisible law. They had that rule in China unnumbered years ago. The great seal of a document, thrust in a man's face, brought him to his knees straightway. It represented the supreme unassailable power—the power that was as nearly divine as could be in this world. Sometimes to this day commanders of ships or fleets are sent off to sea, under sealed orders not to be opened excepting under certain conditions, or on a certain day. It is well understood that to break the seals is disobedience to command would bring the utmost disgrace upon the disobedient officer. The sealed orders become a sacred charge, an honor conferred upon an officer, whose obedience and honesty is confided in by his sovereign, a charge to be respected and defended unto death itself.—Montreal Family Herald.

Hard to Overestimate Evil of Procrastination

We are told, and very true it is, that procrastination is the thief of time. It is not the only condition of the mind that goes around robbing us of time, but this state of procrastination does absorb hours and days and even years, trying to make up its mind just what to do, and then how to do it.

While that is happening, some other and wiser fellow comes along and does it. He hasn't any time to spend bothering about it.

This business of putting off and putting off is all wrong. If it were necessary, it could be understood; but when an individual won't, or can't, make up his mind, he is certainly something of a weakling. Granted it sometimes needs a little courage to make a decision. "Will it be the right one?" is the thought that worries us.

That is largely the make-up of the procrastinator's mind. He has lost the capacity to make a decision. We ought to arrest procrastination, and prevent it doing any more thieving from us.—London Tit-Bits.

Definition of a Snob

Thackeray's definition of a snob is a classic of its kind. It expresses very neatly the characteristics of that regretable type of person. "A snob is that man or woman who are always pretending, before the world, to be something better—especially richer or more fashionable—than they are. It is one who thinks his own position in life contemptible, and is always yearning and striving to force himself into one above, without the education or characteristics which belong to it; one who looks down upon, despises, and overrides his inferiors, or even equals of his own standing, and is ever ready to worship, fawn upon, and flatter a rich or titled man, not because he is a good man, a wise man, or a Christian man; but because he has the luck to be rich or consequential."

Meaning of "Reginald"

Reginald is an old Teutonic name meaning "powerful judgment." It comes from "ragn" or "regn," meaning justice or wise decision, and "wald," "power." When the two words were put together it was found so much easier to omit the "W" at the commencement of the second, so instead of "Ragnwald" or "Reginwald," it was shortened into the familiar Reginald and Reggie. The name was used very much by the Normans and is found many times in the Domesday book, which William the Conqueror ordered to be made. When used in Scotland it is often spelled Ronald. In Italy it becomes Rinaldo, while Rex is the short English variant, the whole set originally coming from the Latin word "rego," "I rule."

Early Hospitals

The establishment of hospitals in the sense in which we understand them now probably occurred in Europe during the Middle ages. Historians differ somewhat on this, but it is generally agreed that the institutions conducted in Europe by various religious orders were perhaps the forerunners of the present-day hospitals. It should be remembered, however, that there were certain places set aside for the treatment of the sick in early Greece. These were more on the order of clinics rather than hospitals in the modern sense of the word. The first hospital in the United States was established a few years after the settlement of New York was made, about 1670.

Andrew Jackson's Protege

"Among the incidents of Talluschatchie," says Augustus Buell in "History of Andrew Jackson," "was the capture of a little Indian boy not more than two years of age, both of whose parents had been killed. General Jackson took charge of him, provided him with clothing and made a captured colored woman, a slave of the Creeks, nurse him. He subsequently sent him and his nurse to the Hermitage. The boy, to whom Jackson gave the name of Lincoyer, lived on the general's plantation until he reached the age of twenty, when he died of what was then called 'quick consumption' (pneumonia)."

Black Fighters' Nickname

"Fuzzy-wuzzy" was the name given by the British soldiers to a black warrior of the Egyptian Sudan.

Add to War's Costs

Among the expenses of every war, according to the Atchison Globe, must be reckoned the cost of erecting the usual war memorials. "They're sort of like trading the mortgage, when it is paid off," it observes.

Strong and Not Workmen

The humble ants, built of almost all many jokes on the chosen, figured prominently in history. An inscription on the great pyramid of Egypt informs the hungry warfarer that nine tons of gold was spent for the purchase of onions, radishes and garlic fed to the workmen who built the mammoth structure.

Early Timber Conservation

Our early colonial history is replete with laws and regulations looking toward forest protection. As settlement spread these primitive forest codes became more widely established. At such an early date as 1626 we find the Plymouth colony passing an ordinance restricting the export of timber from their region.

School Notes

BURLINGTON SCHOOL NOTES

The Courier-Journal Spelling Contest was held at the school last Saturday March 14th. Ethel Snow, of the 7th grade was given the honor to represent Burlington in the contest, with thirteen others to spell against. The contest was won by Madeline Vest, of Verona school. We wish Madeline all the luck in the world and hope she can show that she is a good speller at Louisville.

The High School boys are talking base ball which means that practice will start soon. They have some real good teams to play against this year. According to the schedule such teams as Hebron, Hamilton and others which will be named later.

The Sophomores are busy writing poems which are so good that when you read them they hold you spellbound. A number of our girls have had to leave school for a day or two because of effects has had on them. such as heart trouble, etc. Watch yourself next week for we are going to print one.

Mrs. Lamb's room gave a chapel program last Friday. Quite a number of the parents were out. Come again and bring some one with you.

The Junior and Senior Classes are preparing for a very interesting chapel program for which the date will be given soon. This will be a dramatization in detail of Longfellow Evange line.

The Burlington High School Debating team met the Piner Hi School Debating team at Piner last Thursday night, which was a draw.

The General Science Class this year is very progressive with such inventors as Elma Aylor and Charles Hughes, who have made electric motors that have proved a success.

5th and 6th Grades

Harry Cook won the spelling certificate for the best speller in the 6th grade and Warren Kirkpatrick won the certificate for the 5th grade.

Kenneth Griffith is back in school after an absence of six weeks.

At the regular March 1931 meeting of the Board of Directors of the Northern District Warehousing Corporation, it was determined by the Board of Directors to make a cash distribution among the stockholders of record April 1st 1931, of such cash as said Corporation now has on hand after deducting anticipated operating expenses for the year 1931.

It is anticipated that this distribution will not be less than 6 per cent and it will require from three to six months to prepare the checks for such distribution.

Deaths

WILSON HARPER HOOD

Wilson Harper Hood, (known to his many friends as Dick) son of John W. Hood and Lucretia Ann Hood. Born Dec. 19th, 1860. Died March 5th, 1931, at the age of 70 years 2 months and 16 days. He was born and reared and lived all his life in Constance precinct. He was married to Ellie Castinetta Dec. 1891 who preceded him in death 27 years ago. He leaves to mourn his passing away one sister Ellen Russell, of California, one brother John W. Hood of Bromley, Ky., three sons Luther Lloyd, John Victor and Frank Leslie. Three grand-daughters, one grandson and a large number of relatives and friends.

The family wishes to thank the neighbors and friends for their kindness, and we thank Dr. Nunnelley and the Undertaker Mr. Wilfred A. Bullock for their services and also Rev. McCord, of Erlanger, Ky.

TO THE DEPARTED LOVED ONE

To the woman whose sweet smiles were the light of my life, and whose laughter was sweeter to me than a melody by an angel on a golden harp. To the noble-hearted woman who gave up all the rest of the world for me and linked her life with mine, and turned from the altar to face eternity for me and with me—who has been my bosom companion and soul mate when fortune smiled upon me, and my tender ministering angel in sickness and sorrow—whose purity surpasses the virgin snow in the unsullied mountain peak, and whose love for me has strewn my life's rugged path with the blossoms of wholesome joy. To the woman whom God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from this world and me and mine, that I, in my loss might realize more deeply my duty to God and man.

May I strive harder in this world so that when my name is called I will join her in that Celestial Home above—that home not made with hands, but eternal in the Heavens from whose bourn no traveler returns.

J. WAITE CROSS

LOTTIE GIBBS

Lottie Gibbs, wife of Mr. Leonard Gibbs, of Florence, died at the home of her daughter Mrs. Henry Holtzworth Tuesday night at 9 o'clock. Mrs. Gibbs was sixty-two years of age. She was a sister of Mrs. Edgar Hensley, of Burlington.

She is survived by three brothers Robert, William and Arthur Houston, and one daughter Mrs. Henry Holtzworth, and one granddaughter.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our thanks to all our relatives and friends who by their many acts of kindness, helped us to bear our burdens during the illness and sad hours of our bereavement. When God called to eternal rest our dear loved one Robert A. Brady, who departed this life March 12th, 1931.

We also wish to express our appreciation to the many who remembered him with beautiful floral offerings; the singers for the beautiful songs, Bro. Robert McNeely for his words of consolation, Bro. William Smith for his impressive prayer and to C. Scott Chambers for the kind and efficient manner in which he conducted the funeral.

The Bereaved Family

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our many friends who came to us in our sad hour, in the loss of our dear mother and wife Rachel Cross. Especially do we wish to thank Mrs. Madge Riggs, Miss Anna Lee Wilson and Mrs. Alma Head and Dr. Senour for the kind and efficient manner in which they administered to her ever want, and Philip Taliaferro who came to us in the last hour and Bro. DeMoisey, who spoke such kind and consoling words.

Father and Son.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to our many relatives and friends who were so kind and thoughtful to us during the illness and death of our dear mother

MARY JANE GRAVES

We also thank Bro. Heibert for his consoling words, Dr. Nunnelley and cousin Oma Dixon for their kind service. The choir for the beautiful songs, the donors of the floral offerings and W. A. Bullock for his kind and efficient manner in conducting the services.

THE BEREAVED FAMILY

Hugh Stephens and Hubert Ryle, of Rabbit Hash, spent Monday in Burlington.

Lee R. McNeely and Perry Presser spent a few hours in Burlington last Monday.

LOCAL HAPENINGS

Capt. Ed Maurer and family of Louisville, Ky., and Julius Smith and wife, of Latonia, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Smith and attended the funeral of Bobby Brady at Belleview Sunday afternoon.

Dr. M. A. Yelton is remodeling the dwelling he recently purchased from James D. Acra. He will have his office in the dwelling.

County Attorney B. H. Riley was at the Court House for a short time Monday. He is recovering from a minor surgical operation, and will not be able to be at his office for some time.

Dr. J. E. Dobyns has tested in Boone County, to March 1st, 1931, 11,378 cattle for tuberculosis. The tests are being made under the supervision of the State Livestock Sanitory Board. Dr. D. E. Westmoreland State Veterinarian is in charge of this work.

W. M. U. MEETING

On Thursday of last week March 12th, the W. M. U. of Big Bone met and held their regular meeting with Mrs. May and Mary Hubbard. Twenty-one present, 11 of them being members.

We observed week of prayer. Devotional was held by our pastor Rev. Johnson. We also received our seals for Mission book which we took last month. (leader of stewardship). After devotional and business was transacted Rev. Johnson made us a very interesting talk on Missions, trying to impress it upon our minds how important Mission work was of today.

We will hold our next meeting with Mrs. Bertha Horton at her home on April 9th.

We always enjoy having members from other societies to come and meet with us.

We want to let our light shine.

MRS. PAUL AYLOR, Chairman.

THE SILVER LEADERS

The Silver Leaders 4-H Club of Hamilton, organized Feb. 4th, with 35 members enrolled. The following officers were elected: Sara Aylor, president; Lloyd Kelly Jones, Vice-President; and Mary Lou Yelton, Secretary. We are planning another meeting this week and hope every member will be present.

Our club was very successful in its work last year. Every member worked hard. We hope that we may be able to make this year even better than last year. All we need to do is to have enthusiastic interest on the part of every member and leader.

MAYME HAMILTON, Member of Publicity Committee

WILL PREACH AT UNION SUNDAY

Due to the exchange of ministers in Northern Ky., Baptist churches for the morning service of Sunday Mch. 22nd, Rev. Shirley Spahr, pastor of Crescent Springs Baptist church will supply at the Union Baptist church. Rev. Spahr was formerly active in the work of First Church, Newport, Ky.

The night service at the Union church brings the first of a series of sermons to be delivered by the pastor Rev. V. L. Stephenson, on "Viewing Christian Truths Thru Secular Occupations." The subject for March 22 is—The Carpener. Other sermons in the series are:

March 29—The Beauty Specialist.
April 5—The Lighthouse Keeper.
April 12—The Banker.
April 19—The Master Tailor.
April 26—The Successful Farmer.

The members of the Senior B. Y. P. U. are arranging to have special music in keeping with each subject during this series of Sunday night services.

For Those Who Aspire

It is better to be an interesting personality than to be an efficient machine.—American Magazine.

Costly Thimble

Some years ago a London jeweler was paid nearly $15,600 for a thimble, which the pampered wife of a South African magnate insisted on having made for her. This was one mass of precious gems.

Meal From Bean

Carob meal is made from a bean, which resembles the lima bean, but is of reddish brown color and tender enough to chew. The pods containing the beans grow up trees similar to locust trees which are found in Mexico and the southwestern United States. Carob meal is used in this country as stock feed.

Warfare Aided by Nature

One of the biggest air raids of the World war was carried out by the aid of the aurora borealis or northern lights. On that night the whole of the North sea was a white glow under this strange radiance, the nature of which is still a mystery to men of science.

Curious Old Mixture of Mourning and Feasting

The Mohammedans observe a strange custom of visiting the dead. Friday is the principal visiting day and great crowds come to spend the day in the houses where they are later to spend eternity.

There are two annual Mohammedan festivals, the two Bairams, when all cemeteries are crowded. Every Mohammedan who can beg or borrow enough to make the trip then visits the tombs of his relatives.

On these solemn occasions the measured and melancholy sounds of mourning are very impressive, but the two or three days spent in the city of the dead are not altogether unpleasant. The mourners bring with them all things needed for comfort and for feasting, so that the Betram is very much like a picnic. The women carry palm branches to scatter over the tombs, and bread and cakes to be distributed to the poor. The wealthy mourners are attended by their servants. The large crowds seem to derive much pleasure from thus coming together.

The dead of the Mohammedans are buried in arched vaults wrapped only in burial sheets—so they may sit up and talk with angels that will come to visit them. They are laid on their right sides with their heads toward Mecca.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Noble Birth Signified by Saxon Title "Earl"

"'Earl' is our oldest title of nobility," says an article in the London Daily Mail. "The early Saxon 'eorl' meant a person of noble birth, as opposed to the ordinary freeman or 'ceorl.' With the rise of a nobility based on service rather than blood (the gesiths and thegns) the eorls slipped into the background, but Canute used the title for the governors of the great provinces of Wessex, Mercia, Northumbria, etc., which had been kingdoms before England was united.

"After the Norman conquest earl became the title of the head of certain counties, carrying with it the right to a share (the third-penny) of the dues of the county court. But there were only a few of such earls, and they were very soon ousted from their administrative functions by the sheriffs, leaving the rank merely titular.

"But during this short period they bore a close likeness to the French count; and since the Norse earl had no special feminine other than the vague lady, their wives acquired the title 'countess.'"

First English in America

Walker's "Essentials in English History" says: "The beginning of English colonization is due to the statesmanship of Walter Raleigh. Although erratic and visionary in many respects, Raleigh saw clearly that attacks on Spanish forts or vessels were a poor method of fighting Spain. He appears to have been the first to conceive the idea of opposing Spain by invading her special domain, the American continent, and erecting there against Spanish dominance a lasting bulwark by planting colonies along its coast. Drake might plunder and burn, but Raleigh proved to plant and settle. In 1585 he sent Sir Richard Grenville to Roanoke island with a colony of 100 persons; in 1587 he sent John White with 150 more, and although both these attempts failed, yet they led in the next reign to the more lasting work of the Virginia company."

Ancient Glass

The residents of ancient Pompeii used glass in their windows but as late as the Fourteenth century Richard II issued a writ to scour England to find enough glass to repair the windows in just one castle, and near the close of the Seventeenth century all of the great towns in Italy, with the exception of Genoa, used paper in their windows. For centuries glass was regarded as a luxury, and was taxed accordingly, down to recent times. Discovered by the Phoenicians, according to Pliny the Second, modern manufacturing methods have made glass so common today that no one gives it a thought. But the windows of America's first homes were provided only with parchment or oiled paper.

Working Under Water

It cannot be stated exactly under how much pressure men can work within a caisson. Pressure within a caisson used for subaqueous workers must be increased by one atmosphere of 15 pounds per square inch for every 33½ feet that the caisson is submerged below the surface. Hence, at a depth of 100 feet a worker in a caisson must be subjected to a pressure of 60 pounds per square inch. At the St. Louis bridge, where a pressure was employed equal to 4½ atmospheres, out of 600 workmen 119 were affected with caisson disease and 14 died.

One Use for Poetry

A group of women gathered at a literary tea in New York city were discussing a certain collection of poems. "Oh, yes," said the hostess—she was by no means the least among the literary personages—"I have already worn out one volume; this is my second, and it is getting worn out, too. I always have a volume of poetry on the telephone stand, and read it while waiting for a number; it keeps me from losing my temper. It's as good a use for poetry—for an anthology of poetry—as any, isn't it?"

Recipe for "Frykasie" in Old Colonial Times

Southern cooks of Colonial times may have used what today appears as queer spelling, but memories of the meals they served to bewigged gentlemen of the times continue to dominate portions of the modern American menu.

Recently a relic explorer thumbed the pages of a Colonial cook book and found a recipe for "Frykasie a la Grandmother" with the following wording:

"Take ye fowls, cut them in pieces and clean them. Season with pepper and salt, a little mace, nutmeg, cloves, some parsley, a little bit of onion.

"Let them lay two hours, then flour them well, fry in sweet butter hot before you put them in. Fry fine brown. Wash ye pan and put them in again with a pint of gravy. Let them symmer in ye gravy. Take ye yolks of three eggs with a little grated nutmeg and a little juice of lemon, and two spoonfuls of wine. Shake it over the fire until it is as thick as cream, pour over ye fricksie, and so serve it to ye table hott."

Stockings Might Have Fitted Lincoln's Hands

Even Abraham Lincoln had to bow a little to prevailing styles, a fact which recalls a highly amusing incident that happened on the eve of a big White House reception. It was one of those affairs at which the President would be compelled to shake hands with thousands of people and Mrs. Lincoln sent out for a box of white silk gloves, both to protect Mr. Lincoln's hands and to make sure that by frequent changes he would look neat and fresh throughout the reception.

The gloves came but were far too small to fit the mighty hands of Lincoln. An emergency call was sent out. All Washington sent gloves but none were large enough. Mrs. Lincoln was greatly vexed and on the verge of tears when the President turned to her and said with a chuckle:

"Better get me some of your stockings; they're bigger."—Los Angeles Times.

Gibraltar in History

The rock of Gibraltar after centuries of conflict between the Moors and Spain was formally incorporated under the Spanish crown in 1502. It was taken from Spain by the allied British and Dutch forces July 24, 1704, and Sir George Rooke hoisted the British flag and took possession in the name of Queen Anne. Abortive effort for the recovery of the rock both by a military and peaceful arbitration was made by Spain for many years. During the American war for Independence an extreme effort was made, backed by France, and in 1779 one of the most memorable sieges of history took place. In 1783 a final engagement occurred and peace was declared. Since that time the rock has been in the possession of the British crown and has the status of a crown colony.

Poetic Indian Names

Indian names given to many of Maryland's rivers show that the Indian was a poetic fellow, says an article in the Baltimore Sun. Patapsco was originally Potapskut and meant "at the jutting ledge of rocks," referring to a cluster of rocks at the river mouth. Potomac and Susquehanna first were named from the tribes living on their banks. Potomac means "the people who come and go;" Susquehanna, "the people with the booty taken in war;" Magothy, "small plain devoid of timber;" Nanticoke, "marsh and upland;" Wicomico, "where the houses are building;" Onancock, "foggy place;" Choptank, "great blue water;" Monocacy, "stream containing many large bends;" Youghiogheny, "stream taking a roundabout course."

Work That Will Endure

Modern sculptors believe in hard work. Specimens of their work have recently been exhibited exquisitely fashioned out of stones that are almost as hard as a diamond, and certainly considerably more resistant than carrara. Work of this sort is all the more remarkable when we remember that, until comparatively recently, the modern fashion in sculpture was to model in clay. The master's model was then copied in marble or stone by means, the old methods, which gave us the gargoyles of the medieval cathedrals, are now coming back, however, and sculptors are again working direct on the stone.

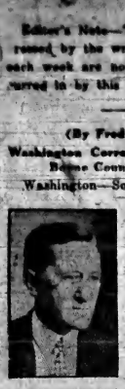
Water-Heating Systems

The process of water heating remained in disuse, probably because of the expense of installation, for nearly 2,000 years after its invention. Ornate perfected what was called a "hypocauste" for heating the rooms of the ancient Roman dwellings and for heating the water in the famous baths through pipes or flues.

But the early settlers in this country heated their water in tubs placed on their stoves, and warmed their houses with fireplaces.

Old King Cole

Little Alice was having her bedtime story. Her grandmother told her about "Mary had a little lamb," and so other about a cousin, "Mary Alice and her pet dog." Then grandmother said: "Are there any more Mary stories that you want to hear?" Alice replied:



"Yes; tell about Old King Cole, he was a Mary old soul."

Meeting Of Progressives Brings Cheer To Democrats

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Hobson)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

Washington—Some of those who read these lines listened in" and heard the noise; others read the reviews of the professional critics. But Washington was the audience actually present at each of two recent all-star performances. One was "The "Follies of 1928," staged by the Democratic National Committee; the other was "The Scandals of 1931," presented by veteran thespians, unionized and "incorporated" under the name of Progressive Republicans—with accent on the Progressive.

Of course, here in the District of Columbia we are denied the right to vote. Fortunately (or us) as yet they have not taken away from us the use of our vocal organs, and from Republican house-tops comes the cry that the party's managers would do well to grasp the seemingly available opportunity for chorties of fiendish glee over the threatened split and other doubt and difficulty creating distractions which were brought to light at the meeting of the Democratic National Committee. From the other side of the political fence comes the retort that they would better laugh while they have a chance, for their own troubles lie clear ahead.

Before very long they will be called upon to define their attitude toward Presient Hoover. It goes without saying that unless for some reason not at this moment apparent he decides to eliminate himself as a candidate he will be renominated. That is admitted even by Republicans who fought him at every turn, overrode his policies, spurned the advice, ridiculed his recommendations However, it is one thing to nominate him, quite another thing to nominate him, quite another thing to write eulogistic planks for the platform. Even before the Republicans in Congress juggernauted over the President's veto of the veterans' bill the Republican press called attention to this rather awkward situation.

Senator Arthur H. Vanderberg, of Michigan, at once enlisted in the rescue corps. With vehmence he denied that Republicans could be charged with "repudiating" their own President because they refused to stand by him in one of his most outstanding and vital decisions. Wherefore it would appear that a group of self-styled Republicans can vote against the President, aggonize and humiliate him, and at the same time clasp him fondly to its breast and resolve to support him in any event and at any cost.

The spellbinders may be able to make pretty good political dope out of that situation, but when it comes to platform building, and it has to be written down for calm and deliberate perusal, someone is going to come to the conclusion that "that's something else again."

In that other 6-reel thriller, "The Scandals of 1931," headliner George W. Norris, of Nebraska, rapid-fire artist, painted a dark and gloomy picture of conditions in the U. S. and called upon the other members of his union (none of whom is unemployed) to find remedies. The Nebraska Senator said that while millions of people "are suffering from hunger, an apparently over-supply of food has been produced by the toiling farmers, who are unable to obtain a financial return sufficient to compensate them for the cost of production." He described a condition of "slavery" in this country with labor manacled by means of judicial decrees. He pictured the "power trust" with its "slimy fingers" enmeshed in the "warp and woof of human life." Regulation, he said has failed because "the regulators are regulated by this monopolistic trust."

Referring to Senator Watson, of Indiana, Republican leader of the Senate, as "Little Jimmy Watson" and as a "lobbyist" before he became a Senator, the Nebraskan suggested that Senator Watson might propound his questionaire "to his own political machine" instead of sending it to the Progressives. Senator Norris was referring, he said, to published accounts of a questionaire which Senator Watson had sent to him from New York. The Watson letter called upon Senator Norris and the Progressive conference to say where they stood on prohibition, an oil embargo, immigration, Government ownership of railroads and many other controversial subjects.

The Watson questionaire to be in Washington to be not necessarily an attempt to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery, but as something which may do for the Progressive conference what the Progressives have undertaken in the last Congress and in several previous Congresses to do for the Republican organization of the Senate. The Progressives may assert that Senator Watson, a standpat Republican, has no business catechising those who believe in "Pogressive principles." But if they do, they are laying themselves open to the charge that they are dodging questions which either now confront the country or will inevitably confront it soon or later.

The question of prohibition and an oil embargo are both to come before the next session of Congress. Mr. Watson would like to know, and possibly is justified in inquiring, what the progressive program is to be in regard to these matters, which, after all, are considered important by a very large number of people in this country.

To the unbiased observer, each performance disclosed Ziegfeldian, not to say Weberfieldian, forensic ingenuity.

BOONE COUNTY

the experienced fruit growers will put on a more complete spray schedule. Peaches should be sprayed with lime-sulfur immediately to prevent leaf curl.

Many helpful suggestions were brought out at the above meetings. They were both enjoyable and instructive. Those growers who could not attend, were missed and it is hoped that they can be present when future meetings are held.

BUTTER FAT CONTEST

Those 4-H dairy calf club members who are interested in the state butter fat production contest are urged to notify the county agent immediately.

Members who enter the contest will weigh the milk from their cow and night and morning and keep a record of all feed costs. Samples of milk will be taken and tested under the supervision of the county agent once each month. The winners will receive a prize trip to the National Dairy Show at St. Louis this fall with all expenses paid.

Plymouth Rock

The inscription upon Plymouth rock is the date, 1620. The rock split in 1774. On July 4, 1834, a part of it was removed to Pilgrim hall, Plymouth. The other half was covered with a granite canopy and surrounded by an iron fence. This part may still be seen in the harbor.

African's Immunity

Although he seems to lead a carefree existence, the life of the East African native is not a joy unalayed, but scientific investigation has recently shown that he is entirely immune from the ravages of scarlet fever and diphtheria. Efforts to plant the germs in his system failed.

Football Reminiscence

The first football game played in the old Rose bowl at Pasadena, Calif., was on January 1, 1902, between Michigan and Stanford. The score was 49 to 0 in favor of Michigan. The first game in the present Rose bowl was played on New Year's day, 1922.

Odd Malay Belief

The Malay has a novel explanation to offer concerning the cause of earthquakes, which are quite plentiful in that part of the world. They will tell you that the earth is a sort of egg, resting on the horns of a bull. When the bull gets angry and shakes his head an earthquake results.

Dangerous Life Period

Matrimony's most dangerous period is about the twenty-fifth year, declares a German expert, who adds that many of the belated marriage tragedies occur because husband or wife becomes too devoted to the children and neglect the other partner.

The Match in History

The word "match" is probably from the Greek and Latin "myxa," meaning a nozzle of a lamp. In 1337 we find reference in literature to matches, the name being applied to the wick of a candle or lamp. The earliest reference to matches in their present sense is found in 1530.

Must Look for Enmity

He who performs his duty in a station of great power must needs incur the utter enmity of many and high displeasure of more.—Atterbury.

Hymns Who Popularity

In the St. Nikolai church in Oberndorf, near Salzburg, Austria, on Christmas eve in 1818, "Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht," was sung for the first time. The curate, Joseph Mohr, had composed the text and the teacher and organist, Franz Xaver Gruber, the melody. To the fact that the little organ in Oberndorf had broken down is due the widespread popularity of the hymn. The organ builder, Karl Mauracher, of Fugen, in Zillertal, had been sent for to make the necessary repairs. He heard the air and hummed it in his native country, where it became very popular in a short time.

There were four brothers, by name Strafer, who went to the Big German markets every year selling products of the Tyrolese home industry, and at the concerts of Tyrolese songs they sang the air which had become so popular "back home." Thus the melody was introduced to the North, from whence it started around the world.—Detroit News.

Explains Why Senator Was Great Politician

When Tom Platt and Chauncey Depew were the senators from New York, they represented two widely different types of politicians. Platt accomplished most of his work "behind the scenes," while Depew was famous for his wit as a public speaker. A friend of Platt's once brought up this point on one of the occasions when Platt did make a speech.

"I don't understand," he said, "why you are so sure your speech made a deep impression. All you got was a little polite applause and not a single cheer."

"That's just the point," explained Platt. "I am one of those fellows who don't say much, but when I talk, it's important. My constituents know this and they'd far rather listen to what I say than to hear themselves applaud."

Self-Winding Watches

Napoleon Bonaparte always carried a watch that wound itself, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. Such watches often have been made since his day, some by well-known makers, and many still are in use. We may well ask how any watch can wind itself, for such a thing seems to savor of perpetual motion, but the matter is really very simple. The self-winding watch is built on the principal of the pedometer. A weighted lever is kept in its normal position by a curved spring, so weak that the ordinary motion of the body, as in walking, causes the lever to fall. The spring then returns it, and so an oscillating motion is kept up, which, by means of ratchet wheels, winds the spring a little at a time, sufficient to keep the watch going when the wearer is still. Every step helps to wind the watch.

Credit to Aristotle

By study we learn that the two greatest men of the world were both horsemen. Aristotle was the world's first schoolmaster and the world's first scientist. He taught school, we read, in the open, and all of his pupils were taught to ride horseback. Aristotle is identified as the tutor of Alexander the Great. It was none other than Aristotle who taught Alexander to ride the wild horse, Bucephalus. Aristotle wrote a book of a thousand or more pages on horses. He said, in that book, all there was to say of the subject and any man writing at length of the horse since then dares not venture far without quoting from Aristotle.

Virgin Islands

On March 31, 1917, the United States took possession of the former Danish West Indies, renamed the Virgin Islands of the United States. The ratifications of the treaty of sale took place on January 17, 1917, confirming the purchase by the United States of these islands from Denmark for $25,000,000. The first permanent settlement in the Virgin islands was effected on the island of St. Thomas on May 25, 1672, by an expedition of the Danish West Indies company under Gov. Jorgen Iverson. From that time the islands were continuously owned by Denmark until their sale to the United States, with the exception of brief occupations by British warships.

Silent 30 Years

Samuel Frommer, a business man known as "the silent man," has died at the house of the "miracle rabbi" in Czortkow, Spain. Frommer had not spoken a single word in 30 years, but lived a most retired life and spent much of his time in prayer. He had confessed to a priest that he had hastily told his wife that he wished she was burnt to death, and shortly after that she met death in a blaze in a fire at his home. He made a vow to the priest that he would keep silence and spend his time in prayer.

Famous Gothenburg

Gothenburg, second largest city in Sweden, owes its eminent position to its illustrious founder, Gustavus Adolphus, who was one of history's most famous generals. In addition he wrote excellent prose and his "Speeches" hold an important place in the literature of the Seventeenth century. To visit Gothenburg without seeing its gardens is unthinkable. Students of medieval history, folklore and geology revel in Gothenburg as a storehouse of legend and history.

Few Widows Joins Suit of Cowing for Body

Practically every primitive tribe dwelling in the tropics that has been studied by scientific observers has been found to wear some form of bodily covering of the loin region, either in the form of paints of various colors, native cotton strands of beads of various materials, barken bast or bark cloth, or of woven girdles or sprouts of cotton or other vegetable or animal fibers. The inhabitants of the Nicobar Islands and of Central East Africa are apparently of all tribes the most free from loin coverings of all sorts. Reasons given for the wearing of loin coverings vary. Native modesty is usually present in some form, even apart from any influence that may be attributed to the whites. Tribal and ceremonial painting or tattooing is often a causative factor, and may supplement a woven girdle worn for entirely different purposes, namely, for the insertion of the hilt of a knife and as a place of attachment for burdens. Most primitive peoples are burden carriers. Protection against insect pests is often attempted through the agency of breech clouts. Tradition and native styles usually dictate the use of certain forms of loin covering, even to the minutest detail.

Alaska's Official Flag Designed by Schoolboy

A contest was held by the American Legion, Department of Alaska, in the public, private and native schools in the territory for the purpose of selecting an official flag for Alaska. A law passed by the legislature of the Department of Alaska on May 2, 1927, provided that the design of the official flag (the winning design) is eight gold stars in a field of blue, so selected for its simplicity, its originality and its symbolism. The blue, one of our national colors, typifies the evening sky, the blue of the sea and of mountain lakes and of wild flowers that grow in Alaskan soil, the gold being significant of the wealth that lies hidden in Alaska's hills and streams. And the law also provides that the governor shall cause the original design to be encased properly and placed in the Alaska Historical museum, and that due credit be given to Benny Benson, aged thirteen years, a student in the seventh grade of the Mission Territorial school, near Seward, Alaska, the designer of the flag, herein described and adopted as the official flag of Alaska.

Couldn't "See" Early Rising

It is said that Marshal Soult (who has lately become minister of war in France) has strange hours for transacting business, and we have no doubt his habits must prove rather annoying to place hunters. The marshal makes appointments for four o'clock in the morning with those who request to have audiences, said an article in a Paris paper a century ago, on which the London Times commented: "The marshal has more than once shown a weak subserviency to public opinion, but he is not a fool nor a coxcomb, and the regulation here alluded to would imply that he was both. We are great advocates for early rising, but we never knew a very early riser who was not asleep, either physically or mentally, half the day."

Old Historical Records

According to Larned's "Seventy Centuries," the oldest historical records that have been found are inscriptions in the tombs of Egyptian kings belonging to the first dynasty, dating back to about 4,700 years B. C. Other historians have traced a recorded history of Babylonia to a point before 4,500 B. C. It is believed that the sale of Joseph to the Egyptians occurred while the Hykos or "Shepherd kings" were rulers of Egypt, somewhere between 2000 and 1900 B. C., though no definite date can be given. The period of the pharaohs extends from the time of Menes, the first king of united Egypt, who reigned possibly as early as 4770 B. C., down to the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great, in 331 B. C.

Gigantic Grapevines

Those whose knowledge of the grapevine is limited to the often renewed, or at least seldom aged orchards of this continent, may perhaps wonder at its being included among trees. In older countries than any in America, however, where the vine has been an object of cultivation for hundreds or thousands of years, the trunk of a grapevine grows to quite a large size, and is in some eastern lands trained to grow as a standard for some twenty or more feet in height.

She'd Better [illegible] Him

A story coming from [illegible] by way of the Atchison Globe tells of a man who failed to arrive in time for his wedding and left the bride-to-be waiting at the church. Another day was set. The guests assembled, the preacher was ready, the wedding music was played. Again the bride waited at the church. And again the man did not come! Finally the bride-to-be said, fiercely, "Well, tain't the pants this time, 'cause I bought him a new pair."

ESSEX

THE FINEST PERFORMING SIX HUDSON EVER BUILT

Competes with the LOWEST in Price . . . Challenges the FINEST in Quality

$595

Essex is the only low-priced car that follows the motor design of the highest-priced cars in using light-weight moving parts and in engine speed

This design enables Essex to develop more power at the same motor speed and the same power at a lower motor speed than the "Low-Speed" cars. It permits greater power in proportion to weight, better balancing of crankshaft loads, improved bearing lubrication, more efficient cooling and enables Essex motors to outlast low-speed engines.

Essex introduces fine-car style and Super-Six smoothness to the low-priced field. It is strongly built to assure lasting satisfaction and enduring dependability. It challenges the performance of any six and matches the economy of cars most noted for low operating cost. It gives you Rare Riding Comfort for the first time at its low price.

Umbrellas Designed to Ward Off Heat of Sun

The first umbrellas were used, not to keep off rain, but to shield against the sun. Their original home was in hot, brilliant climates, and in eastern countries from the earliest times the umbrella was one of the signs of royalty and power. The Mahratta princes of India had, in fact, among their titles "lord of the umbrella."

The early umbrella was a heavy, unwieldy article. It had a long handle and ribs of whalebone or cane. The covering material consisted of oiled silk or cotton, and was very heavy in substance and liable to stick together in the folds.

Gingham was next used as a substitute for the oiled silk, and finally William Sangster patented the use of alpaca as an umbrella-covering material. This was a la 1848, only 83 years ago.

Four years later came the invention of one Samuel Fox, who patented the "Paragon" rib formed of a thin strip of steel rolled into a U or trough section, and today all umbrellas are constructed on this principle.

Nowadays the aim of the manufacturers of umbrellas is to get an article that will not occupy much space, and some of the latest patterns have almost doll-like proportions.

Charleston Famous for Its Fine Old Churches

There are 80 churches in Charleston, S. C., and they range in age from 223 years down. St. Michael's church, where George Washington and the marquis de Lafayette both worshiped on their several visits to the city, was built in 1752. St. Philip's church, completed in 1723, had for centuries in its spire a light which served to warn ships at sea. In its interesting old graveyard is buried Edward Rutledge, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and John C. Calhoun, the South's great statesman.

Also in Charleston is the Huguenot church (French Protestant), said to be the only one of its kind in the United States. Its architecture and its history are interesting and distinctive. St. Andrew's church, built first in 1696 and rebuilt in 1706, and the Goose Creek church, built in 1711, are in the plantation area, less than ten miles from the city.

Selling Their Tresses

In the countries of Europe it is a somewhat common affair to encounter a hair merchant traveling through the countryside and making bids for the hair of women who would rather have the money than their glory crown. One of the largest hair markets in the world is held in the Soho district of London. Dealers from many foreign countries attend this hair fair, and they can tell the quality of a girl's tresses by a quick look or a moment's fingering.

When they strike a bargain with the owner, a local barber steps forward and crops the hair close to the nape of the neck. Sometimes it is of such beauty that as much as $30 or $40 a pound is paid for it.

Germany and Alsace-Lorraine supply most of the fair hair that is wanted. From the south of France and Italy comes the best dark hair in the world.

Odd Methods of Interment

Upright burial was the recognized and traditional form of interment favored by the kings of ancient Ireland. It was not considered fitting that a monarch should be prone, accordingly they were buried erect, clad in their war panoply, and usually with their faces turned toward their enemies. The ancient Irish believed that so long as their kings remained in this position they exercised an evil influence on their foes. So powerful was the belief in this ability that on one occasion the body of a king was disinterred by those hostile to his clan, and placed in another grave, head downward, in order to break the succession of disasters which dogged them while he rested in his grave with face turned toward them.

Pastimes of the Near Great

"An amusing little trick was shown to me yesterday," writes Peter Simple in the London Morning Post. "You take two matches, make a tiny slit in the match box and fix one of them in it, head up. This is the shelf. The other should be provided with limbs by the deft use of a sharp penknife, when it will represent his lady love. Lean it up against the other match so that the heads touch, and then set fire to it in the middle. The result will be a long and ardent kiss such as you see in a Sahara scenario."

I'm sorry, but I still prefer to cut paper dollies.—Detroit News.

Even Dropped "H" Is Silent

In London where quiet is perhaps more esteemed than in other cities, a sound-proof house has been built. The walls, ceilings and floors are of sound-insulating materials, the doors equipped with nonslamming devices, and the windows with silencer ventilators that permit air to enter but exclude sounds. As for the traditional cricket on the hearth, it has probably been trained to do its chirping outside.

Serve a Sandwich Loaf at Your Next Luncheon

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

WHEN the menu for a party meal is being planned, sandwiches almost always fit themselves into some part of it. One reason for this is the fact that so many delicious kinds can be made. For the tea party, or with fruit salads, there are dainty, fancy-shaped sandwiches with a variety of cheese and nut, or sweet fillings. Then we have savory fillings such as Sandwich Relish, chopped Spanish Olives, or celery and Mayonnaise for sandwiches to be served with meat or fish salads. And for parties where men guests must be considered, there are many more substantial hot sandwiches.

The sandwich loaf, which is one of the most popular new sandwiches made during the last few years, first appeared in exclusive tea rooms and restaurants. Women soon captured the art of making it at home, however, for they realized it is not only very attractive in appearance, but most delicious to eat. You will find that sandwich loaf, which may be sliced before the eyes of your guests, makes an excellent party meal when served with coffee.

When you entertain I am sure you will find the following recipes very helpful:

Sandwich Loaf: Slice a loaf of sandwich bread lengthwise, having five slices. The loaf should have a red filling, a green, a white, and a yellow one. Spread the first slice of bread with the red filling, made by combining ground ham and Chili Sauce. Cover with a second slice of bread and spread with the white filling, made by combining the chopped whites of two hard cooked eggs and soft white cheese. Add the third slice of bread and spread with the yellow filling, made by combining the yolks of the two mashed hard cooked eggs with Sandwich Relish. Add the fourth slice of bread and spread with green filling, a combination of chopped green pepper, butter and chopped Spanish Queen Olives. Add the last slice of bread and press firmly together. To cover, or "frost" the sandwich loaf, mash two packages of soft cream cheese, moisten with Mayonnaise Salad Dressing and spread over the top and sides of the loaf. Decorate with slices of Stuffed Spanish Olives. Chill for at least one hour before slicing.

Salad Club Sandwiches: 1 cup minced cooked chicken, veal or pork; 1 cup finely minced celery; ¼ cup Stuffed Spanish Olives, sliced; 1 hard cooked egg, chopped; ½ cup Mayonnaise Salad Dressing.

Mix together the meat and celery. Add the sliced olives, hard cooked egg, and Mayonnaise Salad Dressing. Spread this mixture between slices of hot buttered toast, or in heated rolls that have been buttered.

Hot Minced or Deviled Ham Sandwich: Left-over ham; 2 tablespoons butter; 2 tablespoons flour; 1 cup milk; dash of pepper; 2 tablespoons India Relish or Sweet Gherkins, chopped.

Cut ham finely and sprinkle it generously on slices of toast. Pour over the hot toast and ham a sauce made by melting the butter and blending with flour. Then add milk and pepper and stir until thickened. Last add India Relish or Gherkins. This makes a creamy, well flavored dressing to be served over the toast and ham. Garnish at one side with a pickle fan, made by cutting thin, parallel slices almost the length of the pickle, then carefully spread out the sections to make a fan.

Mexican Beef Sandwiches: ¼ pound bacon; 1 small jar sliced dried beef; ½ cup Chili Sauce; ½ pound grated cheese; ¼ cup India Relish.

Cook bacon in a hot frying pan until crisp. Remove the bacon and pour half the fat from the pan, and brown the dried beef in the remainder. Add Chili Sauce and cheese, and stir until the cheese is melted. Remove from fire and add India Relish. Place slices of the bacon in buttered rolls, and add a generous layer of the filling.

The Sooner the Happier

First U. S. Army Body

The nucleus of the United States regular army was a small force of riflemen authorized by the Colonial congress on June 14, 1775, to serve the United Colonies.

Food Preservation

The earliest food preservation was practiced by hunters who dried, smoked and salted meats and fish, while others preserved milk in the form of cheese and grape juice in the form of wine. Primitive man probably is entitled to small credit for the discovery of wine making, since nature coats the grape hulls with yeast cells which seize upon the first opportunity to start fermentation when the skin of the grape is broken.—Exchange.

Concerning Dreams

Dreams are not, as a rule, anything to worry about. But if one has nightmares regularly, and a change in habits—such as cutting out late suppers or exciting reading last thing at night—fails to stop them, it may be as well to see a doctor. Dreams may be a warning—though not in the dream-book sense. They do sometimes reveal weak points in the constitution, or the presence of disease, when the dreamer suspects nothing wrong.

Stamp-Collecting Fad

It is estimated there are approximately 2,000,000 stamp collectors in the United States.

Commonwealth Ants

The lives and habits of ants show that these tiny creatures have gifts rivaling any of those possessed by human beings. In warfare especially they exhibit wonderful powers of organization. Every ant has his own duty to perform, and each insect helps its comrade.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Our word quarantine, from the Italian word for forty, harks back to the Middle ages, when plague sufferers were isolated for forty days, that precise period being chosen because it was the duration of Christ's lonely stay in the desert, and not for any scientific reason.

Myrtle Ceremonies at Dance of Purification

Japan, like most of the Orient, is a great land for ceremonial dances. A sword dance is given once in every seven years as part of a festival peculiar to a little inland village near Tokyo. Here is a Shinto shrine, to which run long flights of steps, and the top of which is formed from an extinct volcano. Enormous red cedars tower into the air. At the summit is the inevitable shrine with its money box and many ornate lanterns and curiously designed decorations.

"The people take off their shoes and sit on the straw matting before the raised platform, which is the place for the Shinto priest. There are two old men, and one of them, after the gong had struck to command silence, took his prayer stick and prayed long and earnestly before the holy of holies, with many low bows," relates an eastern observer of the rites. "Then he arose and waved his stick over the heads of the musicians on the platform and over the audience to purify it. The prayer stick is just a round bit of wood, about three feet long, to which is tied a white paper symbolizing purity, cut in a peculiar fashion."

The dancer whose duty it was to terrify the evil spirits and drive them away seemed to the observer more destined to give the wide-eyed children in the audience horrifying nightmares. This dispenser of evil spirits wore an ugly mask, with long scraggling black hair. He also carried a prayer stick, but his was a twig torn from a tree and on it were tied paper prayers. These he waved throughout his dance. During his appearance the drummer beat upon the same kind of instrument used in the Furuma dance and two other men played peculiar Japanese wind instruments, sounding much like a flute but much shriller in tone.

Eastern Cemetery Laid Out Like Modern City

Travelers in Egypt approaching Cairo from the east are deeply impressed with the striking appearance, in a sandy valley between lines of broken hills, of a seemingly opulent city, close-built with houses of varying sizes and dominated at intervals with great domes and slender minarets. They are, however, greatly amazed upon reaching the city to find that not a living soul is in it.

Such is the "Eastern Cemetery," or "cemetery of the Sahara," as this strange city of the dead is known. It is far more luxurious than many towns of the living. It has houses, streets, courts, shaded walks, and large, central buildings which are the tombs of the wealthy or great.

The principal structure, under a huge dome, is called the "Mosque of Kaitbey," the tomb of a sultan. There are also the squalid quarters of the poor.

These cemetery homes often contain several rooms, all well furnished and decorated with beautiful oriental tapestries and silk hangings.

Old Weather Omens

At Biddeford pool, a place of rare historic interest on the western Maine coast, recently discovered records show that there were weather prophets there as early as 1016. It was in that year that the first white settlers passed the winter at the pool, naming it Winter Harbor, a name which remains on some maps and charts to the present day. In the fall the Indians told the settlers that there would be a long, dreary winter for these reasons: The corn husks were thick and close about the ear; the beech and walnut burrs were thicker than usual; the foxes were wearing thicker fur and the wild geese were flying southward ahead of time. These predictions proved correct, and ever since men have given them more or less credence.

Teaching Birds to Talk

The bureau of biological survey says no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down for teaching a bird to talk. This is entirely a matter of patience and perseverance in dealing with the bird. At first the bird should be kept in a room by itself and the cage covered on three sides. Do not talk to the bird except in repeating simple phrases over and over again. Only one phrase should be used in a single day in the early training. Gradually work up until several phrases are repeated over and over to the bird each day. Put a cover over the cage when the parrot begins to squawk. This is said to break it of this bad habit.

If There Were No Copper

Copper, most ancient metal known to man, is indispensable to electricity, newest handmaiden of the race.

Your telephone would be dead, your car would be useless, your radio silent; there would be no electric lights without copper.

Copper is the yardstick that determines the degree of any country's electrification.

Ironically, Africa, now discovered to have the richest copper deposits in the world, is the Dark continent. It hardly uses any copper at all.

Holiday Spirit

During frosty weather a baby car got into a dreadful skid, shot across the road, and turned a complete somersault, imprisoning its two passengers. A woman who had witnessed the affair ran to the spot and called out agitatedly: "Is anyone hurt?"

"Oh, no," came a voice from the interior. "This is nothing to us. We are airmen."

Britain in India

The area of the British provinces in India is 1,094,300 square miles. The area of protected native states or agencies is 711,000 square miles. The total area of India is 1,805,300 square miles.

Masks for Asthma

Treatment of asthma by the use of masks, similar to those used by mine workers and others, is successful here. The patients breathe through tubes, which are connected to cabinets in which the curative elements are produced.

Language of Italy

The language of Tuscany, more particularly of Florence, is the classical language of Italy. It was established as such by grammarians, who chose it chiefly because the "Three Crowns"—Dante, Petrarch and Boccaccio—used it.

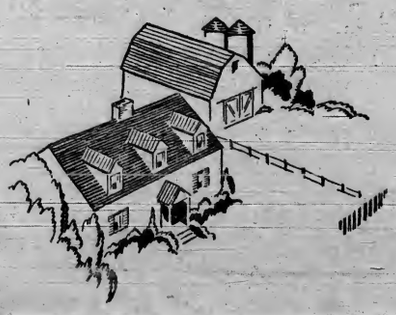
Indians Dislike Whiskers

Side whiskers are usually absent on the American Indian, but he would have a slight mustache and some beard if he didn't pull them out as fast as they begin to grow. Often the Indian warrior, while sitting by the campfire, would run his hands over his cheek and chin in search of hairs and pull them out by the roots. It is almost a religion with the Indian to have a smooth face.

Causes of Modern War

President Wilson said: "The seed of war in the modern war is industrial and commercial rivalry. This war (the "World war") was a commercial and industrial war. It was not a political war." It was part of a speech made at St. Louis September 5, 1919, and conveyed Mr. Wilson's idea that the desire for commercial and industrial advantage bred jealousies and strife which culminated in war.

Polyglot Island



Jean Island, New Orleans, hardly larger than an American city of the second class, differs so much from village to village that 11 languages are spoken on it.

Old Spanish Dance

There seems to be some confusion in regard to the English equivalent of the Spanish Zapateada. Professor Shields says that "Jig" comes nearest to expressing it, as it is a solo dance. A "clog dance" also approximates the Zapateada when particularly animated.

Geography for the Blind

A school geography, including maps and diagrams, has been prepared in braille type for the use of blind children in England, the work consisting of seven large volumes weighing 30 pounds.

NOW WELL AND STRONG AND ROBUST

"For years I never knew what it meant to feel well. I was always tired out. I was actually becoming a burden to myself as well as others. I was examined by many doctors and they gave me many things to take—but nothing seemed to help me. I was really getting in a very serious condition. Then like a fairy God-Mother I happened upon Karnak and I will say without a bit of exaggeration, it is almost like magic—so marvelous and so quick in its wonderful power to make a new person of one. I often shudder when I think of what might have happened to me had I not found out about Karnak when I did. Instead of what might have been' I am strong and well and robust and the amount of things I can accomplish amazes everyone I know.

Prominent Speakers Scheduled On Farm Bureau's Programs

MEETING IS TO BE HELD FOR MARCH 31, DATE CHANGE IS ANNOUNCED TO ACCOMMODATE SPEAKERS

The District State Farm Bureau meeting will be held at Burlington, Monday, March the 30th is expected to be one of the largest meetings of its kind ever to be held in Boone county. The meeting date has been changed from the 31st to March 30th so that a number of leading state and national farm leaders could be on the program.

The following list of farmers and farm leaders will be on the program:

Mrs. Charles W. Sewell, Director Home and Community Department, American Farm Bureau, Chicago, Illinois. Subject—"Building Community Meetings."

Cliff Townsend, Director of Organization, Indiana Farm Bureau, Indianapolis, Ind. Subject—"Building Farm Bureau."

R. Q. Smith, Manager Cincinnati Producers Livestock Commission Association. Subject — "Co-operative Marketing of Livestock."

Representative Co-operative Pure Milk Association. Subject — "One Method of Controlling Production."

John C. Robinson, President of Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation and one of the 1930 Master Farmers of Kentucky. Subject—"Farm Taxation."

M. B. Nugent, Executive Secretary Kentucky Farm Bureau, Louisville, Ky. Subject—"Some Services of the Kentucky Farm Bureau."

The women are especially urged to come and hear Mrs. Sewell. The meeting will begin at the Court House at 11:00 a. m., slow time. This is the first time that the district meeting will have been held in Boone county. Farmers, farmers wives and others who are interested are urged to turn out in numbers. The directors of the local organization points out that this is in no way a membership meeting but one of the regular quarterly meetings to discuss cooperatively important farm problems. Representatives from practically every Northern Kentucky county is expected to be the guests of the local organization during the meeting.

CONFERENCE

OF JUNIOR 4-H CLUB LEADERS TO BE HELD SATURDAY

Boone county Junior 4-H Club officers and adult leaders will hold a spring conference of officers and leaders at Florence school building, Saturday afternoon, March 28th, at 1 p. m., slow time.

Demonstration teams for the state contest, representatives for 1931 4-H club camp, stock judging teams, special exhibits at the fairs and other important problems will be discussed and voted upon. Following the general business session, the 4-H officers of the country Club Officers Association will be elected for 1931.

Mr. E. E. Fish, 4-H club specialist from the College of Agriculture will be present to instruct members on the subject "Efficiency in conducting 4-H Club Meetings."

Miss Edith Lacy, field agent in Home Economics will meet with the adult sewing and canning club leaders during the regular business session to discuss the subject, "Suggestions and Changes in the Junior Home Economics Program for 1931." All officers and leaders and others interested are urged to be present.

W. M. S. REPORT

The W. M. S. of Belleview, spent a delightful day on the first Thursday of the month at the home of Mrs. Lizzie Smith. There were fourteen members and six visitors present. A delicious luncheon was served at the noon hour. We had our program in the afternoon, which was rendered by Miss Anna Cason. Our President, Mrs. Ella Rogers, being absent. We hope to meet the first Thursday in April at the home of Mrs. Minnie Rogers. We invite every one to attend.

MRS. FRANCES BUFFINGTON
Chairman.

School Notes

BURLINGTON SCHOOL NOTES

The High School District Tournament will be held at Erlanger, Ky., on Friday and Saturday of this week. Those participating are Elva Akin, in General Scholarship; Rosa Pettit in English Composition for 11th and 12th grade.; Betty McMullen for 9th and 10th grades, William Vest in General Science and Algerbra; Wm. Cook in American History and Civics; William Greenup Oration and Londa Lee Jarrell Declamation.

Zena Garrison, Ruby Mitchell and George Cook were absent two days last week.

The Burlington debating team met the strong Piner team at Burlington Wednesday night.

David and James R. Williamson, Dudley Rouse and Londa Lee Jarrell were absent from school one day last week.

The Burlington Debating team, consisting of Martha Blythe, Harold Kelly Clore and Wilma Cotton, will debate Corinth Thursday at 2:30 p. m., in the Tournament which will be held at Erlanger thisyear. Burlington will have the negative side upholding the chain store.

We are missing Virgil and James Vice, as they are quarantined with the measles.

Of all the work assigned me,
This certainly is the worse,
Really it is beyond me
To write a few lines of verse.

So with mental pains a plenty,
I shall hasten to proceed,
To fulfill my teacher's wishes
And commit the daring deed.

To construct lines for English
Is indeed a trying task,
And the thought they may carry,
Well, where is it, some may ask.

But my motive as you see,
Is merely to get a rhyme,
And ideas that are worthwhile
Will come some other time.

I've worried till I am weary
For poetry is not my line,
It really spoils my grammar
To work my brain overtime.

So with these lines of nonsense,
My poetic air I'll doff,
And lend my hardest effort,
To the duties of a Soph.

Above is one of the poems that we promised you last week. This poem was written by Martha Blythe, the only girl in the Sophomore class. Otheri will appear

7th and 8th Grades

We are now busy preparing for the spring Tournament which will be held the latter part of April.

We are planning to have a picnic the first part of April.

Leora Vice and Jeff Eddins were absent from school Monday.

7th and 8th Grades

Harry Cook was absent Thursday and Friday on account of pink eye.

Alan Sullivan, Betsy Eddins and Alberta Pettit were absent several days last week.

ERLANGER FIRE LOSS ESTIMATED AT $75,000

A large number of Boone county residents were attracted last week to a fire in Erlanger which destroyed the mill and lumber yards of the Boone-Kenton Lumber Co., with a loss that was estimated at $75,000.

The flames from the fire could be seen for many miles. The flames broke out shortly after 6 p. m., central standard time and before fire companies could reach the scene they had spread throughout the plant. The fire was one of the most spectacular that has been seen in this territory for many years.

Flaming box cars on the Southern railroad in the rear of the lumber company were pulled to the main line where the fire on them was extinguished. Telegraph lines over which the activities of the railroad are directed were severed by the fire and railroad communications were interrupted for many hours. Traffic on the Dixie Highway was blocked by hose lines until late at night.

FARM LOANS

NOW AVAILABLE TO RESIDENTS OF BOONE COUNTY, COMMITTEE NAMED.

Loans for agricultural rehabilitation in 1931 are now available to farmers of Boone county and Kentucky. Loans may be obtained until June 30th, for good, labor and repairs of farm machinery. The maximum loans that may be obtained by one family under this act are as follows:

1. Family maintenance (farm family of five $75.
2. Extra farm labor for producing 1931 crop—$50.00.
3. Repairs farm machinery—$25.00.

The applications will be handled thru the county seed loan committee who will give their time without remuneration. The county committee is composed of Carroll Cropper, Burlington, Wilford M. Rice, Walton; and Hubert Conner, Hebron. While the county agent's office has no official position on the county committee it will assist the committee by serving as a source of general information to farmers wishing to talk over their farm program before applying for a loan.

Each loan must be secured by a lien on crops or other security. These loans are available and farmers who need them should not hesitate to apply. They should however be used conservatively. The outlook for 1931 is one of economy in production. The loans are due to be paid back when the crops are harvested this fall. Local credit should also be given first consideration.

MARRIAGE

OF EARL SULLIVAN

NICHOLS HELD AT HOME OF REV. J. W. CAMPBELL

Miss Susan Nichols, the popular daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Nichols, of East Bend road, was united in marriage to Earl Sullivan, last Saturday.

The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. W. Campbell, of the Bullittsburg Baptist church, at his home near Idlewild. The groom, a young farmer of this county is 25 years old and the bride is 19 years old.

Sullivan is the son of Lewis Sullivan. The young couple had informed many of their friends of their plans and their marriage was not a surprise to their acquaintances.

Mr. and Mrs. Millard Sullivan, brother and sister-in-law of the groom were attendants at the wedding.

PETERSBURG

FARMERS PLAN LARGE INCREASE IN POTATO ACREAGE FOR THIS YEAR

The farmers of Petersburg community, Boone county, are reported to be planting one of the largest potato acreages on record. It is reported that more than 1,000 bushels of seed potatoes will be planted this spring within a few miles radius of Petersburg Figuring 15 bushels of seed per acre this means approximately 66 and 2-3 acres will be planted.

R. S. Crisler, prominent local blacksmith

dents of Burlington community, is widely known for his potato planing schedule. He plants potatoes on St. Patrick's Day, rain, freeze, sleet or snow. St. Patrick's Day this year was potato planting day for a good many growers. The ground was in good working condition and a few growers in every potato growing section of the county could be seen laying off their rows and dropping seed.

Mr. John S. Gardener, of the College of Agriculture, has recommended seed treatment and use of commercial fertilizer for more profitable potato growing in the county. He says that all seed should be treated and from 500 pounds up of high grade commercial fertilizer in the row will increase the profits from this crop. Extension circular No. 202, Potato Growing in Kentucky contains much good potato growing information. This circular may be obtained free of charge at the county agent's office.

FEW CASES

WINTER — SUFFERING FROM THIS DISEASE.

Fear that an epidemic of measles might have developed in Burlington was disproved Tuesday, when it was learned that Mrs. C. G. Lamb, wife of the Coach of the Burlington School's athletic teams, and teacher of the eighth grade, was beyond danger from this disease. Mrs. Lamb, who teaches the fifth and sixth grades was taken ill last week and it was feared that she was suffering from the measles which had gained some headway in this community. This was disproved when it was stated that Mrs. Lamb had passed the period in which measles usually develop, and it was believed that she was beyond the fear of any danger from this disease.

The Man With Pink Whiskers Gives Advice

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(By Fred Holmes)
Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

OBITUARY NOTICE: Died, on or before last week, Mr. U. S. Capital. Father of a large family. Ailing for some time or longer, fatal symptoms developed on or about week before last. The doctors couldn't save him—in fact, they didn't try.

The funeral was a strictly private affair. His multitudinous progeny displayed a woeful lack of consideration. As a matter of fact the services of professional mourners had to be enlisted. They were Washington correspondents who had basked in his generosity as a provider of subjects for conversation, and they served without pay.

As to his malady, the attending physicians did not destroy our fond illusions by failing to disagree. One diagnosed it as Veteranesis; another as a lesion in the neighborhood of his Treasury, but all agreed that this Shoals Muscles had become atrophied from lack of exercise.

However, on the way back from the cemetery, deep in the doldrums, the pall bearers did get one thrill. Along came James Hamilton Lewis, newly elected Democratic Senator from Illinois, condemning Republican insurgents and Democrats alike who in Congress seek to obstruct legislation merely because it is proposed by a Republican President.

Senator Lewis declared that continuation of such tactics in Congress will result in a situation where "there never will be any measure passed that will give the people the relief which they voted or which the President was authorized to execute." "The end will be," continued Senator Lewis, "that the Democratic party coming into power will be met legitimately by Republicans with the same form of obstruction and destruction that he Republicans had to contend with."

The Illinois Senator, now installed in his offices here, asserted that prohibition could not fail to be a dominant issue in the coming national campaign. In his own campaign against [illegible] Hanna McCormick, Republican, Senator Lewis ran as an opponent of the eighteenth amendment.

Senator Lewis is the only Demo-

Tribute Is Paid To Harry Stevens, Popular Boone County Citizen

SERVICES FOR BANKER AND FARMER ARE HELD AT BULLITTSBURG BAPTIST CHURCH MANY IN ATTENDANCE.

Funeral services for Harry Stevens, prominent banker, farmer and a Republican leader of the county were held at Bullittsburg Baptist church [illegible] which a wonderful tribute was paid to Mr. Stevens, were conducted by the Rev. J. W. Campbell, pastor of the church.

Mr. Stevens died at his home near Idlewild, Friday, March 13th, after a short illness.

Mr. Stevens was the eldest son of Henry and Christine Bohnett Stevens. He was born near Francesville, Boone county, Ky., Jan. 10th, 1861. He moved to the home in which he died more than 58 years ago.

In 1885 while a student of Georgetown College, Stevens joined the Baptist church and remained a faithful member until his death. After he left the college he affliated with the Bullittsburg church and was one of its most faithful servants.

Mr. Stevens was one of Boone county's most alert business men. His honesty and his willingness to lend a helping hand to his neighbors made him one of the best loved men in his community.

EMPLOYMENT SITUATION IMPROVES

There were more men employed in January than there were in December, and still more in February than in January, the U. S. Department of Labor reports. The increase in payroll totals for February was 7½ per cent.

That is encouraving news of the first order. It is the first upward trend in the industrial situation since the stock market crash of October 1929. It signifies, it seems to us, that people are getting over their fear of the future and are realizing that the bottom hadn't actually dropped out.

To anybody who can remember clearly the conditions under which the average wage-earner worked and lived even thirty years ago, how remote from his life were all of the things which he takes as his natural right—as they are—today, it is clear that the term "distress" has been used very loosely in the past year or so.

In the big cities, where people from all over the country went to get free food and lodging which the charitable were handing out, there has been more of an appearance of poverty than in the smaller towns and the country districts. And, of course, there has been and still is a great deal of financial embarrassment among those who have been out of work. But outside of the drought stricken regions we have heard of few cases where men habitually industrious and sober have had to turn beggars to keep their families from starving. On the other hand, we know of others who have not had regular work for a year or more who still have their telephones and electric lights, their radios and phonographs, and who are still able to go to a movie once in a while. A good many of them are still running their cars.

Times have been hard, beyond doubt, but they were not so hard as many people imagined nor did they affect so many as some agitators would like o have us believe. And they are definitely getting better now.

Modern Music Made No Hit With Lord Balfour

If music Lord Balfour took a great delight and was an enthusiastic lover of the old masters, especially of Mozart. Modern music had little charm, if any, for him.

"I remember how patiently he would sit through dinner at his favorite restaurant in Paris until most of the clients had left and the noise of jazz and jingle had ceased," recalls Sir Ian Malcolm in his personal memoir of Balfour, "and would then ask the chef d'orchestre (a very gifted young Polish violinist) to play him some Eighteenth-century French music."

Thus during the nine months Lord Balfour remained in Paris for the peace conference his house was the scene of many brilliant musical evenings.

"I remember one evening," says Sir Ian, "when Charles Hendl was going to sing, he inquired delicately whether anybody present objected to German songs. The chief (Balfour) promptly replied:

"'I don't. I will take them as part of the reparations that they owe us.'"

Ingenious Methods of Making Use of Suction

Some of our readers probably are old enough to remember the first vacuum cleaners and the interest aroused when it was found that a carpet could be cleaned of dust without a broom being used. Coal is now unloaded by suction. The pipe used is made of steel and is 12 inches in diameter, the nozzle is a box three feet long and something more than a foot wide, and the most ingenious part of the invention is an arrangement to prevent the whole thing getting choked by coal dust. The latest invention in this direction is a marvelous fish trap. In this case, a pipe of great size is lowered from the fishing vessel deep into the sea, the air is exhausted, and the water rushes up, carrying with it the fish. The fish are kept, the water goes back. One more use for this kind of device is in the war against locusts. In Palestine, where there was a plague of these ravenous creatures, gigantic vacuum cleaners fixed on motor vehicles were used and the locusts drawn up by the million.

Royal Friend of Dogs

Queen Victoria's love of animals (a characteristic inherited by all her descendants) is shown in several passages of her recently published letters. In August, 1886, when everybody in London was infected with an unreasonable fear of mad dogs, she wrote a long memorandum on cruelty to animals which might almost be described as the Magna Charta of man's four-footed pensioners. "As regards her poor dear friends," runs the first clause, "she would repeat that no dogs should ever be killed by police unless the veterinary surgeon declared they were mad. That dogs, who were close to their masters or mistresses or their house door, poor quiet dogs should be left alone and not molested."

Gallant

Mrs. Mabel Williams contributes a charming little episode in the life of three-year-old Patty who was visiting her grandparents near Riverside. She watched her grandmother plucking a turkey and finally asked:

"Granny, what are you pulling those hen leaves off the turkey for?"

A little later in the day, Patty was shown the big flock of turkeys and in passing among them, accidentally stepped on a big gobbler's foot. Little Patty looked the big gobbler in the eye and said contritely:

"Excuse me." Los Angeles Times.

Roughness on Oceans

The zone of greatest storm frequency lies between latitudes 45 degrees and 55 degrees. The most severe storms are the hurricanes that begin in the tropical portion of the Atlantic. The North Atlantic lies in the path of the great procession of cyclones and anti-cyclones of the middle latitudes, and also in the path of the West Indian hurricane over its lower latitudes, and counterparts of these atmospheric disturbances in the South Atlantic. The Pacific is subject to sudden and violent storms, especially typhoons, but the frequency of storms is not so great as in the Atlantic.

Log of the Great Western

The original log of the Great Western steamship, which crossed the Atlantic in 1838, and only missed by a few hours being the first steamer to do so, came to light in Bristol. The log was found by an old sailor employed in the Bristol Corporation's offices among a lot of rubbish. An expert recognized the name of Lieut. J. Hoskin as that of the captain of the Great Western, and other experts have pronounced the log as genuine. The first steamship to cross was the Sirius.

Prehistoric Art Gallery

The London-Italian scientific expedition in South Africa found in a rock shelter not far from the Congo border a large number of ancient rock engravings which appear to depict human figures in a procession. Professor Dart, of Transvaal university, the discoverer of the Thungs skull, a member of the expedition, declares that the discovery is a most important one, the period of the engravings being between four and six thousand years B. C.

The Family Garden

POTATOES

THE GARDEN

(By John S. Gardner, Ky., College of Agriculture)

No garden should be without early potatoes, at least a row or two. Now is potato planting time.

For potatoes to do well a plentiful supply of moisture is needed. This is assured by providing a generous amount of humus, which is valuable as well in causing the soil to work easily and mellow, tubers shape.

Good garden ground is usually well suited to potatoes, in this regard.

In addition to humus, deep preparation of the seed bed is essential, for this is a reservoir of moisture is assured. Demonstrations have shown that 8-inch plowing is better than the customary 6 inches. for by the deeper plowing as much as 2 weeks has been added to the length of growing season, and this is important.

Potatoes need fertility as well, but they are somewhat critical as to the proportions of the 3 main plant foods: Nitrogen, phosphorus and potash. Many gardeners rely wholly on manure to make their potato ground fertile. Manure is excellent insofar as it goes, but it is not properly balanced for potatoes, for it is lacking in phosphorus and it contains too great a proportion of nitrogen. To correct this condition, superphosphate should be used. The way to use it is to sow it in the opened furrow, at the rate of one pound to 25 feet of row, mixing it with the soil before the seed is dropped.

A better way to fertilize potatoes is to withhold manure, because of its tendency to encou age scab, and to use a complete fertilizer. A high-grade analysis 3-8-6 or 4-10-4, should be used. The method of applying it, and the rate, are the same as for superphosphate, just given.

FAIR PRSPECTS FOR KENTUCKY POTATOES

Goode ulutural practices and marketing methods promise to produce better results in potato production in Kentucky than expansion of acreage in 1931, unless growers have extraordinary skill and favorable resources for potato production, says a statement from the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

Producers in the early and immediate potato states will doubtless market potatoes this year when the demand is a a relative low level. Any improvement in business can not be expected to have made much headway by the time the Kentucky crop is harvested, and the demand for potatoes is largely dependent upon the rate of industrial activity.

Kentucky potato producers are also confronted with the probability of increased competition from both the early and late producing states, if growers carry out their present intentions to increase the potato acreage. These intended increases are apparently the result of the better than average prices received for both the 1929 and 1930 crops and are in line with the usual response of potato growers to prices received. In the southeastern states, growers intend to maintain the high acreage of 1930. Southwest early and intermediate states intend an increase of 11 per cent; the 19 late surplus producing states an increase of 4 per cent and the 16 deficit states, including Kentucky, 7 per cent.

The position of the Kentucky potato grower will probably be somewhat better than the above statement indicates, as the intended planting of growers in the seven intermediate states, with which Kentucky farmers compete directly, shows a slight reduction in intentions to plant in 1931. Moreover, the distribution of this acreage is more favorable to Kentucky farmers as there are prospects of decreased acreages in the areas east of Kentucky, altho increases are indicated in competing areas to the West.

FARM CAN BE MADE TO PRODUCE MUCH OF FAMILY FOOD

The daily menu of the farm family includes many foods which may be produced on the farm during the growing season and which may be stored and canned for winter.

Food authorities at the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, recommend at least two vegetables daily besides potatoes, one of them raw, with a large variety during the week and year.

Green leafy vegetables such as spinach, turnip tops, mustard, beet tops, swiss chard and the like should be served two or three times a week.

Two large servings of fruit, either both raw or one raw and the other cooked, should be served daily.

At least a quart of whole milk should be provided for each growing child and a pint for each adult daily. More milk may be profitably used for cream, butter, buttermilk, and cottage cheese which may be made the basis for many nutritious dishes.

A liberal amount of meat should be served to adults daily and to young children about three times a week. A variety of meat, such as poultry beef, lamb and pork, is recommended. Home produced meat also will supply necessary fats for cooking purposes. At least one egg for eating and cooking should be allowed per person every day of the year.

Whole wheat when well prepared makes a delicious and nutritious food. Sorghum molasses is a good source of iron in the diet, besides taking the place of sugar as a sweet. The use of honey also is recommended.

It probably is possible to produce 85 per cent of the food materials essential for growth and health of the family. This would mean that approximately 80 to 85 per cent of the cost of the family food supply can be eliminatedd by growing the necessary products on the farm.

Four Carter county farmers will drain fields of 4 to 20 acres.

The Way of Life
By BRUCE BARTON

EVEN THE KING CAN'T GET A DRINK

In London we visited a fashionable restaurant called the Embassy Club.

It is a place where the hoity-toity dance, and my wife and I had the pleasure of feasting our middle class eyes on a large collection of young lords and ladies, with a sprinkling of multi-millionaires and even a couple of dukes.

A little after midnight a waiter stepped up to each table, according to the law and custom in England, and reminded the diners politely that the bar was about to close. A few minutes later he came again and asked each diner to finish his drink because the glasses must be removed.

A gay party had arrived only a little while before, headed by a younger son of His Majesty, King George. I watched with interest to see what would happen when the witer visited that table. Would a prince of the blood be asked to give up his glass like any common man? Or would a polite evasion occur in the case of one so exalted,

My question was quickly answered. The waiter did, indeed, go to the Prince's table last. But when he arrived, the Prince took one last gulp and handed over the glass with a smile.

A few hours previously we had sat in one of the English law courts. A young man had been arrested only two weeks before, charged with the heinous crime of murdering his mother. In the space of a few days he was brought to trial. The jury was chosen in a couple of hours, the case was heard fully, including the testimony of medical experts, the verdict was found, and the murderer was sentenced.

In our country the crime would have been a newspaper sensation for months, while the trial dragged its dreary way thru the maze of legal obstruction.

We are ahead of the English in many ways. We do business more quickly, with more flexibility, and more steam. But when it comes to respect for the law they have us lashed to the mast. We pass thousands of laws and disregard them. The English pass fewer, but they certainly respect and enforce them. If you kill your mother over there you're hung, and promptly.

And when the bar closes even the king can't get a drink.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR
By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

HEALTH AND DANCING

The family physician should, above all things, be a normal man. He has, it seems to me, opportunity to make his influence felt in many ways, not inconsistent with the practice of medicine, to make his youthful patrons better men and women. I am afraid many times the doctor doesn't speak out in the fear of offending some of his most prominent clients; particularly so it has been in the matter of the dance. So many of our very best people sanction it.

Nevertheless, if an author deed contains a strong element of hidden vice the physician should be outspoken against it; for no one should know better than he the damage often done by indulgence in things that are pleasing, but hold dangerous poison.

In this letter, I shall fortify behind known authorities; I shall confine myself to opinions of other men, rather than assume any dictatorship on my own part. I have no desire to attain a point of notriety in this matter of grave concern, but I may say that I endorse the authorities quoted.

Dancing and purity are not incompatible—there are too many proofs of that, to be denied; but in these scurrying days, a warning is not out of place, it seems to me. So here they are:

"Those churches in recent times which resolutely set themselves against he pastime are wiser in their generation than is commonly supposed."

"ALL dancing excites the passions —those modern creations known as glides, two-steps, waltzes and ragtime patter..... have as their ultimate tendency, the breaking down of religious restraint and the free exercise of sensuality.

Mind you this is not propaganda—it is medically recorded as scientific fact. It would not be printable here, the history of the dance as indulged by races of men from time immemorial, the early Albigenses of Langadoc called dancing "the devil's procession." I could quote from many volumes here—space forbids; let me say concluding that there are many other forms of exercise for our young people's health. This without prejudice.

FLOCK OF CHICKENS FOR EVERY FAMILY

A flock of chickens of sufficient size to furnish eggs and meat for the family can be raised on the farm at little expense. The College of Agriculture of hte University of Kentucky advocates keeping five hens per person, and says that 25 hens will provide products for the average family of five.

Such a flock, properly managed, will furnish an egg a day per person, several dozen eggs to set and some to sell. If 10 hens were set, the family would be provided with at least two dozen fryers and about as many pullets to be kept for layers next year. During the summer and fall 10 or 20 of the old hens could be eaten.

The main fact to remember, says the College, is that every farm family should have a flock of chickens of at least five hens per person, to provide eggs and meat for home use.

KNOX FARMERS MAKE PROGRAM FOR YEAR

Last year's cash incomes on 260 Knox county farms were summarized by a local committee and County Agent Earl Mayhew, in an effort to help farmers plan for their operations for this year. Incomes varied from an average of $13 a farm in one community to $253 in another community with an average of 160 for the 260 farms.

A fifth of the 171 farms operated by their owners returned an average of $509 from the sale of products. This amount included average returns of $152 from dairy products, $89 from tobacco, $62 from eggs and chickens, $57 from vegetables sold to canneries, $48 from potatoes and $29 from hay and other feed.

Farmers growing tobacco had an average income of $161 from this crop.

The county committee, working with the county agent and Z. L. Galloway from he College of Agriculture, University of Ky., recommended that farmers:

1. Have live-a home gardens.
2. Grow cash crops, such as potatoes, canning crops when grown under contract, and tobacco where good soil and curing facilities are available.
4. Milk cows as a source of cash income and to provide milk and butter for home use.
5. Have good flocks of chickens and give attention to their housing and general management.
6. Who have orchards give better care to the trees.

KENTUCKY FARM RADIO PROGRAM

The College of Agriculture will broadcast the following farm radio program from he University of Kentucky extension studios of WHAS the week of March 30. Each program will begin at 12:45, central standard time.

March 30—4-H Club program, Geo. Harris, Anna Culton and University quartet.

April 1—Special program

April 3—4-H Club demonstration teams, E. E. Fish.

What the farm can produce for the family, Miss Myrtle Weldon.

Fifty-one Pike county boys have enrolled in 4-H poultry clubs and will raise purebred chickens.

Twelve Barren county farmers attended a demonstration in which 70 hogs were treated to prevent cholera.

Better pastures, including pure seed, grass mixtures and korean lespedeza, were stressed at six meetings of farmers in Madison county.

The Parksville Raspberry Growers Association in Boyle county has been reorganized and a marketing agreement signed by members. Acreage will be increased 50 to 100 per cent.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS TEACHES HUMILITY

Luke 14:7-14; 18:15-17

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Practical every day lessons are taught throughout the Bible. In this lesson it becomes a book on social etiquette. Some man thought to get credit for himself by inviting Jesus to a feast, since He at that time was the news headliner in that part of the world. Jesus is always studying us, even as He observed the scramble for the seats of distinction around that table. The people of the Far East follow literally what Jesus advised as fitting. An invited guest will not take the seat of honor which he knows will be assigned to him but takes the place nearest the door.

Further admonition was given when any host was urged to be a real philanthropist in sending out his invitations and not a mere social climber who wants a return invitation. There are multitudes of worthy poor who are hungry; these should be asked to come to the table of bounty. Constantly the Bible is presenting a choice social standard that mankind will be blessed in following.

Children are given their chance only where the principles of the Gospel are in practice. Contrast child life in any land where the Sunday School is but little known with that in which the Bible School is making its greatest advance. When mothers brought their little ones to the Kinder Man that He might give them His blessing even the disciple barred the way until the command was uttered "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of God." Christiarity aims to stop the exploiting of children that their best interest may be safeguarded, for the boys and girls of today become the men and women of tomorrow. The alternative Easter Lesson is based on I Corinthians 15:1 8; 50-58.

Hints for the Home

Potato Salad

Potato salad is occasionally delicious. It can be made in various ways. One way is to slice the new potatoes, boiled just until done, very thin, and to dress them with oil and vinegar and to serve with mayonnaise on lettuce. Another way is to mix the potatoes, spiced, with half their quantity of diced celery and plenty of mayonnaise. Diced green pepper, about a cup to four cups of diced potatoes, makes another good addition to potato salad. One hard-boiled egg for each potato, mixed with French dressing, and served on crisp watercress, gives another good variety of potato salad.

Sardine salad can be temptingly combined with potato salad. Get the boned and skinned fishes, and arrange three on each plate, in a big, crisp, white lettuce leaf. Squeeze some lemon juice over each and in a small lettuce leaf at the side of the big one serve a big spoon of mayonnaise with a stuffed olive on top. Add a spoon of potato salad.

Veal and Ham Shape

Slice any small piece of veal and ham you may have available (about half to three-quarters of a pound) Also grate four tablespoons of breadcrumbs and the rind of half a lemon. Mix with these a teaspoon of finely chopped parsley, a little pepper and salt, and a pinch of nutmeg.

Bind with one egg, and if necessary a little gravy extract. Grease a mould and cover it with browned breadcrumbs; press the mixture in, and bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour, or steam for a little longer time. Serve with potato balls. To make them, boil the potatoes, then mash with a little butter and milk, and season with pepper and salt. Roll into small balls, cover them with egg and bread crumbs, and fry in hot fat until light brown. Drain well. When the veal mould is ready, turn it out in the center of a large hot dish and garnish with the potato balls and sprigs of parsley.

Serve thick brown gravy in a separate tureen.

Seventeen Boone county farmers increased the number of tomatoes grown on the Experiment Station farm in 1930 from 2 to 5.

Four varieties of beans are said to be favorable in Letcher county.

DUAL BANK SYSTEM FAVORED BY BANKER

State and National Institutions Supplement Each Other in Serving Country's Varied Financial Needs

RECENT suggestions that all banks in the United States be under Federal jurisdiction, doing away with the chartering of banks by the various states recalls the opposition to this plan presented at the recent convention of the American Bankers Association by R. S. Hecht of New Orleans, Chairman of its Economic Policy Commission. Mr. Hecht said:

"There are just as good reasons why there should be state as well as national banks, as that there should be state as well as a national government. I do not think that analogy is farfetched. The states should not surrender all political jurisdiction to the central government, and the local business life of the states should not be made to surrender all control over financial functions to national financial instrumentalities. There are many variations of business conditions from state to state and there are special fiscal requirements of the various states.

"It is entirely logical, therefore, that the states should retain the right to charter banks so as to mold and direct their affairs in accordance with the states' governmental and business requirements and keep them adapted to localized sentiment and conditions.

"The argument is sometimes advanced that the dual system jeopardizes the life of the Federal Reserve System because under it there is a large group of banks that are free to remain out of or to withdraw from the system. Facts and figures prove that this is a specious argument.

"It is true that there has been some shifting from national to state charters especially in cases of mergers of large national banks with banks operating under state charters. However, the Federal Reserve System was not weakened in this process because the merged institutions almost universally retained their membership in the system on a voluntary basis. Moreover, the records show that state bank members are just as good members of the system as national banks and the ratio of state bank resources in the Federal Reserve System is constantly growing. In 1922, national banks held about 65 per cent of the resources of reserve members, and state banks about 35 per cent, while in 1929, the nationals held only 60 per cent and state banks 40 per cent.

Banking Systems Help Each Other

"Reciprocally the state and national banks systems have helped each other. If the national banking law has served in some respects as something of a model code toward which state banking laws more and more have approached year by year, so have the state codes developed valuable reforms which have suggested improvements for the national laws. A great many undesirable competitive inequalities have been wiped out by this mutual evolutionary process and further progress along the line of uniformity so far as is desirable is anticipated.

"However, I do not believe that it is a disadvantage to have two banking codes that differ in some respects. It is quite probable that the state banking code in many instances represents a closer adjustment to local conditions than could be had under the national banking laws, and this is a situation that should be retained. There should, however, not be competition between the two banking codes. Competition should be between banks themselves and not between the laws under which they operate. The effort to offer too great allurements in one code as against the other could lead only to weak banking laws. But I do think that there should be the alternative opportunities that now exist which banking institutions and local business interests may choose, so that they can function or conduct their business relationships under that banking code which best meets the conditions of the times and of the place as they see them.

"This has been illustrated in both directions. In states where such unsound measures as the guarantee of deposits were operative state banks had the opportunity to escape the baleful effect of such laws. On the other hand, when a court decision was handed down in Worcester, Massachusetts, which rendered uncertain the position of trust assets acquired by a national bank through a merger with a state bank, it was a real advantage for national banks affected to take out and operate under a state charter, either on a temporary or a permanent basis, as circumstances make expedient.

"In my opinion, bankers, national as well as state, should combat the thought that conceives of depriving us of the vitalizing benefits of our dual system."

Finance Fights Erosion

Farm terracing to stop erosion is of major importance in Noble County, Oklahoma, the county agent said, and so one of the county's national banks bought five farm levels to be loaned to farmers without charge. The machines were immediately put to use and the farmers are showing keen interest in terracing. Two terracing schools were started for adults and 4-H Club boys.

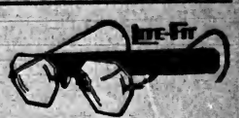
Discovered by Accident

It is said that the value of Peruvian bark was first discovered by the fact that sick animals in Peru were observed to gnaw the bark of a certain tree. Men tried the same remedy with beneficial results, and quinine was given to the world.—Grit.

Manners and Knowledge

Manners must adorn knowledge, and smooth its way through the world. Like a great rough diamond it may do very well in a closet by way of curiosity, and also for its intrinsic value.—Earl of Chesterfield.

A Better Aim



"I observe," states a roguish reader of the tart and tarnished tabloids, "that 'Because I loved him so,' is becoming an everyday alibi for women who murder their husbands. How," he catechizes the Columbus Citizen, "can such loving dispositions be curbed?" "By teaching them," suggests the editor, "to control their affections."

cratic Senator from Illinois in years. He himself served a term of six years in the Senate during the Wilson administration, but was defeated at the end of that term by the late Senator Medill McCormick, whose widow Senator Lewis recently defeated. But long ago the Democratic State organization came out strongly for the nomination of Senator Lewis for President next year. Friends of Senator Lewis insist that the Democratic delegation to the national convention in 1932 will be instructed for Lewis.

J. Ham was the only bright spot in Washington during the past week or ten days. Even President Hoover is afloat today enroute to his working holiday in the Caribbean. The whole Nation, regardless of political bias, wishes him bon voyage and happy experience in the Antilles, whence he betakes himself to inspect Porto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Mr. Hoover is accompanied by Secretary of War Hurley and Secretary of the Interior Wilbur, a circumstance that carries more than social significance. Those cabinet officers are at the heads of the Federal departments which, between them, conduct our "colonial" administration. The War Department has jurisdiction over the Philippines, Porto Rico and the Canal Zone. In the Interior Department is lodged the supervision of Alaskan and Hawoiian affairs. The Virgin Islands have just been transferredd to the Interior Department. Guam, our lonely patch in mid-Pacific, naturally comes under the Navy.

Mr. Hoover cannot, of course, in a hurried sojourn of mere hours in our Caribbean possessions, come to any settled conclusion on a reorganization of our insular and territorial government. But he will absorb some useful ideas down there and, being an expert jigsaw-puzzle player, the President will know how to fit those particular pieces of the problem into the whole, if such a thing is possible and feasible.

The Washington Post says that Senate Democrats are hoping that a companionate marriage may be arranged between the antique Democratic party and the blushing young Progressive bud. They regard the Democratic party as sufficiently "liberal" to be attractive to Miss Progressive, while the latter's charms make an irresistible appeal to the old suitor. Senator Cordell Hull, Secretary Caraway, Senator Wheeler, and Senator James Hamilton Lewis are all of one mind in pressing the suit. "The Progressives should come into the Democratic party where they belong," remarks "Jim Ham" Lewis. "They should come into their father's house and quit playing hookey around the porch." Senaor Hull takes note of the "numerous instances" in which Progressive ideas are in harmony with those of the rank and file of Democrats.

As for that Progressive leader, Senator Borah, you will not see him as best man at the Democratic-Progressive nuptials. He is progressive in off years, but regular in presidential years. He would rather be regular than beaten.

Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Berkshire, of Petersburg, and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley B. Palmer, of Louisville, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E Berkshire, of Burlington, Sunday. Mr. Palmer, a son-in-law of B. H. Berkshire, is the representative of the Portland Cement Association in Western Kentucky.

Mrs. D. R. Blythe, V-President.
Mrs. Manley Kyle, Secretary.
Mrs. Wm. Cotton, Treasurer.

BURLINGTON RESIDENTS ATTEND DEALER'S MEETING

Mr. J. J. Kirkpatrick, Mr. Elza Poston and County Agent H. R. Forkner, of Burlington, attended the district lumber dealers and extension school held at Williamstown, last Wednesday. Cooperation of lumber dealers, contractors and the College of Agriculture in rendering more valuable service to farmers and builders was discussed.

Plans for model farm buildings and the mixing of concrete were given special consideration. An important point brought out thru the results of research work was that the strength of concrete was determined so far as the mixture was concerned by one factor, namely, the amount of cement used to the amount of water.

Deaths

Another Good Mother Gone

Mary Elizabeth Akin, (nee Shruck) was born at Enterprise, Ind., June 18th, 1860, and died at Petersburg, Ky., March 19th, 1930, being seventy years and nine months and 2 days of age. On January 17th, 1883, she was united in marriage to Benj. F. Akin. To this union six children were born five of whom with the husband survive. Harry Lee, twin brother of Hazel Mae, the youngest child died in infancy. The immediate survivors are B. F. Akin, Petersburg, Ky., Paris B. Winchester, Ky., Clyde W. Idlewild, Ky., Mrs. Eva Williams, Bullittsville, Ky., Charles J. and Hazel M. Petersburg, Ky. Eight grandchildren. Three daughter-in-laws, one son-in-law, several nieces and nephews, one brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Anin.

Many years ago she united with the Baptist church at Belleview, under the preaching of Rev. E. B. Atwood. She remained consistent with this faith in Christ during the remainder of life. At the time of her death she was a member of the Petersburg Baptist church. She was a fatihful wife, devcted mother, kind and loving friend. Always ready to help in time of need. She was loved by all who knew her and will be sadly missed by her loved ones, friends and neighbors, but heir loss will be her gain. She died the death of the righteous and passed peacefully away in the evening, like "one who wraps the drapery of her couch about her and lies down to pleasant dreams with her loved ones all around her."

She had been in failing health for some time but was seriously ill only a few days.

Funeral services were held at the late residence March 21, 1931, by the Rev. G. N. Smith, of Georgetown, Ky., in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends and relatives. Interment in the family lot in Petersburg cemetery.

The three sons Paris, Clyde and Charles, son-in-law Courtney Williams, grandson Lloyd Akin, nephew, Roscoe Akin, bore the casket covered with flowers. Two little grand-daughters Dorothy Akin and Betty Williams carried flowers.

Honorary pall-bearers were Leslie Sebree, Bernard Sebree, Aubrey Finn Henry Deck, Charles Sullivan, Elbert Sullivan, Doll Allen and B. F. Christler.

CARD OF HANKS

With deepest gratitude we take this method to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to all those who so kindly and generously assisted in any way during the illness and death of our loved one. Especially we wish to thank the singers for the beautiful songs, the Rev. Geo. Smith for his sympathetic and comforting words, her kind and faithful Dr. E. J. Love. Scott Chambers and daughter for their kind and efficient services.

FATHER AND CHILDREN

In Memory of our Loved One

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stiled,
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled.

Dearest mother you have left us,
And our loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God who has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yet again we hope to meet you,
When the day of life has fled,
When in Heaven we will greet you
Where no farewell tears are shed.

You are gont but not forgotten,
Nor will you ever be,
As long as life and memory last,
We shall remember thee.

Her Loved Ones

MRS. CHARLOTTE J. GIBBS

Mrs. Charlotte J. Gibbs, aged 63 years, passed away Tuesday evening at the home of her daughter Mrs. Henry Holtzworth, after an illness of two weeks with lobar pneumonia.

Funeral services were conducted at the Florence Baptist church Friday morning at 10:30 a. m., by the Rev. W. A. M. Wood, pastor, after which the remains were laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Florence cemetery.

She is survived by one daughter Mrs. Henry Holtzworth, an grand daughter, three brothers Robert, William and Arthur Houston and one sister, Mrs. Edgar Hensley, besides a host of friends.

The pall-bearers were Ed. Newman, Mr. Biddle, Robt. Snyder, J. P. Tanner, John Delahounty and Less Sorrell.

Funeral Director Philip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

Lizzie Cathryn Smith-Aylor

Mrs. Lizzie Catherine Smith-Aylor, aged 74 years, passed away Saturday the 20th day of March at 7:30 a. m., following an illness of about three months. Cause of death arteriosclerosis.

She leaves to mourn her going three sisters namely: Mrs. Metta Gaines, of Hebron, Ky., Mrs. Minnie Blythe, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., Mrs. Mollie Cotton, with whom she made her home, also one brother Henry Smith.

It has been said by friends who knew her she was one of the best women that ever lived. She had a kind word and a smile for every one.

She was so sweet and patient during her illness. Her only desire was to pass on to the Great Beyond.

Anna Elizabeth Young

Mrs. Anna Elizabeth Young, aged 82, beloved wife of Wm. H. Young, of Nicholson, Kenton county, passed away Friday morning at 9 a. m., following a brief illness from pneumonia. She leaves a husband 2 sons, 2 daughters, 14 grandchildren, six great-children and a host of friends and relatives to mourn her going. She was a member of Hickory Grove Baptist church from which place her funeral took place on Sunday at 1:30 p. m., conducted by Bro. Turner, in the presence of a house full of relatives and friends, after which the remains were conveyed to Williamstown for burial. The casket bearers were Cecil Northcutt, Clifford Northcutt, Jerome Baird, Elmer Baird, Sanley Hergott, Francis Dudley.

C. Scott Chambers had charge of the funeral arrangements.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our many friends who came to us in our sad hour in the loss of our dear mother

MRS. CHARLOTTE GIBBS

We thank the churches, the school and friends for their beautiful floral pieces. Bro. Wood for his kind words of consolation, Dr. Rouse and Philip Taliaferro for his efficient service as funeral director.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Holtzworth

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our hanks to our friends for their kindness and sympathy during the serious illness and death of our beloved brother Harry Stevens. We appreciate the comforting words of Bro. Campbell, and the beautiful songs that were sung. We also thank C. Scott Chambers for the efficient manner in which the funeral was conducted, and all who contributed to the services.

The Stevens Family.

VERONA

Remember the lecture which takes place at Verona Baptist church Friday evening at 7 o'clock p. m., slow time March 27th. Instead of 7:30 as previously announced, Rev. H. C. Wayman, of the First Baptist church, of Newport, Ky., will do the lecturing, accompanied by his choir. Everybody invited.

Mr. Jacob Showers has been quite ill the past few days.

Rev. B. H. Turner, of Independence, filled the appointment of Rev. R. F. DeMoisey at the Baptist church here last Sunday morning. Bro. Turner made a good impression on his hearers.

Rev. J. Newton Powers and family of Erlanger, visited relatives here last Sunday.

Mrs. Laura Gaines, who was quite ill, was removed to Booth's hospital last Thursday by J. L. Hamilton for medical treatment.

Health of the neighborhood generally good, except colds.

Deputy Sheriff W. B. Cotton, of Burlington, was here on business last week.

BUS COMPETITION HITS RAILROADS

Bankers Association President Asks If Unfair Aid Is Given Motorized Transport—For Rail Mergers.

NEW YORK.—Fair treatment for the railroads in respect to highway motor competition was called for by Reuse C. Stephenson, President American Bankers Association, in a recent address here. He also strongly endorsed "sound economic railway consolidation" and praised President Hoover for his initiative in this respect.

"I am very strongly of the opinion that one of the measures which would help materially to put back business where it ought to be is the Eastern four-system plan of railroad consolidation as announced recently following negotiations instituted by President Hoover," said Mr. Stephenson. "Its adoption by the Interstate Commerce Commission would tend to stabilize the transportation industry, facilitate operation and exert a favorable influence on business in general.

"It is a fact well known to business leaders that our railroads are now facing a crisis. Not only do they need protective laws to meet competitive situations arising from increased use of our highways and waterways by other carriers, but they need unification such as the proposed four-system plan provides. Our President has acted wisely in assuming a leadership in this respect and his move deserves the support of every clear-thinking citizen."

Mr. Stephenson declared that the railroads have served this country "so superlatively well that we are prone in our public affairs to overlook our dependence upon them and our obligations to them. The past, present and future progress of the United States is inseparably bound up with their welfare. In neglecting just consideration for them we are even more neglectful of the public's best economic interests.

A Question of Public Interest

"We are confronted with the question as to how much more the public economic interest will stand an invasion of the welfare of the railroads by forces and difficulties not of their own creating and not within the scope of their own unaided powers to combat," said Mr. Stephenson. "I refer especially to new competitions that are undermining the hard-earned position of the railroads, not only with the aid of natural economic forces but also through the aid of government policies which, positively or negatively, tend to give these competitors undue advantages over the railroads.

"It goes without saying that the railroads have no right, nor claim any, so far as I have been able to discern, to complain at legitimate competition in the field of transportation, for the public is entitled to the best possible transportation at the lowest practical cost. But equally does it go without saying that this cannot be fairly brought about by using, or by failing to use, the taxing powers of government to enable competitive methods of transportation to do things they could not otherwise do as unaided private enterprises, particularly when such action impairs the invested rights held in good faith by great masses of our people in established enterprises that are serving the public well."

Mr. Stephenson said it was not his purpose to argue against such competitive transportation as the highway passenger motorbus and motor truck as such, when conducted under proper conditions and in keeping with public welfare and benefit. He declared, however, there is need for serious consideration whether such competition is being developed under conditions that are unfair to the railroads, because either the outright or obscure aid of government policy is the deciding economic factor in that competition.

Would Investigate Bus Traffic

Railroad rights of way, he declared, represent tremendous capital investments, on which the railroads have also heavy current costs to meet. "They pay every day a million dollars in taxes and most of this is on their rights of way," he said. "Also they spend daily over two million dollars additional for the proper maintenance of way." He asserted that the motorbuses have not had to pay for their rights of way in any sense that the railroads paid for theirs.

"They have simply taken possession of public highways built by public funds, both state and national," he continued, "and they have extensively made those highways vastly less comfortable, less safe and less serviceable for private motorists and others who are contributing chiefly to their creation and maintenance."

Mr. Stephenson declared that all these matters should be thoroughly inquired into by competent public bodies, both state and national, with a view of determining the equities and basic public economic interests involved, "particularly in respect to their effects upon the nation's railroads.

"I venture to say," he added, "that such inquiries would show whether it is to the public interest to let things remain as they are, whether the situation calls for a new basis of motorbus and truck taxes to satisfy the equities of the case or whether it would call for such drastic action as the exclusion of this traffic from our public general highways, and the requirement that, even as the railways, it provide as a part of its own private capital investment its own rights of way and for its own maintenance of way out of operating income."

Abroad Remembered by "Hanging the Wrong Man"

The phrase "Hanged the wrong man" appears to have had originally a positive significance rather than as now applied in the mere accident of being cut down prematurely. In 1685 a man named Richard Johnson was hanged at Shrewsbury. He hung for half an hour and still showed signs of life, so the hangman went up to see what was the matter. Noticing two books at the back of Johnson's neck, he took him down, pulled off his shirt, and discovered that the books were secured by a rope wound around, and under the culprit's body, the whole device taking the strain off his neck. The ropes were cut off and he was put up again, when the job was effectively completed. Johnson had previously applied to the undersheriff for the privilege of being buried in his full garb, and if he had concealed the books properly and been more adept in simulation he would no doubt have lived to tell the tale. The records convey the impression that tricks of this kind were not new, and that the hangman assumed a knowing or frankly suspicious look when he went forward to investigate. — Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

Odd Pledges Accepted by Spanish Pawnshop

Pawnshops are often amazingly interesting places—especially when you happen to be hard up. And the most curious of all of them is probably one in Barcelona, Spain, where birds and animals are accepted as pledges. Bears, camels, horses and dogs are accepted by this unique "uncle" as a matter of course. The chief patrons are circus proprietors. One polar bear who was handed, so to speak, over the counter by his needy owner proved to have an appetite more remarkable than that of any small boy at a Christmas party. His owner could not redeem him, and other circus proprietors who visited the shop in search of four-footed "turns" were apparently aware of his fame as an eater, for no purchaser could be found for him. At last he had to be killed, lest his food bill ruin the business. A woman snake charmer recently gave into the care of "uncle" a collection of performing snakes! She needed money to return to her native country. A few months later, however, she succeeded in redeeming her pets from their temporary home.

Tourists for 300 Years

Delft in the Eighteenth century was celebrated for its pottery and porcelain—this repute has gone, although there is a modern cheaper Delft ware which gets some honor from the past. The modern tourist hardly notices it when he finds this really delightful old Dutch city. He is more apt to be led by his guide to see the Prinsenhof on the Oude Delft, where the great William of Orange was killed in 1584, by his murderer Gerhard, or to see the tomb of Admiral Tromp in the Oude Kerk, for he was the victor of 32 naval battles, including the defeat of the English fleet. Grotius, the first international lawyer, also lies here. The Dutch consider it one of their most interesting places and for 300 years it has received tourists who praise it.

Not by Bread Alone

Man cannot live by bread alone. He hungers and thirsts after knowledge. He pushes the boundaries of his mind's dominion to the frontiers of the cosmos. The distances between the stars exist in his mental measurements. Can one imagine physical air waves accidentally falling together into Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony," or physical type fortuitously arranging itself into Shelley's "Ode to the West Wind," or stones carving themselves and falling together into the cathedral of Amiens? There is a plus quality in such things that overpasses all materialistic needs and that materialism never can explain.—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

Divisions of Orient

Japan, China and the other countries on or near the eastern coast of Asia comprise the geographical region known as the Far East. "The Orient" is a more general term and includes all countries in Asia east of the Mediterranean. "Near East" is applied to Turkey in Europe, Asia Minor, Armenia, Georgia, Azerbaijan, Persia, Syria, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Arabia and Egypt. Thus it will be seen that the Near East and the Far East in a general way consist of divisions of the Orient.

Ancient Rhodesian Foundry

An ancient iron foundry, buried six feet in a cavern, has been dug up by the Italian expedition which is searching for traces of prehistoric man near the Livingstone rocks in Rhodesia. Here 5,000 or 4,000 years ago a superior, intellectual race smelted iron by primitive methods, such as are now known to the Bantu people. The discovery indicates the great age of the Zimbabwe and other Rhodesian stone ruins, and throws new light on the history of metallurgy.

First Inter-Collegiate Sleep Contest Proves Sweets Aid Restful Slumber

Skidmore College girls, who participated in sleep contest, enjoying an informal luncheon of cookies and bonbons as they cram for exams. Inset: Dr. Laird getting data from Miss Marjorie Moore, Skidmore sophomore, who seems to be debating whether to depend upon an alarm clock or a box of chocolates to get her up in time for classes in the morning.

Cake and Candy Eaters Arise in Sunny Mood at Alarm's First Jangle

HAMILTON, N. Y.—That there is just as much science as poetry in the expression "sweet sleep" is revealed in the record of an intercollegiate slumber contest recently conducted between men students at Colgate University and girl students at Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs.

The contest, conducted on a scientific basis jointly by Dr. Donald A. Laird, director of Colgate's department of psychology, and Dr. Linus W. Kline, Skidmore psychologist, ended in a walk-away for the girls, and indicated that the most restful and refreshing sleep was the reward of those who went in for diets rich in sweets and other carbohydrates.

Furthermore, the sweet-eating girls were said to be much sweeter and prompter about arising in the morning than the Colgate men and their sister students who went in for more ascetic eating. Most of the young men at Colgate had to be called at least twice before they could be aroused from their slumbers. The Skidmore girls bounded out of their beds at the first note of the alarm clock.

Each of the 136 Skidmore students and 140 Colgate students, who participated in the experiment, reported daily over a period of two weeks on 225 items of data which had to do with their modes of living, their emotional states, and their reactions to physical exertion.

A classification of this data showed that the two contestants having perfect sleep scores were girls who consumed the largest quantities of sweets. It also showed that the girl students in general slept about 15 per cent better than men students.

"Thirty-four girls who consumed the most carbohydrates either in their coffee, on their cereal, at the college drug store, soda fountain, or from boxes of candy," Dr. Laird said in reporting the contest, "had the least trouble falling asleep and were bothered less by dreams than their more ascetic sisters, indicating a greater ease of muscular relaxation. The general sleep index, consisting of a dozen factors, also showed decidedly better sleep for the heavy carbohydrate eaters.

"This is due to the carbohydrates supplying the muscles quickly with glycogen, or blood sugar, which is the primary muscle food. It also lessens the lactable chemical condition of the muscles which otherwise interferes with relaxation, essential in promoting good sleep."

Over a period of seven years Dr. Laird has been making a study of sleep and fatigue, particularly as they are affected by various foods, habits of living, noise, heat and the various other elements and influences which affect the average person.

Cincinnati Patriotic Society Formed in Revolution

The Society of the Cincinnati is an hereditary patriotic society organized in 1783 by the American and foreign officers of the Continental army assembled in their encampment on the Hudson river near Fishkill, N. Y. The original meeting was held in the Verplanck house, then the headquarters of Baron Steuben. The objects of the society were: "To perpetuate as well the remembrance of the Revolution as the mutual friendships which have been formed under the pressure of common danger. . . ." Since most of the officers were returning to their farms, which they had left to fight for the republic, they named their organization the Society of the Cincinnati, after their Roman prototype, Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus. George Washington was the first president general. He was elected in 1787 and re-elected until his death. Presidents general succeeding him have been Alexander Hamilton, C. Cotesworth Pinckney, Thomas Pinckney, Aaron Ogden, Morgan Lewis, William Popham, H. A. S. Dearborn, Hamilton Fish, William Wayne and Winslow Warren. The state societies meet annually and the general society meets once in every three years. The living hereditary members number 980. The emblem symbolizes the union of France and America.

Unlike Many Prophets, These Two Were Right

The centenary of the death of Henry Bell, that erratic genius responsible for the introduction of steam navigation on the Clyde, has passed. On the trial trip of the Comet, Bell is reported to have declared: "Wherever there is a river . . . throughout the world there will speedily be a steamboat." Similarly Robert Stephenson, who foresaw the development of that other means of transport—the railway—and whose name is ever associated with the Liverpool and Manchester railway, which was opened more than one hundred years ago, while sitting in a Stockton inn, told his son and John Dixon: "I venture to tell you I think you will live to see the day when railways will supersede almost all other methods of conveyance in this country. What I have said will come to pass, as sure as you live." Both of these prophets lived to see the fulfilment of their prophecies.

Legends of Empedocles

Empedocles lived in royal style, surrounded by all the pomp and pageantry great wealth could procure. He was exceedingly kind to the poor and gave large sums to succor them. He also provided dowries for scores of poor young virgins to enable them to secure husbands.

Empedocles studied medicine and became a really great physician for the time. He was brought to a woman who had lain for seven days as if dead. "She can, and will, remain in that state, without eating or breathing, for thirty days," declared Empedocles. He was right. She did. At the end of that time he restored her to full life and vigor.—Exchange.

Old Anglo-Saxon Word

Minster, meaning a Christian religious house, is from an Anglo-Saxon word, mynster, meaning the same thing. In the nomenclature of the English church, it means an abbey, or the monastic building of a religious society. In the term Westminster abbey, the word abbey is superfluous, for minster means the same thing, and is so used in York minster, meaning the abbey church at York. It is generally agreed that Westminster was so called because it was west of St. Paul's. The present abbey is the abbey of St. Peter, but is called Westminster because built on the site of the old Westminster.

Change With Weather

Some hygroscopes are not mechanical; they owe their hygroscopic properties to their color, which changes with the state of humidity of the air by reason of the application of sympathetic inks. These instruments are often composed of a flower or a figure, of light muslin or paper, immersed in the following solution: Cobalt chloride, 1 part; gelatin, 10 parts; water, 100 parts. The normal coloring is pink. This color changes into violet in medium humid weather and into blue in very dry weather.—Washington Star.

Chinese God of Destiny

The image of the famous Chinese God of Destiny before which the young are taught to pray is rather a terrifying object with its great glaring eyes, and open mouth full of sharpened teeth. He is regarded as a friend, however. The young are taught to kneel and pray for light for their future guidance. The abode of this idol is the famous 501 temple in Pekin, so-called because of that number of images housed therein and where the Chinese repair for worship.

Compromise

The mother of a four-year-old youngster had been obliged to resort to disciplinary measures to suppress the cavortings of her offspring. When bedtime arrived, the sensibilities of the child continued to show signs of injury.

"Kiss mother, honey," suggested the mother as she tucked the covers about her daughter.

"All right, mamma, I still love you. But I don't like you," firmly announced the little one.

Woman Originated Red Cross Christmas Seal

The Red Cross Christmas seal was introduced in the year 1907 by Miss Emily Bissell, secretary of the Delaware Red Cross at Wilmington, Del. Jacob A. Riis, the social reformer and author, was responsible for its adoption.

As article by Mr. Riis in the Outlook in 1907 on Christmas stamps and seals and how they had been sold in Denmark for the support of a children's hospital, gave Miss Bissell her idea. She accordingly appeared before the central committee with a stamp bearing a red cross and the words "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year," which that chapter desired to sell for the benefit of antituberculosis work. Her suggestion was adopted, and by this method she raised $1,000 toward paying for the site of the first tuberculosis sanitarium in Delaware—Hope farm.

The nation-wide sale of seals was thereafter sponsored as a means of raising funds and as an educational device by the Red Cross. The distribution is now, however, in the hands of the National Tuberculosis association and its many state and local branches, and the double-barred cross which appears on the Christmas seals is the symbol of that organization.

Whole World Enriched by Poet's "Golden Pen"

Omar Khayyam, Persian poet, was born about the middle of the Eleventh century at Nishapur, Khorassan, where he died about 1123. As an astronomer he was known for a revision of the Persian calendar, and occupied a position of importance at the court of Mahmud of Chuzni. It is as the author of a collection of quatrains, called the Rubaiyat, that Omar Khayyam is more popularly known. These poems—isolated, impulsive, unrestrained and characterized by rapid transitions from love minstrelsy to grave argument, and from a deadly fatalism to ribald tavern songs—are an interesting development of Persian mysticism. There is little doubt that Omar was not the author of all the poems which inspired his translator Fitzgerald's pen. Fitzgerald's translation was first published anonymously in 1859. "Rubai"; (or rubary) is the Persian word for quatrain or epigram, a stanza of four lines, the first, second and fourth lines rhyming. "Rubaiyat" means a collection of quatrains.

Paris of the East

After visiting the often picturesque but malodorous and shabby Chinese quarters of Shanghai, the European part of the city, known as the Bund, is most striking in contrast. Facing the waterfront, it is a combination of Riverside drive in New York and Michigan boulevard in Chicago. Great banks, legations, fine residences, hotels, and great commercial houses give it a princely appearance. Foochow road is the "great white way," Rubicund road is the great motor drive, and between these and the gay life of the city, elbowing one's way through crowds of Chinese, to tea houses, theaters or the great pagoda of the Loong-wha-loy Temple, the tourist has thrills enough for hours or days as he may wish.

Famous Old 'Frisco Hostelry

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce says that the hotel What Cheer house, built on a hull of an old ship in San Francisco bay provided rough comfort for miners and ranchers. It was operated by Robert B. Woodward, who also later conducted the well known pleasure park, Woodward's gardens. The What Cheer house was located at Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets in San Francisco. It is reported that this hotel was the first in San Francisco to be run on the European plan, and at one time it contained the only library in town, which was frequented by Mark Twain and Bret Harte.

Best Light for the Eyes

The American investigators, Ferree and Rand, have found that there was less fatigue to the eye for yellow light than for red, blue and green. They also found that visual acuity and speed of vision—and, in fact, all the visual functions—were at their best under yellow light. Ruffer, a German investigator, found the same thing. He found that visual acuity and speed of vision are greater for yellow light than for green, red, white or blue. He is of the opinion that blue and red lights are the colors most fatiguing to the eye. Other German investigators have obtained the same results.

Bostonese

She was a Boston provincial, and smacked of the Back bay. Approaching a clerk in one of Fifth avenue's swankiest millinery shops she said quite patronizingly: "I'm from Boston and would like something a trifle smart without being the least bit showy." "I get you, ma'am, sort of second mourning," replied the experienced saleslady, adding "I once lived in Boston myself."

Careth for Carrots

When Annabel returned from Sunday school her mother asked what the text was.

Promptly Annabel replied, "Eat Carrots for Me."

Since then Annabel has been eating, without protest, her mother's prescribed carrots, not knowing that the text really was, "He careth for me."

Practical Lunch Dishes for Mother's Busy Day

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

HALF past eleven! In half an hour the children will be home from school, and there is nothing ready for lunch! Now what can you have that will be hot and substantial, as all mid-winter lunches should be, yet which can be prepared in the few remaining minutes?

Of conrse a shelf well supplied with Oven Baked Beans, Cream of Tomato and Cream of Pea Soup, Cooked Spaghetti in Tomato Sauce, Peanut Butter, Fruit Jellies and Salad Dressings will be a great help. Many delicious luncheons can be served from these foods, which are all ready to heat and place on the table. And many other savory dishes also may be made in just a few minutes by varying these foods in different ways.

The following recipes for quickly prepared luncheon dishes, which are all made with foods from the supply shelf as a basis, will help you when you are confronted with the problem of serving hot, nourishing lunches in the shortest possible time:

Mexican Spaghetti: ½ cup chopped cooked ham; 1 medium size chopped green pepper; 1 small chopped onion; 1 medium can Cooked Spaghetti.

Brown ham, chopped pepper, and onion with a small amount of butter or ham fat. Add Cooked Spaghetti and allow to cook slowly until the Spaghetti is thoroughly heated. This amount serves six.

Green Peppers Stuffed with Oven Baked Beans: Wash six large green peppers, cut in half and remove seeds. Place in boiling water, turn off heat and allow to remain in water about five minutes, to take sting from the peppers. Cool, fill with Oven Baked Beans, cover with buttered crumbs and place in casserole. Add a small amount of water and bake in a moderate oven until the peppers are tender.

Sliced Beef Creole: 2 tablespoons butter; ½ pound sliced dried beef; 4 level tablespoons flour; 2 cups milk; ½ cup Chili Sauce.

Fry the dried beef in butter until slightly brown. Add flour and stir until well blended. Then add milk and cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add Chili Sauce and serve on slices of toast, toasted rolls or muffins.

Corn Tamale: 1 medium can corn; 2 slices bacon; 1 cup bread crumbs; 1 tablespoon sugar; 1 green pepper; 2 tablespoons butter; salt; 1 small can Cream of Tomato Soup.

Cook four slices of bacon cut into small pieces, and sprinkle over the bottom of the casserole. Add a layer of corn, crumbs, green pepper, sugar, salt and Cream of Tomato Soup. Then repeat, using the remainder of the ingredients. Dot over with butter and bake for one-half hour in a moderately hot oven. When almost done, lay the four remaining slices of bacon over the top and allow them to become crisp and brown.

Cuban Eggs: ½ cup sausage; 1 teaspoon chopped onion; 2 tablespoons Chili Sauce; 4 to 6 eggs; salt and pepper.

Cook sausage with chopped onion for five minutes, or until delicately brown. Then add Chili Sauce. Beat eggs until light, season with salt and pepper and pour over the meat. Cook slowly, stirring constantly until the eggs are thick and creamy. Serve over slices of hot toast.

Peanut Butter Cutlets: 1 cup Peanut Butter; 1 cup hot milk; ½ teaspoon salt; pepper.

Mix Peanut Butter with hot milk and seasoning, blending together thoroughly. Drop slices of bread into the Peanut Butter mixture and fry in a skillet with two tablespoons hot fat. Garnish with pickles and olives.

The BEST Gray Hair Remedy is Home Made

To half pint of water add one ounce of bay rum, one ounce of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. Barbo will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Safeguard

When water has been coldered, do not take it to yourself; for if you do not take it to yourself, it shall never be taken from you.—Leo Tol.

Art of Conversation

Good conversation requires a good listener as well as a good talker. Given a reasonable amount of brains on both sides, the requisite of good conversation, as well as of good manners in general, would seem to be consideration for the other fellow, a readiness to give as well as take, appreciation of, and responsiveness to others.—New York Sun.

Britain's Honor to "Unknown"

To honor the American dead of the World war the British nation dedicated a Victoria Cross with the simple yet expressive words, "The Unknown Warrior of the United States of America," inscribed on the cross, which, by direction of his majesty King George V, was laid by Lord Beatty on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at the Arlington National cemetery near Washington on the 11th day of November, 1921.

Household Sweepers

Common brooms are made of panicles, or tops of broom corn bound together, and were also formerly made of the twigs of the plan broom. The coarse brooms used in street sweeping are manufactured chiefly from the twigs of the Colune palm. Brooms are also made of Piassaba fiber and other materials. Snow brooms and sometimes yard brooms are made of wire or much coarser material, and are much larger than house brooms.

BROODER PNEUMONIA NOT COMMON IN STATE

The Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky has received several requests for information about brooder pneumonia. This disease is sometimes called brooder disease or aspergillosis, says Dr. P. E. Hall. It is found in chickens of all ages but is most common in baby chicks. Brooder pneumonia is caused by a fungus. The fungus is found in moldly feed and litter.

Affected chicks gasp for breath and there is a rattling in the windpipe. They soon lose their appetite and in a short time become weak and unable to stand. Sick birds may die in a short time but usually the illness is prolonged.

There is no successful treatment for this disease. The majority of the affected chicks eventually die and so they may as well be killed and buried. The brooder and all feeding and watering utensils should be thoroughly cleaned. Clean feed and litter should be substituted for the moldy feed or litter.

Brooder pneumonia is not very common in Kentucky. The majority of suspected cases in chicks under two weeks of age usually prove to be pullorum disease (bacillary white diarrhea). In older chickens coccidiosis is often mistaken for brooder pneumonia.

Lee county farmers using the most up-to-date methods are said to be making money from poultry despite low egg prices.

Ninety-seven Grayson county farmers are this year growing their first Korean lespedeza.

United States Close to War With Spain in 1873

The "Virginius affair" in 1873 almost caused war between the United States and Spain. The Virginius, ship of American registry in the property of an American citizen, was captured by a Spanish war vessel on the high seas and taken to Santiago, Cuba was then engaged in the ten years' war against Spain and the Spanish officials contended that the Virginius was about to land arms and men for the rebels. Spain was at that time a republic under President Castelar, and while the President was having an investigation made, pending his reply to the demand of this country that the Virginius be released, Spanish authorities in Cuba took matters into their own hands. On November 7, 1873, Capt. Joseph Fry of the Virginius and 30 members of his crew were shot, and the following day 12 of the passengers were similarly executed. Numerous indignation meetings were held in the United States, with loud demands for war if Spain did not make amends. It developed, however, that the Virginius really had no right to fly the American flag at the time of her capture. The vessel was turned over to the United States navy on December 16, and the surviving passengers and crew released. Spain was not required to salute the American flag and the incident was closed.

Eggleston's Fine Story First Printed Serially

In a copy of the first edition of "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" given to Hamlin Garland, the author inscribed these lines: "This story was published in Hearth and Home in October, November and December of 1871, and in book form December 15, it sold about 10,000 copies the first six months and about 10,000 in each of the two following half years. It was pirated and sold in England in an edition of 10,000 copies, and has since been reprinted there with no profit to the author. Madame Blanc rendered it into French for the Revue des Deux Mondes. It was published in book covers in French, German and Danish and perhaps other tongues. This copy has all the original crudities, exuberances and violations of artistic canons that have helped to give the book a sale of more than a hundred thousand in the United States. These facts are set down here for my good friend, Mr. Hamlin Garland, with the sincere regards of Edward Eggleston."

Augsburg and Fugger Family

A visit to Augsburg in Germany is not complete without making some acquaintance with the Fuggers. This was a Swabian family of ennobled merchants, famous in the Sixteenth century. It traced its descent to John Fugger, a weaver, who lived at Graben, near Augsburg, early in the Fourteenth century. The tourist today will stand in admiration before the old home of these merchant princes. The town house is adorned with frescoes by F. Wagner, while the hotel, near by, known as Die Drei Mohren, was another Fugger town house. The Fugger museum is installed in the so-called Fugger bath rooms, which are decorated in the style of the Italian Renaissance. It contains the art treasures of the family, weapons, coins, medals and golden vessels. The splendid Fugger chapel can be seen in the Catholic church of St. Ulrich.

Indians Fear Lightning

No Navajo Indian will ever make a campfire of wood from a tree that has been struck by lightning or that he thinks may have been. If such a fire is made by the irreverent white man, the Indian will retire to a distance, where he can neither feel the heat nor smell the smoke, and will go to sleep in his blanket, fireless and supperless, rather than eat of food prepared on that kind of tree. The Navajo believes that if he comes within the influence of the flame he will absorb some of the essence of the lightning which will sooner or later kill him. In the mountains of the Navajo country more than half the great pines are scarred by lightning, but no wood from them is used.

"Cooper," Not "Cowper"

Few names in English literature are more commonly mispronounced than that of the English poet William Cowper (1731-1800), says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. There is conclusive evidence that the poet and members of his family, as well as his contemporaries, always pronounced the name "koop-er," of which it is merely a variant form. Cowper's ancestors spelled the name "Cooper." John Cooper, who was an alderman of London and who died in 1609, changed the spelling to "Cowper" and that spelling was followed by his descendants. But the pronunciation did not change with the spelling.

Ground Hog Superstition

The Scotch say, "If Candlemas is fair and clear, there'll be twa winters in the year." There is a Latin proverb of the same import. The French have a similar rhyme and so have the Germans, and peoples of other European countries, for according to the superstition, the ground hog, or some of his kind, performs on this day. In Germany it is the badger whose shadow portends cold weather; in France, the marmot; in England, the hedgehog; and elsewhere the bear. American pioneers merely fastened upon the ground hog an idea brought from abroad.

PROGRESS OF KOREAN LESPEDEZA

Thousands of acres of korean lespedeza will be sowed in Kentucky this year. Ralph Kenney, field agent for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, estimates that 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 pounds of seed will be required to meet the needs of farmers who desire to produce more hay and pasture for livestock.

Todd and Christian counties have prospective seedings of 100,000 acres each. About the same amount of seed was sown in these counties last year, and the fields nearly all will be left standing this year.

It is expected that nearly 100,000 pounds of korean seed will be used in south of Weston and Simpson counties, and about half that much in Henderson county. In Oldham county, where 5,000 pounds were sowed last year, it is predicted that five to ten times that amount will be sowed this year.

In Spencer county 500 pounds of korean seed were sowed last year, while this year's prospective seeding is 5,000 pounds. It is estimated that 10,000 pounds of seed will be used in Fayette county, and that Jessamine county farmers will sow 15,000 pounds sowed last year.

Seedings of 50, 75 and 100 acres alone or in mixtures are not uncommon this year, according to Mr. Kenney. One Oldham county farmer had sowed 2,500 pounds of korean seed and 2,000 pounds of Jap clover seed by March 10.

Corn county farmers are called on a basket by posting their orders for soybean seed.

Twenty-five Boyd county dairy farmers attended a feeding school at Ashland.

Feels Better Than Any Other Time in Life

"So great was my suffering that I hardly cared whether I lived or not. Every bite I ate gave me the most severe pains—the indigestion, heartburn, bloating and biliousness were simply terrific. Even nights were torments to me—night after night sleep would never come. I began losing flesh rapidly. I began to look twice my age. I was truly in a terrible condition. My neighbor advised Karnak for which I will thank her to my dying day. It is the most marvelous medicine in the world. It not only rid me of my suffering but it has caused me to gain in weight and I feel better than I ever felt in my life and sleep like a child. I thank my neighbor and I thank Karnak."

Baseball League Meet To Organize For 1931 To Arrange Schedule

SUNDAY SCHOOL CIRCUIT HAS SEVEN TEAMS.—APRIL 25 IS ONE OPENING DAY.

Despite chilly blasts and the failure of March to go out like a lamb, Boone County's baseball fans are busily engaged in picking winners in two county leagues for this season. Plans for a Sunday School league were discussed, last week, and Wednesday officials of the Boone County League are to meet, at Burlington, to lay plans for another season.

Thirtyfour representatives, of seven Sunday Schools in Boone county, met at the courthouse, Thursday, to discuss plans for the second season of the Boone County Sunday School League. Sunday Schools represented were, Burlington M. E., Burlington Baptist, Hebron, Bullittsville, Bullittsburg, Taylorsport and Sand Run.

In addition to these Sunday Schools those present at the meeting learned that Petersburg Christian Sunday School would also be interested in the league this year. With eight teams from these communities, the league promises to furnish the county with some excellent baseball.

A general meeting of the league will be held at Hebron, April 9 at 7 P. M., at the school house, to discuss final plans for the opening of the league's season. Opening day will be announced following this meeting. The games for the season will be played on Saturday afternoon.

Officers of the league for 1931 are: Rev. F. E. Walker, pastor Burlington Baptist Church, president; and Charles W. Riley, Hebron, secretary. SPEED

The year is only three months old, but already two of the world's speed records have been broken and others are threatened. Gar Wood drove a speedboat 102 miles an hour at Miami the other day. Not long ago Captain Malcolm Campbell drove an automobile 245 miles an hour. If this sort of thing keeps up throughout the year, 1931 will be the speediest twelve-month in history.

There are some high records to be challenged. There will be another airplane race for the Schneider Cup this year. The present record for speed in the air is held by Flight Commander A. H. Orlebar of the British air forces, who flew at 357.72 miles an hour in a seaplane in September, 1929, winning the Schneider trophy. That is the fastest any man has ever travelled according to the records, though it was rumored that Orlebar had touched 450 miles in his trial flights. Airmen are predicting that an official record above 400 miles an hour will be made this year. The record of the Europa for the fastest ocean passage, 4 days, 17 hours, 6 minutes, Cherbourg to New York, will surely be shot at this year.

With so many speedsters turning their attention to flying and speedboating, the older forms of competitive locomotion are being more or less neglected. No pacing horse has beaten the record of a mile in 1 minute 55 seconds set by Dan Patch in 1906, while Pete Manning's trotting record of 1.56¾ for the mile, made in 1922, remains unbroken.

No human has propelled himself faster for a mile than Paavo Nurmi did in 1923, when he negotiated the distance in 4 minutes 10.4 seconds, and Edward Tolan's record of 9⅗ second for the 100 yards, made two years ago still stands.

Everybody has a chance at some world's record or other, but let us hope that the weather man won't try to break last year's drought record.

The Family Garden

SPRING GREENS

Spring greens are among the most important of the garden vegetables, for they are the first to be harvested. They are perhaps more important this year, because the stocks of vegetables canned from last year's garden are low.

FERTILIZING

The spring greens are mustard, spinach, turnips and kale. All are hardy, and they may be started just as soon as the garden is ready. All require extremely fertile ground, particularly well supplied with nitrogen, for nitrogen is the element on which luxuriance of foliage depends. The greens need, in addition, a plentiful supply of moisture in order to make rapid, succulent growth. The soil should accordingly be well supplied with humus, for altho our normal spring seasons are moist enogh, there have been exceptions.

GROUND PREPARATION

The best way to prepare ground for greens is to turn under a good coat of manure, two inhces, for example. The humus and nitrogen that the greens leave will serve the crop of beans, tomatoes or corn that follows. If no manure can be had, but if the soil is in good condition, commercial fertilizer may be used, instead. Although nitrate of soda alone would serve, it is better to use a complete fertilizer, as for instance, 3-8-6 or 4-10-4, to assure fertility for the "succession" crop. It may be broadcast, after breaking, and worked in at the rate of one pound to 25 square feet of space, or it may be sown in the row at the rate of one pound to 25 feet, and worked in, before the seed is dropped.

CULTURE

Although greens are customarily sown broadcast, it is better to sow them in rows, beter to fight the insect pests that sometimes attack them. If the garden is worked with hand tools, the rows need be only 15 inches apart, but if horse cultivating is to be done, 30 or even 36 inches will be necessary. The seed should be dropped at the rate of 3 or 4 to the inch, and it should be but barely covered.

Cultivation should always be shallow, and the surface should be left level.

PESTS

The most bothersome pest on spring greens is the aphis or plant louse. It causes the dwarfing, and sometimes the total destruction of the plant by sucking its juice. Since it does not feed on the foliage, stomach poisons are not effective, but a special control must be used. The most commonly chosen of these is tobacco spray. Although it may be made of trash tobacco it is better to use standard toacco extract such as Black Leaf 40, whose strength is known. Directions for its use are found on the container. This material should be put on with a sprayer so that it may be directed to the under sides of the leaves. The temperature of the air should be 60 degrees or higher so that the tobacco odor may be released quickly, for the odor kills lice that the spray not acoder kills lice that the spray does not actually touch. One thorough application is usually sufficient. A way to avoid the fine is to use greens that are not susceptible. The new "loose resistant turnip," which makes greens as readily in the spring as in the fall, is an example.

VARIETIES

Of the other spring greens, the following are the best varieties for Kentucky gardeners to use: Spinach, King of Denmark; mustard, Chinese; Tendergreen or "Mustard-spinach;" kale, "Spring" or "Smooth."

A MILLION IN LOANS TO KENTUCKY FARMERS

Government loans to Kentucky farmers have passed the million dollar mark, according to an announcement from Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the College of Agriculture at Lexington. At the close of business on March 24th, the St. Louis farmer's seed loan office reported that it had approved 9 290 applications from Kenttucky farmers, totaling $1,018,043.

All applications now are being paid within 48 hours after they are received in the St. Louis office, and many of them are paid the same day they are received, it was announced.

The number of applications from the eight states served by the St. Louis office totaled 36,633 on March 24, for a total sum of $4,478,857.

Dean Cooper praised the work of local county committees in the assistances they have given in helping make loans available to farmers. County agents also have been of invaluable service in informing farmers and advising with them in applying for loans, he said.

In a few instances landlords have hesitated to give the necessary crop waivers, but as a yhole their viewpoint has been that the loans were desirable in order that their tenants might be well finanded in putting out crops.

Applications now may be made for loans under the appropriation for agricultural rehabilitation. Funds may be secured to purchase sustenance and clothing for the family, to hire labor for the farm, and to pay for repairs for machinery.

Loans also now may be secured to purchase feed for cattle, horses, hogs and sheep now on the farm.

KENTUCKY FARM RADIO PROGRAM

The College of Agriculture will broadcast the following farm radio program from the University of Kentucky extension studios of WHAS the week of April 6. Each program will begin at 12:45, central standard time.

April 6—Timely dairy hints, H. B. Morrison.

Poultry pointers for April, Stanley Caton.

April 8—Handling the wool clip, L. J. Horlacher.

European corn borer, W A. Price.

April 10—Let the farm flock help feed the family, C. E. Harris.

What farm folks are asking, L. C. Brewer.

C. I. Jones, a Jackson county farmer, has been averaging 125 eggs from 136 hens much of this year, and reports a profit even at present low prices.

Hints for the Home

by Nancy Hart

Bran Biscuits

1½ cup bran
1½ cups flour
5 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons sugar
1½ cup water
2 tablespoons shortening

Mix thoroughly bran, flour, baking powder, salt, sugar; add sufficient water to make soft dough; add melted shortening; roll out lightly to about ¼-inch thick on floured board; cut with biscuit cutter. Bake in hot oven 12 to 15 minutes.

Buttermilk Bread

Mix an egg in a mixing bowl and add a half cup of milk, one-half spoon of salt and two cups of cooked hominy. Mix well and spread in a baking dish. Dot with butter, a little over a teaspoon in all and bake in medium oven for about a half hour. Bring to the table in dish in which it is cooked and serve with a spoon.

Custard Sauce

One pint milk, three eggs, one-half cup powdered sugar, one teaspoon vanilla.

Put the milk on to boil in a double boiler. Beat the eggs and sugar together until light and creamy, then stir them into the boiling milk and stir over the first until they begin to thicken, no longer or the sauce will curdle. Take from the first, add the vanilla and turn out to cool.

HOME SUPPLIES MORE IMPORTANT THAN CASH RETURNS FROM FARMS

Business records of 4,000 Kentucky farms, analyzed by the department of farm economics o. the College of Agriculture, show that the value of home supplies furnished for the family living on the average Kentucky farm is greater than the net cash income for the labor and management of the operator.

The College is stressing the production of a large part of the family living on the farm this year. It is urging the growing of a garden from early spring to late fall, storing vegetables for winter food, canning and drying fruits and vegtables, storing butter and eggs for winter use, and providing dairy products, eggs and poultry, meat and fuel from the farm.

Dr. W. D. Nicholls tells how one farmer produces an abundance of home supplies. This man's garden is the most fertile acre and a half on the farm. During the winter the garden supplies green kale. In the early spring there are potato onions, mustard greens, lettuce, radishes, asparagus, rhubarb and peas. Following shortly are beets, beans potatoes and cabbage. There are also tomatoes, both arly and main crop varieties, watermelons and cantaloupes. There are roasting ears from early July until frosts in October. There is a succession of snap beans throut the season. To provide this continual supply the corn and btans are planted at intervals of two weeks. Just before frost the large green tomatoes on the late planted vines are picked and placed in the cellar. Here they ripen and furnish a fine supply of ripe tomatoes until December. There are also a grape arbor and a home orchard. There in even a row for sage for seasoning sausage.

This man cares for his garden as systemntically as he does his field crops. During the growing season the farm work force once a week be set to work for a quarter of a day or a half day to cultivate the garden and make whatever new plantings are called for. This farmer is not a farden faddist, but a successful farm owner and operator, selling each year several thousand dollars worth of cattle, hogs, lambs, and wool, tobacco, wheat and hay. He paid for his farm frou the proceeds of its sales and in addition made substantial investments in good securities.

He also has several good milk cows, part of them freshening in the spring and past in the fall, so that there is an abundance of milk, cream and butter every day in the year. The slaughter of several hogs provides the family with plenty of hams, bacon, lard, sausage, spareribs and other meat products. He cooperates with several neighbors in a beef club. Beginning in October each member of the group furnishes a young fat beef animal. One animal is slaughtered each week and divided among the members of the group, so that for several weeks each family has a supply of choice beef at practically no cash outay.

This man's family lives on the fat of the land. Low prices may reduce his cash receipts for a year or two but has little effect on the comfort and living of his family. His farm furnishes corn meal, flour, dried beans, vegetables for winter storage and other food products. There are plenty of eggs for the table, plenty of fried chicken for the family and guests and a fat hen for the table whenever one is wanted. A considerable surplus of eggs, broilers and hens are sold and a surplus of side meat and hams is available each year to go to the grocery in exchange for sugar, groceries, clothing and other supplies for the family.

4-H GIRLS' STUDY PERSONAL CHARM

Good health, mental alertness, ambition and the desire and ability to work rather than golden curls and baby blue eyes, are being stressed by 28 girls in the Good Luck 4-H Club in Nicholas county, in their study course in personal charm. The main project of this club is clothing construction and selection, but the girls feel that clothing may mean little unless a person has health, cleanliness, good posture and other personal charm to go with it.

The girls are studying a book on personal charm, written by a national authority, and receiving instiontion from their local leader, Mrs. A. R. Fisher and Miss Anita Burnam field agent for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

On the theory that every normal girl of the teen age wishes to be charming, he basic elements of personal charm are being discovered and practiced. These include cleanliness, proper food and rest, mental development, proper clothing and exercise.

The girls have had charge of several chapel exercises at their school in Carlisle where they spread a message of health and happiness, and they are planning to ener the state style show.

Strawberry plants have been received for setting approximately 500 acres in Warren county.

EXPECT FAVORS FOR STANDARDIZED LAMB

The arge lamb crop this year probably will result in discrimainating buying, with a preference for well finished docked ewe and wethers Records kept on several lambs in this and other states show that it pays to easrate and dock.

The Missouri Experiment Station reports that in 1928 buck lambs sold for 80 cents a hundred ess than docked ewes and wethers of the same grade; in 1929, $1.03 less, and in 1930, $1.58 less. This indicates that buyers have been more discriminating each year in favor of a standard ized lamb.

"It seems certain that farmers who neglect castraing and docking this year will be penalized with low er prices for lambs," declares Richard C. Miller, field agent for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. "This information is coming from various sources, including buyers for the larger packers. Nothing will pay greater returns for the time spent than to make lambs into docked ewes and wethers."

SAYS MEAL PLANNING IMPORTANT TO HEALTH

It is important that menus be carefully planned, especially during the months when the housewife must depend on canned and sored vegetables and fruits, suggests Miss Florence Imlay, pekl agent in home economics for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Resistance to colds, influenza and other common infections is often lowered by poor diets. Such diseases as pellagra, scurvy, rickets and ordinary anemia result from diet deficient in vitamins and minerals.

It often is necessary to do more than satisfy the appetite, in order to keep all the organs of the body in good health.

The following family food guide may be helpful in planning balanced menus when strict economy is essential. For every meal--milk for children and bread for all. For every day—cereal in porridge or puddings, potatoes, tomatoes or oranges for children, and a green or yellow vegetable.

Zeno Nordwick, a Campbell county farmboy, has received a dairy heifer from the Cooperative Pure Milk Producers' Association of Cincinnati, as a reward for being the most outstanding 4-H rairy club boy in Northern Kentucky.

County Agent Robt. F. Spence's slogan for Rockcastle county this year is: "First, food crops, second, feed crops, and third, cash crops."

Twenty-one Franklin countyfarmers sowed certified korean lespedepa seed in February, with a view to becoming certified seed growers.

Forty-three 4-H club boys in Magoffin county have received free tobacco seed and have been given instructions for growing the crop.

Frank Haynes plans to haul 150 tons of marl two miles to spread on crop land on his Meade county farm before planting time.

Seventeen farmers in Pulasi-co., have ordered 136 bushels of soybean seed. Many farmers in that county will sow soy beans this year.

Quietude of Hotels Inspiration to Guests

Hotel rooms are becoming increasingly popular as workshops for playwrights, novelists, poets and magazine writers, according to Margaret A. Barnes, president of the National Hotel Housekeepers association. More and more, the best sellers among plays and books are being written in hotels.

The reason, according to Mrs. Barnes, is the perfect privacy which is offered by the modern hotel. "If a person really wants solitude, there's no better place to find it," she says in the American Magazine. "Here is a self-contained work room, as serene and isolated as though it was a tower shut off by a moat—as secluded as a hermit's cave on a mountain top. For instance, in the detached quietude of the busy New York hotel where I work, there have been hundreds of musical scores, plays, books and short stories produced during the past year.

"When anyone comes under our care that we know is creating something special like that, everybody takes the greatest pride in making the service just right to help along the muse. Days go by when we scarcely see the inspired one. Sometimes just a gentle tapping of the typewriter is all that tells what is going on.

"Oftener than not we never know just how good or how unworthy the child is that has been born under such circumstances."

Tides in Various Parts of Old and New World

Not in many parts of the world do the tides rise over 25 feet. The highest are the spring tides at the head of the Bay of Fundy, on the coasts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where they reach 70 feet. In the Santa Crux river, Argentina, the rise is 40 feet, and at Cape Virgin, in the Straits of Magellan, they reach an equal height. In the Bristol channel, England, 44 feet is attained; along the Welsh coast, 36 feet; at Liverpool, 26 feet; at St. Malo, France, 35 feet. At no place in the Orient or along the African coast or our own western coast are any such heights reached. Bombay's high tide is 17 feet; Surat, the highest in India, 19 feet. At the other extreme is Trincomalee, Ceylon, where the neap tide rise has a height of only one foot. The highest in the United States is at Eastport, Maine, 20¼ feet.

Gibraltar Buildings

Old Captain Maubrace had retired from the sea, and determined to invest his savings in building houses.

Of course, he had his own ideas on the matter, and would not take the builder's advice. So the houses were put up overlooking the sea, but high up on a hill where they were very difficult of access.

When they were finished he called his confidential servant and said: "Now, my hearty, what shall I call them?"

The servant hesitated and then replied: "Well, sir, I should call them Gibraltar buildings."

"What do you mean?" roared the old captain.

"Because," said the man, "they say that Gibraltar will never be taken, and it never my thinkers if those ever will."

C'libacy of the Clergy

In the early centuries of Christianity priests were permitted to marry. The gradual growth of clerical celibacy, first as a custom and then as a rule, may be traced through the records of those centuries. The first church council to forbid marriage to the higher clergy was the Spanish synod of Elvira in 305 A. D. Other decrees of this kind followed in the next few centuries, but with incomplete enforcement. Under Pope Gregory VII in the Eleventh century more stringent measures were adopted and marriage among clergy was gradually stamped out. The Britannica states that the custom (of clerical marriage) lingered sporadically in Germany and England until the last few years of the Thirteenth century.

Self-Revelation

Perhaps the most withering and wittiest rejoinder ever made on a political platform, thinks Sir Ian Malcolm, writing in his reminiscences, "Trodden Ways," was that made by Joseph H. Choate during an election campaign in New York. Following a speech by "Boss" Croker, who rarely spoke in public, in which he had "completely given away his case," in the judgment of his opponents, Mr. Choate gravely said:

"Now, consider the case of Balaam's ass; before it spoke all men regarded it as quite an ordinary quadruped; but after it had spoken they discovered what an extraordinary ass it was."—Kansas City Star.

British Flag a Mixture

The Union Jack of Great Britain is composed of three crosses, representing England, Scotland and Ireland. The cross of St. George for England is a broad, upright Latin cross, red on a white ground; the cross of St. Andrew for Scotland is a saltire or X-shaped, white on a blue ground; the cross of St. Patrick for Ireland is a red saltire on a white ground. When the union of the two crowns of England and Scotland took place upon the occasion of James VI of Scotland to the English throne as James I, the flags of England and Scotland were united. The union flag as it is now [illegible] April 1801.

Crime Wards Flee Art in Eastern Countries

Detectives in Java and the Malay peninsula are being forced to deal with some strange new ideas in crime, originated by native desperadoes.

Burglars in eastern Java substitute flowers where they raise a variety of thorn apple, from the seeds of which they make a sort of flour highly narcotic in its effect. The flour is a highly potent weapon in the hands of criminals, according to a writer in Country Home. By means of a slender length of hollow bamboo inserted in a keyhole native burglars and sneak thieves are enabled to blow a small quantity of this narcotic flour into a room which they propose to rob. So powerful is its effect that the occupants are drugged into insensibility merely by inhaling a few whiffs of it, whereupon it is an easy matter for the criminals to gain access to the room and help themselves to its contents.

In the Malay peninsula, the paingi is being used as a medium for murder. Native desperadoes pound the fronds of certain varieties of palm to the consistency of powdered glass. A small quantity of this powder they invariably carry with them, just as an American gunman carries a "gat," and when they encounter anyone against whom they hold a grudge they blow it in his face. The sharp particles, being inhaled, quickly affect the lungs and death almost invariably ensues, the victim usually dying in intense agony.

Football Player Pays Price for Popularity?

The football hero has his price to pay. Either he faces a life of continual strenuous exercise or a breakdown from the lack of exercise, as shown by Dr. Henry Pleasants, Jr., in Hygeia Magazine.

Football is a grand game, says Doctor Pleasants, but a player cannot keep it up for the rest of his life. The biggest and huskiest men are beaten into the finest physical condition in the shortest possible time. Every year they go through this periodic grind and muscles are developed that they cannot keep in condition unless they become piano movers when they are out of school.

A certain number are fortunate enough to gain a taste for tennis or golf; others go into professional football, and a few become coaches. But a vast number go into indoor jobs that a one-legged, cave-chested, 100 pound, sixty-year-old clerk could do.

When an athlete or an active man becomes sedentary, every cell in his body becomes flabby and the body fluids are filled with poisons accumulated from the unused muscles. The heart has grown from the exercise and like the other muscles, it becomes flabby and accumulates poisons.

Some Wonders of Barnum

It was the inimitable Phineas T. Barnum who first made the corner at Broadway and Ann street, New York, famous. Years before the era of finished stage productions, grand operas and perfected concerts, Barnum's museum and its Uncle Tom's Cabin, with its curiosities, menagerie and shows, were the greatest attractions of the city. It drew from the entire amusement loving part of the community. Here was the home of the wooly horse and the white whales from the Arctic; the famous Cardiff giant; the even more famous white elephant of Siam; the very club with which the South Sea natives murdered Captain Cook. Here occurred the great fire from which, it was stoutly asserted by Barnum, the polar bears escaped by climbing down the firemen's ladders.—New York Sun.

A Big Bag

He was a keen golfer. What worried him, however, was that he found himself dropping into strong language when things went badly with him.

A friend suggested that, in order to check the habit, he should pick up a stone and pocket it every time he let slip a bad word.

Returning to the clubhouse after his next game, he met his friend, who said: "Well, Jack, I see you're reforming. Your pockets are not very heavy."

"No," said the golfer, gloomily, "but wait till you see the wheelbarrow the caddie's got!"

The Po'house

Dropping down to old Richmond from Washington, the tourists decided that literary shrines should have first attention, so they asked a negro taxi driver to take them to the Poe house. After the dial showed two or three miles of travel, they became doubtful of their driver, but he reassured them and soon stopped before a vast brick dwelling. "Here's the po'house," declared the driver, and over the door was chiseled, "County Poor Farm."

There was a $3 fare before they finally reached the Poe memorial.—Library Journal.

"Robbing Peter to Pay Paul"

"Fable has it," according to Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable, "that this phrase alludes to the fact that on December 17, 1550, the Abbey church of St. Peter, Westminster, was advanced to the dignity of a cathedral by letters patent; but ten years later it was joined to the diocese of London again, and many of its estates appropriated to the repairs of St. Paul's cathedral." The expression may have been a familiar one much earlier than that.

and Roosevelt" and added that it might make a good combination for 1932.

Whether this Roosevelt boom was launched just by accident is not so clear. From a high source within the Republican Party it was reported some days before the President left on his vacation trip that he had made up his mind as to the necessity for a new running mate in 1932 and had Governor Roosevelt, of Porto Rico, and Stanford MacNider, United State Minister to Canada, in mind.

For several days a report has been current around the capital that the primary purpose of the President's trip, aside from being a vacation tour, was to concentrate public attention on Roosevelt so he might test the reaction of the country to the New Yorker as a Vice-Presidential possibility.

These reports have been to the effect that the President was convinced that Governor Roosevelt had done meritorious work in Porto Rico and that unless something unusual was done to exploit it, the country would never take the interest to find out about it. The President wanted a vacation, so he coupled politics and pleasure, according to the report.

Governor Roosevelt of New York incurs all the perils of a candidate who is out in front, not in actual delegates, for their selection is several months off, but in the minds of the leading Democratic politicians throughout the country. It is a common saying that it is dangerous to be in the lead too early in the race for the presidency. And so it is unless the candidate in the lead is, so to speak, the inevitable nominee. Governor Alfred E. Smith was in the lead in the 1928 race for a year or so in advance of the convention. But the Democratic Party had to nominate Governor Smith or be rent asunder. On the other hand, William G. McAdoo was in the lead long before the 1924 convention met with practically the same support Mr. Roosevelt appears to have now and Mr. McAdoo was beaten for the nomination.

Then, too, Governor Roosevelt has courted the antagonism of the conservative business element in his party by being friendly to the Western Progressive Republicans. And the conservative element is almost always more powerful in party conventions than the progressive element. It beat McAdoo in 1920 and 1924.

Mr. Hubert Conner, a local breeder of purebred Holstein-Friesian cattle at Hebron, is one of four in Kentucky and one of 734 in the nation that has been nominated by fellow breeders as candidate for election as delegate to represent the Black-and-White breed at the 46th annual convention of The Holstein-Friesian Association of America at Syracuse, New York, on June 3rd.

Ballots will be mailed soon to the 31,000 active members of the Association and the members in each state will vote for one to 28 official delegates, depending on the number of delegates to which each state is entitled. These ballots must be filled in and returned to the Secretary's ovice at Brattleboro, Vt., not later than April 24th. The final returns on the election will be known by the middle of May and the successful candidates will be notified of their election, which is considered quite an honor among breeders of Holsteins.

Nominees in seven states, which are entitled to only one delegate each and from which one nomination was received, are certain of election. These are the states of Alabama, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee and Wyoming. No nominations were received from Georgia, Louisiana or Canada. In the 39 other states, from one to 28 delegates will be chosen and he number of candidates for election varies from 2 to 123.

The increasing interest in dairying as a means of securing cash returns on the farm through more efficient dairy cattle is indicated by the unusually large number of candidates for which applications were made, the total figure of 734 exceeding the 630 figures by more than 20 per cent and representing 544 different communities. Of this number, a total of 200 delegates would be eligible for election but, due to the failure of the Holstein breeders in three states and Canada to make applications, the number of delegates that will be elected for 1931 is 106 com-

ORCHARD OWNERS SOW LESPEDEZA

Kentucky orchard owners are finding korean lespedeza of use as a winter cover crop to prevent soil washing, according to information received at the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. Some of them plan to use the growth for mulching to retain moisture and to control weeds.

Ben E. Niles, secretary of the Kentucky State Horticultural Society, sowed korean in 50 acres of peach trees and M. R. Eblen sowed it in his 10-acre peach orchard in Henderson county. Both men harvested good seed crops. Frank Street, manager of the Kentucky Cardinal Orchards at Henderson, is sowing 3,000 pounds of korean seed in orchards. Korean lespedeza also is being used in Hopkin county orchards.

Bribery's Toll

Business men compute the annual toll of commercial bribery at $1,000,000,000 throughout the United States. It is known to amount to $100,000,000 in New York city alone.

Expensive Doubt

The idiom "to take with a grain of salt" means "to accept with reserve or doubt." As early as 1647, it was used by Trapp in his "Commercial Review" with the meaning, "to accept a statement with a certain amount of reserve."—Literary Digest.

Biblical Tomes

The Talmud, spoken of in several places in the Bible, is the name originally given to a section of lowlands southwest of the Dead sea, in Palestine. It was originally settled by Teman, the son of Esau, who was the grandson of Abraham. Later names for the locality were Edom and Idumean.

Test of a Man

To have a task, to strive how to wind his object, rather than how to leave it; for when we fail our pride supports us, when we succeed, it betrays us.—Colton.

Saved by Forests

Ireland was never thought of as fertile as was Judea, and, as a consequence, never failed to receive rains and retain moisture. It is today one of the pastoral beauty spots of the earth, because it retained its forests, and did not leave its rocky hills in drought and barrenness.

According to a table of food values of fruits, nuts and vegetables recently published, chestnuts weighed without their shells head the list. Dried peas come next, and old potatoes, weighed as served, are third.

In Homer's Footsteps

The cyclic poets were epic poets who on the death of Homer caught the contagion of his poems and wrote continuations, illustrations, or additions thereto. These poets wrote between B. C. 500 and 550 and were called "cyclic" because they confined themselves to the cycle of the Trojan war. The chief were Arctinus, Eugammon, Lesches and Stesinos.

Deaths

ROLAND HAGERMAN

Roland Hagerman, four year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Hagerman, passed away Monday night at the home of his parents in Crescent Springs, after a few days illness with pneumonia.

Funeral services were held at the late residence Thursday afternoon, at 3 o'clock by the Rev. N. J. Warren, pastor of the Millersburg, Ky., Presbyterian Church, assisted by Rev. A. M. Stout, pastor of the Crescent Springs Presbyterian Church, in the presence of a concourse of relatives and friends, after which the remains were laid to rest in Highland Cemetery.

The pall bearers were Natalie Kuhlman, Helen Wallingford, Edna Botz and Leona Wallingford.

Little Roland is survived by his parents, two sisters, his grandparents and a host of other relatives and friends.

Funeral Director Phillip Taliaferro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

Last Man On an Ice Floe

Paul Boynton made a 2,000 mile voyage to the ice floes drifting southward in the Atlantic ocean in a canvas canoe, but was allowed to go no farther because of Washington fears.

Mink Fur

The fur of the mink is the best when the animal is killed in the winter season. It is also classed as prime in midsummer, although the animal's fur is somewhat shorter then. During the molting periods in the spring and fall there is a deterioration in the value of the fur.

Creature of Long Ago

Explorers in Alaska found on Glacier island the carcass of a giant lizard-like creature, with fur in perfect condition. The strange creature, reported to be 42 feet long, including a tail measuring 16 feet, was believed to have been preserved since prehistoric times by being encased in ice in the upper reaches of the Columbia glacier. The ice was believed to have worked its way gradually to the sea. The head was reported to be six feet long and the body 20 feet in length.

Great Writers of Past Had Fondness for Cats

Rubens was fond of cats; in his studio hung a picture of Rembrandt in bed five of them, writes Helen M. Winslow in "Discussing Cats." Daniel Maclise's famous portrait of Harriet Martineau represents that estimable woman sitting in front of a fireplace and turning her face to receive the caress of her pet cat crawling to a resting place upon her mistress' shoulder.

Baudelaire, it is said, never could pass a cat in the street without stopping to stroke and fondle it. "Many a time," said Champfleury, "when he and I have been walking together, have we stopped to look at a cat curled up luxuriously in a pile of fresh white linen, reveling in the cleanliness of the newly ironed fabrics."

Professor Huxley's notorious fondness for cats was a fad which he shared with Paul de Koch, the novelist, who, at one time, kept as many as 30 cats in the house. Many descriptions of them are to be found scattered through his novels. His chief favorite, Fromentin, lived 11 years with him.

Pierre Loti has written a charming and most touching history of two of his cats—Monmette Blanche and Moumette Chinoise—which all true cat lovers should make a point of reading.

Science Offers Weapon for Survival of Man

Science will help man to survive beyond the fate of many extinct species that have been conquered by their environment. The most powerful method yet devised, says Dr. Roscoe R. Spencer writing in Hygeia Magazine, is in the weapon of science.

Man is confronted with the problem of adapting himself successfully to his environment before the environment overpowers him, says Doctor Spencer. Research alone will enable man to discover the laws of nature so that he may adapt himself, and in science lies the heart and soul of research.

While the average person has only the vaguest ideas concerning the workings of scientific men, science is not at all to be left to the highly gifted few, Doctor Spencer continues. The average person is capable of accomplishing much by the scientific method of trial and error in research. Doctor Spencer invites his readers to bring the scientific methods into their everyday life and to benefit by its use.

Cold Cream Long Popular

Don't let this jar your cold cream, girls. But, "believe it or not," that indispensable cosmetic of present-day femininity has been keeping the wrinkles from milady's face for more than 2,000 years. So says Charles Whitebread, curator of the division of medicine at the National museum in Washington. What is more, he says it is the second oldest of all pharmaceutical preparations. And do you girls know who "invented" your old standby? To quote Curator Whitebread "the fragrant unguent has changed very little from the original formula for unguentum refrigerans ceratum, invented and prescribed by the Roman physician Galen, sometimes known as the 'father of pharmacy.'"—Pathfinder Magazine.

"Pieces of Eight"

This coin is a Spanish piece that circulated freely in this country in Colonial and Revolutionary times and the coin to which we owe the adoption of the dollar as the unit of our currency. It had become the custom in many places, especially in the South, to price goods, keep accounts and make collections in "Spanish milled dollars," the name under which the old "pieces of eight"—eight reals—were known in the Colonies. When we came to have a currency of our own we took the piece of eight, or Spanish dollar, as our unit and divided it into a hundred cents.

The End Alone Counts

John Bright once declared of his party, "We shall win in the long run." And they did. It is the win in the long run that is life's best win.

The runner, who wins the first lap is a good runner, but he who stays on and keeps at his running and wins the last is the best runner. The boxer who wins the fight is he who wins in the long run.

A chapter in a life may be tragic, but if the end is happy, what does it matter? It is the end that counts.—London Chronicle.

Cure for Convulsions

The following was taken from a recent report by a nurse in one of the cities of New York state:

"While taking a history of a prenatal mother I asked the mother what was the cause of a previous child's death; she replied that it died of convulsions. I then inquired if she knew what to do for convulsions. She answered immediately, saying 'stand with the baby in your left arm with back to the stove, remove baby's shirt and throw it over your shoulder into the fire.'"—Health News.

Too Big to Ask

Robert insisted that his younger brother be sent on an errand to a neighbor's.

"Why don't you want to go?" inquired his mother.

"I went to the grocery for her. She said she was going to make cookies today and Junior will get 'em, if he goes. I'm too big to ask."

Modern House Superior to That of the Past

Scientific investigation has punctured the often accepted statement that old-time houses were necessarily better built than modern ones. Just because the timbers were bigger and hand-hewn does not mean that they were more scientifically put together.

Impartial comparison of the work of old builders with that of their modern successors, made by Donald G. Tarpley for the Woman's Home Companion, gave the following interesting results:

"Old houses did not have insulation in the outside walls. Flashing was not so good as it is now. Plastering was inferior. Metal lath was unknown. Chimneys did not have metal throats and frequently several flues ran together. Modern chimneys have terra-cotta flue lining, which is not only smooth but which in one-inch thickness is equivalent to four inches of brick.

"Floors were usually only one thickness, whereas now we use two layers of board with sound-deadening felt between. The wide floor boards which were so appreciated in old houses were practical in their day because they were laid in houses which were not thoroughly heated. But in modern homes with steam heat wide boards are more likely to swell and open up. They have to be put down by a different process—veneered and screwed in addition to being side-nailed."

Steel Pen Quickly Put Quill Out of Business

The first steel pens were not nibs as we know them now. They had long steel barrels which fitted on to wooden holders. Fine mapping pens and a few other special types are still made in the same way.

The real origin of the steel pen is not known, but it is of record that 100 years ago James Perry and Josiah Mason sent the first consignment of these pens from Birmingham to London.

For centuries prior to that time the quill had held the field undisputed. The first steel pens were made some time before 1830, though for a long while the public would have nothing to do with them. As far back as 1748 steel pens came from Aix-la-Chapelle, and a few were certainly made in Birmingham in 1780.

During Victorian times the pen product of Birmingham amounted to 4,000,000 gross per year, and by 1892 it had grown to 13,000,000, but the fountain pen has been the means of cutting this latter figure to about one-third.

Houses of the Poor in Korea

Houses belonging to the common people of Korea are for the most part small, low and thatched, and have few rooms, the walls being made of stone and clay and usually only one story high. High buildings were forbidden by the old laws of the country, but now that no such restrictions exist there are many two-story houses, some of them brick, especially in urban districts. A unique part of the Korean house is its heating arrangement. The floor is made of flagstones plastered over with clay and covered with thick oiled paper. Underneath, forming what would be the joists, run a series of horizontal flues. Fire is made outside the room and the hot smoke-laden air circulates through the flues and escapes at the opposite end. Thus the floor is thoroughly heated.

Duke's Emphatic Rebuke

Chilly souls who complain of the temperature of other folks' rooms and offices during the transition days between empty grate and full may not all feel equal to teaching the delinquents a lesson, after the manner of the second duke of Wellington, said the North China Herald, not long ago. Very fond of warmth at all times, he found occasion to grumble at his friend and neighbor, Lady Dorothy Nevill, because of the smallness of her grates, and one autumn day when he arrived to lunch with her he gave one glance at the fire, then turned and asked the footman to bring his overcoat. The coat being brought, he put it on and sat in it throughout his stay. No efforts could induce him to remove it. "No," said he doggedly, "I will shame you into having good fires."

Resourceful Sarah

The story is told of the immortal Sarah Bernhardt that once in London she took a cab back to the hotel. After a time it occurred to her they were not making much progress, and on questioning the driver was informed that they were lost and he could go no further. She left the cab, walked a minute or two, until she saw a fire engine returning from a fire. Without a moment's hesitation she hailed it and persuaded the fireman in charge to take her on, arriving at her hotel perched on the engine.

Color of Canaries

The original canary, whether serin or true wild canary, in its native haunt was much different in color from its modern pure-bred descendant. The back of the wild bird is, in general, gray, tinged with olive-green, especially on the rump, with dark shaft streaks on the feathers. Underneath it is yellowish, streaked on sides and flanks with dusky. Wild canaries from the Canary islands, the Azores and Madeira differ from the Continental serins in being slightly grayer with less of yellowish green in plumage above.

Spraying System Hooked Down Satan, eh?

He certainly does, and somehow, like the worm in the apple, he appears to have reached your interior when you were in bed. There seems no satisfactory spraying system for youth, but there may be.—Exchange.

"Low Germans"

The inhabitants of the Netherlands are strictly of the Low German race, which is composed of three branches—Frankish, Saxon and Frisian. The term "low" is applied to this portion of the world because it occupies the low region near the North sea.

Prepare That Party Lunch Before Your Guests Arrive

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

NOW, when the hurry and bustle of the holiday season is over, and everyone is settled down for the remaining months of winter, is a fine time to plan that luncheon party you have been wanting to have for months.

The luncheon may be followed by bridge, or it simply may be a "get-together" for a few close friends. But no matter what form of entertainment is decided upon for the afternoon, the luncheon itself will be a most enjoyable method of entertaining.

The menu, of course, is very important. Not only must the food be attractive and well prepared, but the meal should be so planned that the hostess is not burdened with work after her guests arrive. Most of the cooking can be done before their arrival, and the luncheon served simply, thus leaving the hostess free to enjoy the afternoon, too.

Paste these luncheon menus in your scrap book. You will enjoy using one of them next time you entertain at luncheon:

Assorted Relishes
Chicken or Veal Shortcake
Buttered Peas
Hot Biscuit Grape Jelly
Frozen Fruit Salad Cookies
Homemade Salted Nuts

Stuffed Veal Chops Sweet Potatoes
Cauliflower with Cheese Sauce
Hot Rolls Currant Jelly
Pineapple, Celery and Nut Salad
Hot Mince Meat Pie Coffee

Assorted Relishes: Use small plates and divide them into four sections with sprigs of parsley. In one section, on a small square of toast, place tuna fish with a dressing of Salad Cream and Chili Sauce. In another section, have a mound of Sweet Midget Gherkins. In a third section, on a tiny lettuce leaf, place slices of hard cooked egg topped with a spoonful of highly seasoned salad dressing and a bit of paprika; and in the fourth section, place a cracker spread with Sandwich Relish and garnished with slices of Stuffed Spanish Olives.

Frozen Fruit Salad: 2 slices pineapple, 1 orange; 1 banana, sliced; ¼ cup Maraschino cherries; ½ cup Mayonnaise Salad Dressing; 1 cup sweetened whipped cream.

Dice pineapple and orange, and add sliced banana and cherries. Moisten the fruit with Mayonnaise Salad Dressing into which the whipped cream has been folded. Freeze in the trays of a mechanical refrigerator, slice and serve in crisp beds of chilled lettuce. Garnish each serving with a spoonful of Mayonnaise Salad Dressing and top with half of a cherry.

Stuffed Veal Chops: 6 double veal chops; 1¼ cups bread crumbs; 1 very small onion, minced fine; ¼ teaspoon salt; 3 tablespoons melted butter; 1 teaspoon Beefsteak Sauce; salt and pepper; sweet potatoes; 2 cups water; 4 tablespoons Tomato Ketchup.

Cut pockets for stuffing in six large veal chops. Mix bread crumbs, onion, salt, melted butter and Beefsteak Sauce thoroughly and fill the pockets. Brown on both sides in a small amount of fat, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and place in a roasting pan. Around the chops put six pared sweet potatoes that have been sprinkled with salt. Pour around the meat and potatoes a sauce made of two cups water and four tablespoons Tomato Ketchup. Bake in a hot oven for about 45 minutes, basting frequently.

Pineapple, Celery and Nut Salad: 1½ cups canned pineapple, cut in cubes; 1½ cups celery, cut in pieces; 1 cup chopped nuts; ½ cup Mayonnaise Salad Dressing; ½ cup sweetened whipped cream

Combine pineapple, celery and nuts. Mix with Mayonnaise Salad Dressing into which the whipped cream has been folded. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves and garnish with strips of green pepper, and cream cheese balls, sprinkled with paprika.

50TH ANNIVERSARY

"Take It on My Word!"

"I've handled various poultry feeds, but I tell you, nothing has won so many warm friends among my customers as Tuxedo Starting and Growing Allmash.

"This high-quality product surely does reduce the mortality, and make big, husky cockerels and pullets in a hurry! I sell more and more of it each year. It's specially designed for this part of the country, too. And you'll be surprised at its moderate cost.

"Contains grains, buttermilk, pure cane molasses and Cod Liver Oil. Cod Liver Oil, you know, is the 'bottled sunlight' which prevents leg weakness, reduces mortality, and makes stronger and healthier chicks. And the Vitamin A in the Cod Liver Oil is stabilized by Early & Daniel's exclusive process!"

Odd New Zealand Bird, Kiwi, Nears Extinction

The strangest bird in the world—the kiwi kiwi, is described as follows in Boys' Life, the Boy Scout publication.

"Native of New Zealand, he nearly makes part of ancient fable—current when the continent was first discovered—that everything around Australia was upside down. The kiwi is practically wingless and completely flightless. He has no visible tail. His brownish plumage, moreover, because the feather-filaments are disunited, looks more like coarse hair. His nostrils, unlike any other bird's, are at the very tip of the long beak, that is flexible and very sensitive to touch.

"The kiwi growls like a dog, and snaps his bill as you crack your fingers; he can hiss like a cat when angry. His extraordinarily powerful legs can give mighty kicks, not backward but forward, and have been known to break a bone in a man's hand. In small flocks, the few kiwis left of a disappearing species inhabit New Zealand's hilly forests. Females burrow long tunnels, laying in a nest at the very end of it two large eggs—eggs a quarter the length of the whole bird. Incubating is entirely the job of the male.

"Maoris are very fond of kiwi flesh broiled or roasted, so fond that the bird was well hunted out before ever a white man saw one. Now the peculiar bird, distant relative of ostrich, emu, cassowary, and survivor of a species that flourished with the extinct, gigantic dinornis and fierce, sluggish moas, millions of years ago, is fast approaching extinction."

Marriage Promise Just Incident of Vacation?

A New Yorker, lifted out of his habitual caution by the balmy atmosphere of Florida during a winter vacation, brought suit against a girl he met down there to recover a ring. The young lady contested the suit.

When it came up in court, the young man said that they had enjoyed a fond good-by on the beach, but later, when both had returned to New York, the girl had passed him up cold. The girl herself admitted, it, saying:

"I really didn't know whether I should recognize him or not. Our acquaintance in Florida was really very slight."

"But," expostulated the court, glancing at the sparkling ring, "you promised to marry him, didn't you?"

"Why, yes," admitted the girl, "but that was all."—Los Angeles Times.

Europe's "Holy Alliance"

The Holy Alliance was the name of a league formed by Russia, Austria and Prussia after the fall of Napoleon in 1815 for the purpose of regulating the affairs of Europe "by the principles of Christian charity," says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. Notwithstanding its professed purpose the real policy of the Holy Alliance was to make every endeavor possible to stabilize existing dynasties and to resist all change. The league endured until 1830 and was in time joined by all the important and European monarchs except those of England and Turkey. The Monroe Doctrine was enunciated largely to warn the Holy Alliance not to interfere with the newly established republics in Latin America.

Biblical Flowers

There are comparatively few flowers named in the Bible. It is reported that as a whole the Syrian people were not particularly fond of flowers. Among those named are the myrtle, Isaiah, 4:13; Rose of Sharon, Isaiah, 35:1; Song of Solomon, 2:1; lily, 1 Kings, 7:26; Son of Solomon, 2:16, 6:23; Matthew, 6. Flax is found in Exodus, Genesis, Leviticus, Esther, Judges, Proverbs and Kings. Burning bush (or acacia) is mentioned in Exodus, 3:4. The lily is an Arabic general term and applies to the tulip, ranuculus, narcissus, iris, water lily, and particularly the anemones which carpet the ground during the summer season throughout Palestine.

Treasure Trove on Farm

On the land of a widow farmer of Aarhus (Denmark) 6,000 copper and silver coins of the days of Eric Glipping (1250-1286), king of Denmark, were found. It was in the reign of this king that the first rigsdag, or general assembly, became an established legislature in Denmark. The coins, as treasure trove, were by law the property of the state, but the widow received a sum of money in exchange.

Only Daddy

Elizabeth Ann's mother was telling the little girl and her small brother the story of Cinderella. Suddenly there came a knock from the front door.

"Go see who's there," said her mother. "Maybe it's the fairy prince."

Elizabeth Ann hurried from the room. "No, it isn't a fairy prince," she called back, disappointedly from the hall. "It's only daddy!"

Big Business

John, age eight, had just been promoted to 3A. One day when he came home he was telling his mother about their new organization; that they had elected a president, vice president and such. Mother asked what the object of the organization was and after a moment John replied:

"To promote better citizenship."

Rheumatism So Bad He Walked the Floor in Agony

"Karnak has done me such a wonderful amount of good that I believe every rheumatic sufferer should give it a trial.

"No one will ever know the tortures I have gone through with rheumatism during the past three years. I ached all over. At nights the pains were so great that I walked the floor, and I've gotten out in the middle of the night to go to the doctor for a hypodermic. I tried every thing in an effort to get relief. Even serum treatments failed to help me. My relief finally came when a friend advised me to try Karnak. To my surprise this medicine went right to the roots of my trouble, and brought complete relief. Every ache and pain has disappeared, and I am now in condition to resume active duties once more, thanks to Karnak."

APRIL TERM

OF BOONE CIRCUIT COURT OPENS MONDAY

The April term of the Boone Circuit Court will be opened, Monday. The grand jury will be selected and will consider the indictment of a number of persons recently arrested.

According to Commonwealth Attorney Ward Yager, and County Attorney Ben Riley, the most important cases that will be brought up at this session are those of Jeff Mills, accused of murder, Herbert Gaines, Crescent Springs and George Pemberton, Erlanger, charged with arson. Chester Bailes, arrested two weeks ago on charges of assaulting former jailer Charles Fowler and aiding prisoners to escape also will be tried at this session of court.

Jeff Mills is charged with having killed his brother-in-law, Charles Young, Verona, while on a coon hunt. At the last session of court the trial of Mills resulted in the failure of the jury to agree. He will be tried agian at this session of court. Since the jury failed to agree Mills has been held in the county jail.

Gaines and Pemberton are charged with arson in the firing of houses of Kennahoo avenue, Erlanger.

Bailes has been indicted for assault and battery and for aiding prisoners to escape.

BODY

FOUND AT PETERSBURG IDENTIFIED BY FRIENDS

A man, whose body was identified as that of Tom La Boagg, Cincinnati, was found at Petersburg, last Thursday. The body was found at the old steamboat landing, at Petersburg, by Jess Louden. It was found in driftwood.

When the body was examined it was said that it had been in the water for ten days or two weeks. Two employes of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, it was said, identified the man as one who had worked with them. They said that he had lived at a Cincinnati hotel.

The body of La Boagg was found on the same day that it was reported that Dudley C. Outcalt, Cincinnati attorney was missing. At first it was believed by Cincinnati police that the body might have been that of Outcalt. His description, however, showed that this was not true.

RESOLUTIONS

WHEREAS: God in his infinite Wisdom, has removed, by death, from the "Ladies Bible Class", of Burlington Baptist Church our dearly beloved Sister and Class Mate, Katherine Huey Riddell, Be it resolved:

1st. That we extend to the family, our heart felt sympathy.

2nd. That she set an example of service and self sacrifice which is inspiring.

3rd. That we bear willing testimony to her many virtues and stainless life and will ever hold her memory in reverence and love.

4th. That a copy be sent to her husband, Judge N. E. Riddell, one to the Western Recorder, one to the Boone County Recorder; Also a copy be spread upon our class book.

Committee,
Mrs. H. T. Gaines.
Mrs. M. Riddell.

BURLINGTON P. T. A. TO MEET MONDAY

The regular meeting of the Burlington P. T. A., will be held at the county courthouse, Monday, at 7 P. M. An interesting program has been arranged for the meeting and a large attendance is expected.

The P. T. A. is rehearsing for a play, "The Old Fashioned Mother" which will be given at the school auditorium,

URGES FARMERS TO STANDARDIZE LAMBS

All market lambs produced in Boone county this year should be docked and trimmed according to county agent, H. R. Forkner. Competition on the market will be strong this year and all lambs that are not standardized will likely be severely penalized.

Lamb standardization is a very simple and easy job. It is too important to be overlooked. Extension circular No. 85, treating on this work is available free of charge at the county agent's office.

Where farmers are not familiar with this work the county agent will be glad to give a limited number of demonstrations. The requirement for a demonstration is that the cooperator invite two or more of his neighbors to be present.

WOOL GROWERS

VOTE TO POOL WOOL THRU ASSOCIATION

Boone county wool growers at Burlington, Monday, voted to pool their wool cooperatively through the Boone County Wool Growers Association and elected officers and precinct chairmen for 1931. J. C. Beddinger of Walton was elected president to succeed Harry Stevens who died recently. L. T. Dore of Burlington was re-elected secretary and treasurer of the association.

The following precinct chairmen were elected to secure the sign up of the [illegible] in their respective districts: Burlington, H. E. White; Constance, L. D. McGlasson; Verona, O. K. Powers; Florence, Clint Blankenbaker; Rabbit Hash, J. Colon Kelley; Grant, Lillard Scott; Hebron, Clint Riddell; Petersburg, Wm. Stephens; Union, Ezra Blankenbaker; Beaver, Joe W. Cleek, and Walton, J. C. Beddinger.

Wool sacks will be furnished to growers at the Florence and Burlington offices of the Farm Bureau at a charge of $.40 each. The purchaser of the clip will refund the price of the sack when the wool is delivered. Sacks and twine will be paid for when received.

Beddinger pointed out that the purpose of the association is a selling and not a holding organization. The means of disposing of the clip will be discussed at the next meeting which will be held at Burlington, May the 4th. All growers are urged not to wait for the precinct chairmen but to get in touch with their nearest representative immediately and report the number of fleeces they will have this year.

REAL ESTATE SOLD

Mrs. Katherine Brady sold her farm of about 100 acres on the Petersburg Pike to Mr. A. G. Goode of Cincinnati. Possession immediately.

S. W. Tolin sold a house and lot on the corner of Washington and Garrard Streets in Burlington to Marce Riddell.

It is reported that Mr. Riddle will move the house to the northwest corner of the lot and erect a modern gas filling station where the house now stands.

The A. B. Renaker Realty Company negotiated both deals.

ROBBERS

HOLDUP MT. ZION DEPOSIT BANK—$2,000 STOLEN

That gangsters are beginning to make country banks the victims of their activities was seen in the holdup of the Mt. Zion Deposit Bank, last Monday. Two thugs entered the bank and after gagging and tieing the hands of the cashier, W. G. Smith, Mt. Zion, Grant county, escaped with $2,000.

The robbery occurred at 10:00 A. M. and Smith was the only person in the bank at the time. He told officers that the two men entered the bank and one of them tendered a $20 bill and asked him for change. Not recognizing them and certain that they were robbers he backed away. Immediately he was confronted with a revolver in the hands of one of the men who ordered him to stand still. They then bound his hands and forced a gag into his mouth.

The robbers then scooped up $2,000 and warning Smith to be quiet they fled. Their car a small coupe was parked in front of the bank. They drove in the direction of Covington. Smith succeeded in reaching the alarm button and set off the burglar alarm. He then went to the door and friends released his bonds.

Covington police were immediately notified and placed a blockade on the roads but failed to capture the robbers.

At the time of the robbery Sheriff Conrad and a deputy were in Covington seeking to take back to Grant County three alleged chicken thieves who had been captured. These men are in the custody of Boone County officers.

Mrs. Rosa Rouse and children spent Sunday with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Le McMullen.

Mr. and Mrs. Garnet Tolin returned to Burlington Saturday, after spending the winter months in Cincinnati.

Ward Yager, commonwealth's attorney was in Burlington, Monday on business.

SEED LOANS

OBTAINED BY TWENTY-THREE LOCAL FARMERS

April the 30th is the last date farmers may secure federal seed and fertilizer loans for 1931 crop production, according to county agent H. R. Forkner. The county committee has been doing a splendid patriotic duty in the careful time and energy they have used in this work. A total of twenty-three loans have been approved for more than $3000.00 in Boone County.

The following is a list of loans that are available. The amount in the list is the maximum that may be secured.

1. Seed—from $2.00 to $5.00 per acre.
2. Fertilizer—from $5.00 to $10.00 per acre.
3. Feed for work stock—$30.00 per head
4. Fuel for tractors—$.40 per acre for breaking $2.50 per acre for total.
5. Feed for livestock:
   a. three cows—$45.00.
   b. 100 chickens—$10.00
   c. Five hogs—$20.00
6. Spray or dust materials:
   a. tobacco—$2.50.
   b. orchard—$20.00.
   c. truck crops—$5.00
7. Feed for stock:
   a. $15.00 per head for dairy cattle
   b. $10.00 per head for stock cattle
   c. $5.00 per head for hogs
   d. $3.00 per head for sheep
8. Agricultural rehabilitation:
   a. $75.00 for food and clothing.
   b. $50.00 for farm labor
   c. $25.00 for repairs for farm machinery.

All of the above loans are protected by mortgages on crops or livestock. Only farmers whose crops were severely injured by the drought of 1930 and can not secure loans from their local banks are eligible. The county loan committee composed of Carol Cropper, Burlington; Hubert Conner, Hebron; and Wilford M. Rice, Walton are required to pass on all applications. After the loan has been recommended by the county committee the St. Louis office has the final right to accept or reject the application.

A Few Miles Makes A Whale Of A Difference, Says Holmes

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

By Fred Holmes, Washington Correspondent of the Recorder

Kansas City, Mo.—I am led to remark that "its funny what a whale of a difference just a few miles make." In Washington, the view we get of each major political situation is in cross-section, with every detail standing out and having its effect upon our analysis and judgement. As one gets farther away from the Capital, one after another the details become obscured and the view develops by gradual stages into a perspective.

In Ohio, political interest is centered in Senator Fess. Will he remain chairman of the Republican National Committee? If not, who will succeed him? In Illinois, they are all agog over the effect of the recent action of their legislature in repealing the State prohibition enforcement law upon the National conventions of both parties next year. In Kansas, they are very much exercised over the fate of their own "Charlie" Curtis. Will the "powers that be" make him again Herbert Hoover's running-mate in 1932? If not (and the fates are good to the Republican party next year) who will supplant him as presiding officer of the job, anyway, and would he prefer to end his political days on the floor instead of in the chair?

Other mid-Western States, confronted with no peculiarly local problems, are interested in the prospective tax boost, in the effect of President Hoover's veto of the Muscle Shoals bill, in where the farm-relief aeroplane is going to land, in who will be the next Democratic standard-bearer, and in that seemingly vital question, what will be the attitude of the 1932 Democratic convention on the subject of prohibition.

What particularly engrossed the Ohio politicians was the report that a group of Republican Senators, actuated by a suggestion made by President Hoover before he departed on his Caribbean cruise, has undertaken conferences on a program of reorganising the party's national committee. Incidentally, predictions were made by some Senators that the development was to be expected of an aggressive campaign to bring convention delegates, including those from the South, into solid alignment behind the President in the campaign next year.

The first step which this group of Senators advocates is the selection of a new chairman of the committee to succeed Senator Fess, who accepted the post last year when Claudius H. Huston resigned. It was then hoped that the Senator would be found acceptable to all factions. It is reported that he intended to relinquish the chairmanship before Congress met last December, but no successor satisfactory to the President had been found, he was prevailed upon to remain. Early this year he again was reported anxious to quite and go on a long vacation, but at the

HOMES ARE SOUGHT FOR KENTUCKY ORPHANS

The Kentucky Children's Home Society is sending out an appeal to the citizens of the State urging them to take into their homes and hearts at least one of the many homeless children now being cared for in the institution at Lyndon, Ky.

The number of children received into the Home during the fiscal year 1930-31, has been greater than at any previous time. In the Home today are 359 children, boys and girls who are waiting and hoping for a real mother and daddy to give them the loving care and affection they are longing for.

Every child for whom the Society is seeking a home has been given a thorough physical and mental test and is in excellent condition.

SCHEDULE

FOR OPENING DAY OF BASE BALL LEAGUE ANNOUNCED

The schedule for the opening day of the Boone County Baseball League, April 25, was arranged at the last meeting of the League held at the county courthouse, April 1.

The schedule is as follows:

Petersburg vs. Burlington, at Petersburg.

Belleview vs. Rabbit Hash, at Belleview.

Walton vs. Hebron, at Walton.

Five of the six teams had representatives at the meeting and forfeit money was posted. Petersburg was not represented.

H. A. Rogers was appointed to complete the rest of the schedule.

AMERICAN LEGION MEETS AT BURLINGTON

Boone Post No. 4, American Legion held its regular meeting at the Court House in Burligton on Monday night, with twenty-eight members present.

Arrangements were made at this meeting to again offer the American Legion award medal to the Graded School Student receiving the highest number of points in the Common School Tournament to be held the latter part of this month, the medal will be presented to the winning Student at the time of the Common School Commencement later in the season.

Lieut. B. M. Stevens of Florence, Ky., had been appointed Chairman of the Boone County Citizens Military Training camp quota, and he has requested Boone Post No. 4, American Legion to assist him in getting Boone County boys interested in the Training Camps which are very beneficial to the youth of our Country.

The American Legion is prepared to assist any young man who wishes to make application for training in the camps this summer and would like very much to see Boone County send its full quota to Fort Thomas, Ky., which will be the place that boys from this County will be trained.

The purpose of the camps are to bring together young men of a high type from all sections of the Country on a common basis so as to stimulate and promote citizenship, patriotism, and Americanism, and to benefit the young man individually.

A candidate must be a physically fit American citizen and be of good character, he must have reached his seventeenth birthday by the time camp opens and not have passed his twenty-fourth birthday.

Any young man of this county who wishes to attend the Citizens' Military Training Camp this summer can get all the necessary information and application blanks from the American Legion which has its headquarters in Burlington, Ky., the camp at Fort Thomas will open July 2nd, and close July 31st., and it is an opportunity that a young man should not overlook.

TO RETURN HOME

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Finnell, who have been spending the winter months in Detroit, Mich., with their children, intend to return to their home at [illegible] about April 20.

TWO CITIZENS

IDENTIFY CHICKENS STOLEN FROM THEIR HEN ROOSTS NUMEROUS OTHER THEFTS REPORTED IN NORTHERN KY. COUNTIES

A gang of chicken thieves, that officers believe have been responsible for a large number of hen roost robberies in Boone, Grant and Kenton counties are resting in the Boone County jail as a result of their activities. They are Ralph Jacobs, Elsmere, Ky., Roland Lavick, 427 West Sixth Street, Newport, and Francis McNay, 330 Patterson Street, Newport. Besides these men the officer alleged that a number of others are implicated.

The trio was arrested, Saturday, in Cincinnati. They were taken into custody when their manner of packing chickens, in their automobile came to the attention of Deputy Sheriff David E. Wilson of the Hamilton County (O.) Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Three of the chickens had been smothered to death because of the careless manner in which they had been handled.

After their arrest, on a charge of cruelty to animals, they were taken before Emmett D. Kirgan, detective chief of Cincinnati. It was learned then that the men were suspects in chicken robberies.

Sheriff Herbert Snyder was informed of the arrest of the men and he got into communication with Cincinnati authorities.

In the meantime Marshal Tom Rash of Elsmere was busy investigating the activities of a group that had recently moved into that town. Through his efforts a part of the loot of the gang was recovered and a number of chickens were identified by a Grant County resident as fowls stolen from her.

Rash then notified Sheriff Conrad of Grant County and he came to Kenton County, Monday. In Covington these officers learned that the men had already been arrested by Cincinnati police and turned over to Sheriff Snyder. Indictments will be sought against them in Grant County.

Questioned by Snyder, County Attorney Ben Riley and Commonwealth's Attorney Ward Yeager, at Burlington, Monday, the trio admitted their guilt. They admitted to the officers that they had robbed the chicken houses of Mrs. W. T. Berkshire, near Petersburg and George Richey, near Hebron on Thursday and Friday nights of last week.

The men admitted that they drove to Petersburg and then back out the pike where they committed one robbery. Their admission came after they learned that Richey had positively identified a number of chickens in a commission house in Cincinnati opposite the Union Stockyards. Mrs. Berkshire also identified a number of her fowls. Richey, officers said, had every one of his fowls marked and had no trouble in picking them out. The men were closely questioned concerning other robberies but denied that they were guilty. It was admitted, however, that they had received $2.00 a load for taking chickens to the same commission house for a Newport man. They denied that they knew of his present whereabouts.

According to Sheriff Snyder, the value of the chickens delivered to the commission merchant totalled $650.

The men in their statements also declared that the commission merchant had told them that once a chicken got into his place no one could ever identify it. They also stated that they were not responsible for all of the thefts that have recently occurred in Northern Kentucky and that a number of Cincinnati boys were finding this section a profitable field for their activities. Certain persons in Cincinnati they said were willing to take stolen chickens from thieves at one cent under the market quotation.

After questioning the men Attorney Yager said, "Thefts of chickens have been entirely too numerous in Boone County recently. We believe that in the arrest of these men we have begun to learn the inside facts about these thefts. We intend to continue our investigations and have no doubt

SPRING

There is something about us humans which makes us all want to do queer things in the Spring. As soon as the first green shoots appear boys begin to think about base ball, men consider the liklihood of getting in a little fishing between tasks and the women—God bless them—begin to turn the house upside down.

Perhaps there isn't as much "spring housecleaning" done these days as there used to be, but that's a matter of opinion. There is something in the coming of Spring which stirs the feminine instinct for renovation. Perhaps it is a reflection of the replenishment of the earth. Nature has slept all Winter, the trees have been bare, the grasses brown, everything out of doors has a dingy look. Then, suddenly, all is bright and fresh and green. If that is so outside, why not inside? That, at least, seems to be the logic, such as it is, behind the housecleaning urge.

Spring is the happiest season of the whole year, however in spite of the discomfort to the male sex which the upsetting of his domicile imposes upon him. It is the season of hope no matter how bad things were last season, no matter how severe and distressful the Winter has been. Spring brings a fresh promise every year. The promise is not always kept, but at least in Spring a man feels that there is something he can do to help things along, which he could not do in the Winter. The coming season may different. At any rate, he won't freeze to death for another nine months at least.

Probably we would all get tired of a climate where it was always Spring. People who have gone to live in lands of perpetual mildness are said to get homesick for the changeable climates they came from. And one certain thing about Spring is that it won't last long. Before we know it we will be heat over heels in Summer.

School Notes

William Vest was not able to attend school several days last week, due to the death of his grandfather.

William Clore left school Monday as he is going to finish his freshman year at Belleview High School.

Ethelyn Ryle was not able to attend school Monday on account of illness.

James Ogdes was able to meet classes Monday after a week's illness.

Zena Garrison, Mary Phillips, Elva Akin and Alvin Stephens were absent from school a few days last week.

Mrs. Kirtley Cropper taught in Miss Cubbage's place Monday and Tuesday. Miss Bubbarge went to New York on an Easter excursion over the week end.

We wish to express our appreciation to the following men for their assistance in helping finance our High School baseball team: Mr. D. R. Blythe, Gulley and Pettit, Supt. D. H. Norris.

We are preparing for the county tournament which will be held at Burlington, April 22 and 23, 1931.

We are glad to havt Mr. C. G. Lamb, the fifth and sixth grade teacher, back with us after a few days' illness.

FOUR EARS OF CORN DO WORK OF FIVE

Operators of the Kentucky Cardinal Farms in Henderson county now secure as much pork from feeding four ears of corn as they formerly secured from five ears, says Frank Street, the manager. The practice of sanitation in hog raising made the difference.

A record of 30 sows kept under the common system showed that of a total of 225 pigs farrowed only 190 reached market weight.

Thirty-five pigs died from various causes, principally worms. After strict sanitation was practiced for two seasons the number of pigs two.

R. M. Overfield, the herd manager, says that pigs grow more rapidly where everything is kept clean. He now has no runts, while there usually were 15 or 20 in the herd under the old system. In addition, he has shortened by two to six weeks the period of developing the pigs to market condition.

The system of sanitation adopted by the Cardinal Farms is described by Grady Sellards, field agent for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, as follows:

Only clean ground is used for the pigs; that is ground that has been cultivated since hogs had been on it. The farrowing pens are scalded with boiling water containing lye. Each sow is washed with warm water and soap to remove all dirt, since this usually contains worm eggs. Pigs are kept off lots until they have grown out of danger of round worms. Round worms do not attack old hogs; they are a parasite of young pigs.

Prague Church Modernistic

A church thoroughly modernistic in design is in Prague, Czechoslovakia. With its rigid lines and its glass-enclosed half-cylindrical column at one end, it resembles an American industrial plant. The auditorium is inside the column. A tower at the other end contains a clock and is surmounted by a cross.

For the Amateur Nurse

If you are new at nursing and are afraid you will forget the time for medicine for the patient, keep an old or unwound watch in the room by the medicine and as each dose is administered move the hands of the clock to the hour for the next dose. Then you cannot make a mistake.

Tested by Misfortune

If a man is never tried by misfortune, he hardly knows whether he is honest or not, and he never knows how much of a man he is. He that has never known adversity is but half acquainted with himself. Nor is he more than half acquainted with the world. Success shows us one side of the world; adversity brings out the reverse of the picture.—Exchange.

Destructive Criticism

It is much easier to be critical than correct. Constructive criticism may be, and often is, helpful; but destructive criticism robs one of courage, and usually degenerates into fault-finding. There is always something in others which is worthy of praise, and appreciation leads to further effort.—Evelyn Howe.

Beneficent Nature

In the final examinations conducted in a Chicago high school, the following question was asked: "What is the essential thing about the earth from an agricultural standpoint?" One answer read: "The essential thing about the earth from an agricultural standpoint is that it revolves on its axis, thereby providing for the rotation of crops."

Saves the Heroine

A small girl at a picture show was watching a "hair-raising" episode. When the villain had trapped the heroine and had locked both her and himself in the room and there seemed no way of escape, the situation became too tense for the little miss. In her excitement she stood up and cried loudly: "There's a window; jump out."

Delaware's Nickname

Delaware is known as the Blue Hen state from the notoriety that one of her native sons, Captain Caldwell, acquired in the Revolutionary war for his love of cockfighting, and also his well-drilled men known in the army as the "Gamecocks." His idea was that a blue hen produces the best cocks.

Acid-Forming Foods

The foods which contain benzoic acid are, namely, plums, prunes and cranberries. They are acid-forming because benzoic acid is not oxidized or broken down in the process of digestion. Other fruits, even though they taste acid, are not acid-forming in the blood because their acid content is oxidized.

"THAT LITTLE GANG" By B. Link

GOOD PRODUCING COWS CONTINUE PROFITABLE

A summary of production records made last year in 11 dairy herd improvement associations in Kentucky indicates that good producing cows continue to be profitable, despite the drop in the prices of dairy products.

Tht dairy department of the College of Agriculture obtained records on 253 herds containing a total of 5,148 cows. They produced an average of 6,230 pounds of milk and 270 pounds of butterfat last year. Due to the fact that whole milk was sold in six of the associations, the average returns per cow above feed cost was $92. Using current prices for cream would considerably reduce returns but would still leave a substantial profit.

The College stresses the importance of keeping only good cows, and feeding them well and using wise giving them good care. It doubts whether cows should be kept which produce less than 250 pounds of butterfat in a year, when well fed. Sixteen per cent of the cows put on test last year were culled out because they were found to be unprofitable.

A study of the records of these 148 cows brings the following facts:

Many cows that were profitable two years ago are no longer worth keeping, due to the drop in prices in dairy products.

Cows giving less than 250 pounds of butterfat probably will not be profitable in the next few ytars.

Cows freshening in the fall produce better than those freshening in the spring.

The majority of good dairy farmers now use purebred bulls.

Dairymen are learning that good feeding pays, including grain on grass, silage and good hay.

JUNIOR CLUB WEEK AT UNIVERSITY JUNE 8-13

The eleventh annual Junior Week for 4-H Club boys and girls will be held at the University of Kentucky June 8-13, according to an announcement by J. W. Whitehouse, state leader of 4-H Club work for the College of Agriculture.

Approximately 500 boys and girls from 85 counties will attend. A feature of the week this year will be an excursion by special train to Frankfort to visit the Capitol and other places of interest.

There will be the usual demonstrations in farm and home practices, a state style show, a state health contest and other events, in addition to class room instruction in agriculture and homemaking under the direction of the faculty of the university. Style show and health winners will represent Kentucky in national contests in Chicago.

The L. & N. Railroad will give free trips to a boy and a girl in each county through which the railroad passes, and the Stewart Dry Goods Company and the Kosmos Portland Cement Co., of Louisville will divide cash prizes among demonstration teams.

The Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

TOO MUCH BELLYACHING

I SHALL be criticized for the title of this editorial, but it is a good old Elizabethan phrase and there is no other which expresses so forcibly the thing I have in mind.

Let me illustrate with a story.

I stood in line one night at the ticket window in Providence, waiting to take up the lower berth which I had reserved to New York. In front of me was a man who had come up from Chatham on Cape Cod, having telegraphed for a reservation from there. Thru a mistake on the part of the Chatham operator the telegram had gone to Boston instead of to Providence, if the man waited for the train to come through from Boston he would not get to bed until about 2 o'clock in the morning if he got on a Providence car he would have to sleep in an upper berth because all the lowers were sold.

He bought an upper, but not without a great deal of grumbling.

"This is atrocious," he exclaimed. "Give me a telegraph blank. I am going to wire that operator in Chatham and tell him what I think of him."

To which the station agent answered very saucy: "What good will that do? You're mad already. What's the use of getting two men mad?"

Every hour of every day a certain number of things happen which just should not happen, but do. To err is human.

When I became a magazine editor years ago a very wise editor said to me: "You are about to make a sad discovery. You are about to learn that there are no efficient people in the world."

He went on to prophesy that writers would consistently misinterpret my instructions about articles and that artists would insist on drawing their pictures all wrong.

To a certain extent the prophecy was fulfilled; but, having been warned in advance, I managed to get along without losing my temper often or increasing my blood-pressure much.

If you expect perfection from people your whole life is a series of disappointments, grumblings and complaints. If, on the contrary, you pitch expectations low, taking folks as the inefficient creatures which they are, you are frequently surprised by having them perform better than you had hoped.

Too many of us are like that man in Providence, who probably "bellyached" to everybody he met the next day, saying that he was tired because a fool operator in Chatham had caused him to sleep in an upper berth. Doubtless he went home and "bellyached" to his wife: and he may still be telling the sad story, for all I know.

What's the use of it all?

THE FAMILY DOCTOR By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

OVERWEIGHT

A good many people seem in perfect health, feel no distress, and yet realize that they are carrying around a lot of ballast that does them no good. It isn't very alluring prospect, when a fellow gets into the sixties, with from fifty to a hundred pounds of adipose tucked under his skin, for which he has not the remotest use.

Just to be brief, two major causes of overweight will be considered here: Lack of exercise, and overeating of starches. Formerly I would have mentioned gluttony; but I have seen many people over-fat who were really very spare eaters. Of course heavy fluid-drinking with meals will facilitate absorption and have considerable to do with bodily weight. I ask such patients to limit or cut drinking with meals, and some have reduced much by strictly following directions.

I direct my fat patients to limit STARCHES in the dietary; "one starch—not four," is a good rule to remember. On most well-provisioned tables will be found, one or two varieties of bread; maybe one or two styles of potatoes; a bowl of tempting Lima beans, or worse, "baked beans." Then incidentally we may find rice pudding, fritters cake, pies,—all carriers of Starch. And each tempts the palate mightily.

These starches tax the liver; what the liver cannot care for properly is stowed away somewhere, making the bodily weight creep upward. The liver is a peaceable organ and will bear more than its share of insult for a long time; but when it does make a kick, something is the matter! It is so easy to overload on starch! It is such an important food, and so peaceable in its performance, that its victims do not come down till late in the game, and then—seriously. One starch at a meal, and not four, is a mighty good rule to observe if you are fat.

That the Americans eat too much is too well known to be repeated; and too much starch is a major offense.

Japan's Great Disaster

The earthquake at Tokio, Japan, September 1, 1923, was regarded as the greatest and most disastrous in history. The area involved extended 140 miles east and west and 110 miles north and south. The loss of life was estimated at 139,000; the number of injured at 125,000 and 235,000 were believed missing. The property loss was placed at $3?2,500,000.

Luke 18:1-14

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Two more parables force home great truths that are most helpful concerning prayer. The world prays. Those who may doubt this have only to see anyone in some place of distress. That person will either pray or swear and to swear is to pray, for you ask God to do something. Go to any nation in the world that you will and there you will find shrines altars and temples that are associated with prayer.

It is interesting to note the many places in the Bible where widows are to be cared for by those who are able to do this. Now that woman has taken a different place in the business world she is often able to do more for herself than did her lazy husband. In the parable a widow has a just claim which she continuously presents to the judge. He has kept putting her off, possibly in the hope of obtaining some bribe. At last adjudication is given that he may not be further annoyed by her repeated pleas. God, however, does not need to be teased into helping us. He is always eager to be gracious but it may not be for our best interest that He do exactly as we want and when we beg for it. We are to keep right on praying when we believe that our petition is in accord with the mind of the Holy Spirit. Our renewed requests indicate especially that we are maintaining our faith in Him. We are heard by reason of our faith and not because of our "much speaking." Matthew 6:7.

We can only glance at the Publican and the Sinner while each is at prayer. The haughty man just talked out loud. He never sought an audience at the Throne of Grace. Among the distinct elements in an orderly prayer three are found in that of the humble sinner who petitioned "God. be merciful to me the sinner." There was recognition of the heavenly Father, confession of sin and plea for pardon.

A FEW MILES

last moment changed his plans.

Since the adjournment of Congress, Senator Fess has said nothing about his inclination, but the Senatorial group feel that he will withdraw—particularly if it becomes apparent that the President has found a candidate satisfactory to him, one who would be willing to jump into the fight and remain in office throughout the campaign.

Illinois has voted to repeal its prohibition enforcement statute and will become the seventh State without a dry law if Governor Emmerson signs the bill. Responding to the two-to-one vote of the electorate last autumn, the Legislature had no choice other than to accept the obvious wish of the voters. The Governor's position is much the same. Senator Borah maintains that this action is "downright nullification." And "nullification," it will be recalled, is the word that aroused popular feeling to fever heat in the fifty's. They say, over in Illinois, that even though State repeal of dry laws be construed as nullification, the fact remains that we have in America no means of forcing a State into an action it refuses to take. Nothing short of military force can be found to bring pressure on one of the 48 Commonwealths, and to this limit none is prepared to go at present—although Amos W. W. Woodcock's dry army has many of the elements of a war on recalcitrant States.

Over in Kansas, just across the river from where this is written, there are many who assert that President Hoover's ulterior motive in "vacationing" in Porto Rico was to bring Governor Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., into the limelight as a preliminary step in grooming him for the vice-Presidential nomination next year. Aroused by reports that the President is seriously considering our Porto Rican Governor as his running mate in 1932, friends of Vice President Charles Curtis have determined to have a show-down now that the President has returned to Washington.

In the event that the President expresses a desire to change horses in the middle of the stream, so to speak, Mr. Curtis is expected to step aside and enter the race in Kansas for his old seat in the Senate, now held by Senator George McGill, Democrat. No intimation of his purposes has been forthcoming from the Vice President, but it is intimated that he will not submit to his elimination from the executive branch of the government without something of a struggle.

Some political observers here think they see in Secretary Hurley's endorsement of Vice President Curtis still further proof of the Oklahoman's availability for the chairmanship of the National Republican Committee. Within a few hours after he had returned to his desk, following his cruise of the Caribbean with the President, Hurley let it be known that he would support Curtis for renomination in 1932. He made the statement in response to questions regarding reports that he might be Mr. Hoover's next running mate. He asserted that he had supported Curtis for the vice-presidency on two occasions and expected to back him again if the Kansan desired the

Meanwhile, it must be noted with authority that the Democrats have an unusually distinct set of aspirants to Senator Borah's 19 years of fame, the present chairman of the national committee, not given the slightest intimation of his preference as regards his remaining mate for 1932.

Deaths

William M. Glacken, died April 1, at his residence. He was 69 years old at the time of his death. He was born September 19, 1861. He was united in marriage with Miss Maggie Robinson, February 12, 1885. Two children were born to this union, Elmer R., and Sarah Elizabeth. Elmer died five years ago.

Glacken had been a member of the Ebenezer Lutheran Church since October, 1885, and was active in all of its affairs. He was a member of the joint council for many years.

Glacken is survived by his widow, Mrs. Maggie Glacken, a daughter Mrs. Sarah Carpenter, three grandchildren, two sisters and many other friends and relatives. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Simmerman and Rev. Cecil Tanner.

Chambers and Grubbs had charge of the funeral arrangements.

Lapel Notches Traced to French Directorate

"It's funny," said the tailor, "what oddities of dress have survived their original use or purpose. There is the slit in the back of our coats, for example. That, as you probably know, became a feature of dress when men went horseback a great deal, and when it was necessary for the coattail to adjust itself more or less to the saddle.

"But who knows why we have notches in the tapels of our coats? Very few people outside my line of work, I fancy, and probably not so many tailors. The way of it was this: At the outset of their careers there was great rivalry between Gen. Napoleon Bonaparte, the young Italian soldier who had risen rapidly under the directorate, and General Moreau, who was in high favor with many of the directors. Each general had his partisans and each sought for every possible advantage over the other. Any little distinction or difference was seized upon.

"The followers of General Moreau bloomed forth one day with odd-looking coat tapels. These were notched in a way that had been previously unknown. Later on it was revealed that this lapel was a secret badge of the Moreau partisans, but it was not long until the star of the Corsican so far outshone General Moreau's that there was no longer the least thought of rivalry. The notched lapel, however, caught the fancy of the tailors and remained a feature of men's dress."—New York Sun.

Old Custom of Making Offerings to the Moon

Moon viewing has been going out of fashion like all other ancient customs in this country, says an article in a Tokyo paper, but a great many families, particularly those who have old persons in them, still cherish memories of the old days when the custom was one of the annual features of the country by making offerings to the moon. The offerings to the moon consist of rice dumplings, a kind of potato known as kinokatsugi and other vegetables and fruits.

The custom originally came from China, where it already was popular in the Third or Fourth century and countless poems had been written on the glory of the moon by Chinese scholars and litterateurs. It is believed that the custom was first observed in the imperial court of Japan in the Ninth century. Acording to an ancient record, it was already one of the annual features of the imperial court under reign of the Emperor Buntoku (851-857).

Early National Marches

When Washington was first inaugurated as President in New York in 1789, the orchestra leader, a German named Phell, at the John Street theater, composed "The President's March," in honor of George Washington, and played it when Washington attended the theater. The march immediately struck the public fancy. In the summer of 1789 a young man in the theater company, for whom a benefit concert was to be given, asked Joseph Hopkinson to write an original song for the occasion. This song, set to the tune of "The President's March," was "Hail Columbia," as we know it today. It was called "The President's March" in contradistinction to the march of the Revolution called "Washington's March."

Beneficent "Slaves"

This new world will be a world based on slavery, but its slaves will be knowledge and the machine.—Frank Clement.

Telephone's Infancy

In 1877 all the telephones in the world were made in the Charles Williams shop on Court street, Boston.

Spell Joy in New Book

One should read a book in the way he goes through a passage down in his car. Charles M. Trumbull writes, in the Washington Star. He does not stop the rabbits at the scurt house, and branch forth into a public description of the architect who created the structure.

He does not assemble a gathering of the natives in the square and proceed to tell them that the traffic regulations of their one-horse town are vile, their streets badly in need of repair and their mayor evidently a sap of the first water.

No, he does nothing of the kind. He may see all these things and he may want to be as assertive, but the chances are exactly 100 to nothing that he will merely keep his eyes and ears wide open, be interested in everything he sees and hears and go on about his business, that of getting out of town to the next one.

Reading a new book is somewhat similar. A book is a journey, which, once taken, can never be taken again in its exhilarating newness, its pristine colors, its excitement, its vividness, its commonplace drama.

No matter how fine a book may be, or how much one may enjoy its second reading, or its third or fourth reading, there can never be but one first time with it, and, this being true, one is a fool to spoil it by talking, or snoring, or fuming, in his own behalf.

Native Irish Costumes Before Queen Elizabeth

Writing of the native costume of Ireland in the early days, "Costume Throughout the Ages" says: "Since Elizabethan days the dress of the Irish has had little to distinguish it from that worn in England, but before the time of that queen who, like Henry III, made many laws pertaining to the clothing of her subjects, Irishmen wore kilts similar to those of the Scotchman, accompanied by leggings laced in by string tipped with bronze, shoes of brown leather, and a pleated linen shirt. Over all was a sleeveless loose cloak that was long and made of bright-colored wool. Some wore a fitted coat, much like the present-day frock coat with tight sleeves, no collar, and a broad girdle at the waist. . . . The women wore a linen undergarment and over this long gowns of the same material, dyed saffron, or a costly fabric imported from the continent. Their long capes had hoods attached. In jewelry, they wore bracelets, pins, brooches, rings, and torques about their necks. Today, modern Continental dress is found in all parts of Ireland, all traces of the old dress having disappeared."

Tribe of Smiling People

The Samoans are a happy race. They are smiling all the time except when they are laughing and it takes very little to make them laugh. A large group of native stevedores toiling under the torrid sun were thrown into convulsions by the sight of a tractor which they were taking from the hold. They concluded it was some new kind of an automobile with a single seat. The Samoan has little or nothing to worry him and hence his jovial disposition. His food grows all about him and his clothing demands are quite limited. A clean garment of bright colors and some cheap jewelry make a well-dressed woman and the young children wear no clothes at all. There are many short and sudden showers, but as a rule the climate is warm and sunny and the temperament of the people seems to be the same.

Glaciers and Electricity

Changing sizes of glaciers are of practical as well as scientific importance, and hence for many years elaborate measurements have been made of them, partly under government auspices, says Nature Magazine. There is an international glacier commission, founded in 1894, which collects such measurements from all countries and publishes them every year. The Swiss government is especially interested in watching the variations of glaciers, because they affect the flow of the mountain streams upon which Switzerland depends for generating electricity. Systematic observations of glaciers are also valuable as a means of anticipating disastrous avalanches and floods.

Ancient Pewter

What is believed to be the oldest piece of pewter in existence is on exhibition at Field museum in Chicago. It is an inscribed tablet bearing in Chinese a date indicating the year A. D. 85. It was found in a tomb in Lo-Yang, province of Honan, China. This pewter is a relic of the Han dynasty and is executed as a deed, or grant of land, for the burial place of the governor of Tungkun, who was a great scholar highly esteemed by his contemporaries, according to Dr. Berthold Laufer, curator of anthropology.

You Win

A Connecticut citizen, who has played anagrams for a "good spell," writes wrathfully to the Wall Street Journal that he was cheated out of the county anagram championship by the ignorance of the judge, who holds down the lexicographer's easy chair at "the Corners" general store. "He claimed," fumes the correspondent, "there is no such word as 'zloty'; I say there is. Am I right?" "Absolutely, old sport," assures the editor. "A 'zloty' is a Polish coin, designed, no doubt, for slot machines."

Would Settle Quiet

A patriot in the army of the unemployed was overheard to say: "If the wolf keeps howling at my door I'm gonna shoot him up in the pantry and let him starve to death."

Very Accommodating

If a man wants to be a cynic, there are plenty of situations to make him cynical. If a man wants to be an optimist, and wraps to trust in the world and humanity, there are plenty of situations to make him optimistic and trusting. This old world is accommodating that way. — Atchison Globe.

Civil War Rifles

During the Civil war there were approximately 100 different makes of muzzle-loading army rifles. The percussion type was used. The following makes were popular at that time: The Springfield, Sharp's, Hall's, Snyder's, Joslyn and Scott's. The British furnished many other types to the Confederate states.

Piano's Middle Pedal

The third pedal of a piano is the tone-sustaining or sostenuto pedal. This, when pressed down, allows the player to prolong any note or group of notes the keys of which were already lifted when the pedal was pressed down and keeping them so until the pedal is released. Thus one is able to sustain a chord, leaving the hand free for other notes.

TO THE DEMOCRATS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY:

Burke said "where there is abuse, there ought to be clamor because it is better to have our slumber broken by the fir. bell than to perish amidst the flames in our bed."

Today in Kentucky and Tennessee, there are scores of men and women whose hearts have been well-nigh broken by the acts of selfish men and the spirit of justice and decency has been almost forgotten. "Talons and Claws are not civilizations supreme law. The Golden Role must at times be militant. Selfishness must not be the material rule of life

On August 1, 1931, there must be held in every County in this State where there is more than one candidate for nomination to a public office, a primary election for every office within the gift of the people with the exception of Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Auditor of Public Accounts, Secretary of State, State Treasurer, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Attorney General and Clerk of the Court of Appeals. Nominations for these State offices would have been made in the same primary but for the fact that the Democratic State Central Executive Committee, in a meeting held at Louisville, Kentucky, on February 20, 1931, creed that they should be nominated in a State Convention at Lexington, Kentucky, on May 12, 1931.

The members and the addresses of the Democratic State Central Executive Committee are as follows:

Judge Chas. A. Hardin, Chm. Harrodsburg, Ky, Robt. Humphries, Mayfield, Ky., Mrs. Gladys Scott, Murray, Ky., Press J. Blackburn, Princeton, Ky., Mrs. R. R. Neville, Arlington, Ky., Vego Barnes, Hopkinsville, Ky. Mrs. Ben Niles, Henderson, Ky., Charles G Franklin, Madisonville, Ky. Mrs. John Kirk, Owensboro, Ky., Judge Noel F. Harper, Scottsville, Ky., Mrs. Hubert L. Hunt, Franklin, Ky., S. K. Coffman, Central City, Ky., Mrs. A. T. McKinney, Elkton, Ky., E. W. Creal, Hodgenville, Ky., Miss Noi Payne, Clarkson, Ky., J. Dan Talbott, Bardstown, Ky., Miss Sue Yesler, Hartford, Ky., James E. Fahey, Louisville, Ky., Mrs. Elmer J. Graham, Louisville, Ky., Henry Tilford, Louisville, Ky., Mrs. F. A. Clagg, Commdoore Apts., Louisville, Ky., W. N. Hind, Covington, Ky., Mrs. C. E. Creclius, Falmouth, Ky., James A. Diskin, Newport, Ky., Mrs. Eugene Mosley, Bedford, Ky., Wm. F. Klair, Lexington Ky., Mrs. Samuel M. Wilson, Lexington, Ky., Leslie Morris, Frankfort, Ky., Mrs. H. C. Blackburn, Georgetown, Ky., Gordon Montgomery Columbia, Ky., Mrs. Harvey Helm, Stanford, Ky., John J. Greenleaf, Richmond, Ky., Miss Sarah Mahan, Danville, Ky., Lindsay Douglas, Mt. Sterling, Ky., Mrs. Davis Howerton, Ashland, Ky., Allie W. Young, Morehead, Ky., Mrs. Stanley Reed, Maysville, Ky., Bailey P. Wootton, Hazard, Ky., Mrs. Effie S. Roberts, Paintsville, Ky., Douglas Hays, Melvin, Ky., Mrs. Ballard James Prestonburg, Ky, Cecil T. Williams, Somerset, Ky., Mrs. A. J. McDermott, Barbourville, Ky., Edw. M. Gathff, Will lamsburg, Ky., Mrs. C. C. Duncan, Monticello, Ky., E. J. Felts, Russellville, Ky., Mrs. John A. Fulton, Bardstown, Ky., H. Clay Kaufman, Lancaster, Ky., Mrs. S. L. Van Meter, Lexington, Ky.

The above Committee has been called to meet at the Seelbach Hotel, Louisville, Kentucky, on April 20th, 1931, to reconsider its former call for a convention and in lieu thereof to have a primary or to postpone the time for holding a convention so that the voters of this State may participate in the selection of candidates for State offices.

The State convention was called at the behest of a set of politicians in this State who have dominated the affairs of both parties for years and who have used the offices and patronage thereof for their own selfish purposes. They have used and are using the favors of a $20,000,000 State Road Department to control the actions of the State Democratic Committee and force on the people of the State a hand-picked slate of candidates who if elected to office will continue to use the benefits of Government for their personal aggrandizement.

Some of the individual members of the State Central Executive Committee are being intimidated by the slate makers and party wreckers to either stay away from the committee meeting April 20, 1931, or to again vote for a convention by threats of withholding support for relatives and friends who are candidates for public office; others are being flattered by a promise of jobs and offices.

We are making this appeal to you and all Democrats to assist in opening the schemes of a set of men in this State who think public office is for private gain and to save our State from a fate worse than that of Tennessee.

Our Chairman is not interested in the personal ambition of any candidate to hold office. He is interested in having you help him render a public service as he did as Chairman of the Pay-As-You Go" Organization which assisted in defeating the $75,000,000 Bond Issue several years ago, the passage of which would by now have produced other bond issues, the proceeds to be used for the private benefit of political bankers as was done in the State of Tennessee. He also headed a group of citizens who at their own personal expense went into the Courts of the State and procured a decision from the Court of Appeals which has prevented the State Highway Department from plunging the Road Department into quagmire of debt. The Democrats of this Commonwealth want the State officers nominated in a Primary Election. Any other course will be disastrous to the party in November, 1931.

The political pirates want a convention so that they may dominate and control all public offices and the distribution of public funds. We are determined to do whatever we can to defeat the scheme of these politicians to sit in a hotel room and pick a set of officers to be rammed down the throats of the Democrats of this State whether they like it or not.

There is no hope for a clean-up of the Government of Kentucky except through the Democratic Party and this source will become polluted if a few selfish men are permitted to have their way in the nomination of candidates the State Highway Department will continue to build roads in exchange for political favors, the State Banking Department will cotinue to function for political bankers and other departments of Government will continue their extravagant wasteful, inefficient course.

This committee will not have time to communicate with you personally before the State Central Executive Committee meets at Louisvillt. We therefore urge you to immediately do the following:

First: Hold a mass meeting in your County to pass resolutions petitioning the Committee to rescind its former action in calling a convention at Lexington, Ky. and in lieu thereof provide for the nomination of the State ticket in the August Primary, which must be held whether or not there is a convention and if this cannot be done, postpone the time of holding the State Convention to some time in July, 1931, before which time the Republicans will be compelled to declare their method of nomination.

Second: Write or telegraph members of the State Central Executive Committee at the addresses given above requesting them to attend the meeting at Louisville, Ky., on April 20, 1931, and vote for a Primary Election.

Third: Write the Chairman of this Committee at Auburn, Ky., that you are for a Primary Election, that he may present your letters and petitions to the Committee when it meets.

The time is short, the State and Democratic Party [illegible] these now so that our Party will be saved from embarrassment and defeat.

The citizens of this State will not submit to "gang rule." If the Primary is not called, attend your county convention, go to Lexington as a delegate and defeat every candidate who is not for a Primary Election.

GUTHRIE COKE, Chairman
Committee for Primary Election
Auburn, Ky.

Ridiculous Penalties That Attended French Kings

Napoleon, working on the Versailles palace discovered, to probe the secret, a miniature forge, to which Louis XVI stole away to play at being a plebeian locksmith, and also a toy bakery in which Louis XV, supposedly the most illustrious of all, crept off to play at being a baker.

Had his subjects realized, had Louis XVI been a monarch with a flair for modern publicity, had he distributed pictures of himself in leather apron before a forge and anvil he might have saved himself from the guillotine.

It would have given him the touch of humanity that makes kings and toilers kin. But Louis concealed his penchant for hammering hot iron; and only a few authors of court memoirs writing too late to do him any good recorded the fact that he sweated and pounded and puffed his bellows under the eaves of his palace.

It is in a long hall containing the machinery of the superb clock over the entrance door that the forge is found. Here, escaping from the affected graces of his bewigged and perfumed hangerson by climbing a narrow spiral stair the king could be a man. He could take lessons from a workman named Germain, whose simple pleasures he envied.

The pastry shop in which Louis XV made cakes and biscuits is more ornate, and down on a more dignified floor of the palace.

On the level with the rooms in which he quartered Du Barry and La Pompadour, facing on the Court of Deer, is the abandoned royal oven.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Nothing Modern About Liking for "Flip-Jacks"

Mardi Gras jollification in old England reached a climax at noon on Shrove Tuesday when the so-called Pancake bell was rung from the parish church tower, signaling a rush for frying pan and batter on the part of the village goodies, and general feasting and rejoicing of Tom, Dick, and Harry over successive batches of pancakes until far into the night.

In the words of a Seventeenth century chronicler: "Shrove Tuesday there is a bell wrung, call'd the Pancake bell, the sound whereof makes thousands of people distracted and forgetful either of manners or humanitie. Then there is a thing called wheaten floure, which the cookes do mingle with water, eggs, spice, and other tragicall, magicall enchantments, and then they put it by little and little into a frying pan of boiling suet, where it makes a confused dismall hissing, untill at last by the skill of the cooke, it is transformed into the form of a flip-jack, call'd a pancake, which ominous incantation the ignorant people do devoure very greedilie."

By which it will be seen that there is nothing new under the sun, and that flapjacks are prepared and consumed now in much the same fashion that flip-jacks were in the Seventeenth century.

South Dakota's "Lost Lode"

Finding of the "Lost Lode" in the Black Hills of South Dakota recalls the story which trace of this tremendously rich fissure of gold was lost more than 30 years ago. Frank Welsh, a cattleman, was hunting deer near where gold first was discovered in 1874. He sat down on a rock to rest and idly began breaking a piece of white quartz. Suddenly the quartz split, revealing a nugget of coarse gold.

He hurried back to Custer and was grubstaked by Matt and Jack Daly to work the claim. Welsh knew nothing about mining, but he found the quartz vein, rigged up a primitive crusher and washed out about $50 a day. But he cut across the vein, instead of following it, so finally he had to quit. While he had been getting gold out of it he had turned down $60,000 for the claim.

"Dance of Death"

The word "macabre" signifies "pertaining to the danse macabre," or the "Dance of Death." This was a favorite allegorical representation in the art, literature and pantomime of Europe in the Middle ages. Death was represented as a skeleton leading other skeletons or living dancers to the grave. According to the Century dictionary, the name is probably derived from that of an obscure German poet who wrote dialogues of death. Other authorities attribute it to the Arabian word "makabir" for "cemetery" or to the name of some painter of the allegory. It is pronounced ma-ka-ber, the first "a" as in "ask," the second "a" as in "arm," and with second syllable accented.

Rigid Test for Overshoes

A prominent rubber overshoe company has established the custom of subjecting its product to a rigid test of actual service before they are put on the market. This, of course, does not apply to every individual pair of shoes, but to samples of new designs and new compositions which are originated from time to time. Employees wearing the new shoes walk over a measured course representing all kinds of pavement and the results are noted.

Biggest Eel Market

The biggest eel market in the world is New York city, which consumes 2,000,000 pounds of eels a year, paying $1,000,000 for the privilege.—Country Home.

Desert Explorers Find Old Things of Interest

The Lamont desert expedition in search of the lost oasis of Zerzura, under the leadership of Major Bagnold, returned to Cairo unsuccessful, so far as its primary object was concerned. The expedition discovered northeast of Owenat a remarkable circle of stones standing three feet high and nine yards across, similar in formation to Stonehenge. This circle is in the desert 150 miles from the nearest water. They then returned to Selima, and for the first time the journey was made across the desert to Assiut on the Nile by way of the Kharga oasis, following the northern part of the Arabian way—the old slave trade route from Darfur to Assiut, altogether over 1,000 miles long, which used to be traversed by camels in about 40 days, the distance from Selima to Assiut being about 420 miles. Major Bagnold stated that the slave track was clearly marked by the skeletons of camels, and that there were over 200 camel skeletons to every mile. Although it had not been used for 50 years, in certain parts the tracks of the camels were plainly visible.

Mankind Never Able to Change Nature of Cat

It seems that the house cat of today behaves in much the same manner as it did in the bygone ages. The animal's association with man has not changed its habits in one particular. It goes about in its own way and takes its own time and all efforts to make it take some part in the operations of the household have failed. The animal resents any interference with its coming and going. Miss A. S. Firkins, of Columbia university, has put the cat to an intelligence test. Seventy-eight cats were secured from a pet show and put through a series of tests. The first problem put before the cats was how to reach food placed inside an inclosure. Most of the cats solved this by stepping upon a plate which opened the way. The problems were then increased in difficulty, the hardest being one which required the cats to touch seven plates, one after the other, to get the food. Only two of the contestants were smart enough to do this. One of the conclusions arrived at was that male cats are smarter than the females.

Sailors' Refuge

Robert Richard Randall was the founder of Snug Harbor. Randall was a sea captain who retired from the sea in the late Eighteenth century and settled down on a large farm on the edge of which is now Greenwich village. When he died he left his property to an institution known as Sailors' Snug Harbor for Ancient and Decrepit Seamen. His relatives did all they could to break the will, but in 1831, over thirty years after the captain's death, the Supreme court upheld the bequest. In the meantime the city of New York had grown so enormously that the trustees decided it would be better to lease the land contained in the Randall farm and locate the seamen's home on Staten island. At the time of the captain's death or prior, his farm brought in an annual income of about $4,000; at the time the trustees made the change it was yielding $40,000. Today it is estimated that the annual earnings of the property are about $4,000,000.

Bowling Old Pastime

Bowling has been played for centuries in Germany and the Low Countries, where it is still in high favor, but attains its greatest popularity in the United States, whence it was introduced in Colonial times from Holland. The Dutch inhabitants of New Amsterdam, now New York, were much addicted to it, and from 1623 to 1840 it was played on the green, the principal resort of the bowlers being the square just north of the Battery, still called Bowling Green. The first covered alleys were made of hardened clay or of sinte, but the modern alleys are built up of strips of pine or maple wood, about 1 by 3 inches in size, set on edge, and fastened together and to the bed of the alley, the surface being carefully leveled and polished.

Old-World Melody

A New Yorker in London was strolling past Lincoln's inn, one of the old domiciles, which figures in Charles Dickens' "Bleak House." Out of the old building came familiar strains of music.

Meditating, as he walked, on the old-worldliness of this inn built centuries ago, the tune was slow in identifying itself.

It wasn't until the last line of the song that the words came to mind. They were, "I'll never go there any more," and the song, of course, was the one that starts: "The Bowery, the Bowery."

Babylonian Lawgiver

Hammurabi was the most illustrious of all the Babylonian kings. He was the sixth of the Amoritic or West Semitic dynasty and reigned 43 years between 2067 anw 2025 B. C. Hammurabi promulgated for use throughout his empire one of the greatest legal codes ever devised. A fairly complete copy of the code was found about the Twelfth century at Susa inscribed on a diorite stela eight feet high. Apparently the stone had been taken to Elam as plunder by invaders during the later period of Babylon's decline.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Business on Credit

"De best one you kin make of yuh spare time," said Uncle Eben, "is workin' on de bosses fer in de garden fish yokes? regardless of de fact dat maybe you hasn't much money and ain' got de home of dem' very good pay. It's yuh only chance of doin' business on credit."—Washington Star.

Buried Social Rivals

At Florence Nightingale's death the deans of Westminster offered a burial place for her remains in the abbey, but her relatives declined the offer and she was buried beside her father and mother in the churchyard of East Wellow near her old home in Hampshire, England.

Missionary and Pension

A Berkeley girl says she believes an engagement should be long enough to cover the time payments on the engagement ring.—Santa Rosa Press Democrat.

Business and Education

The universities are concerned with scholarship, with the training of the human intellect and not with its final application to this or that lucrative pursuit. Their ideal product is the man whose mind, whether he afterwards becomes a prime minister or a hairdresser, a millionaire or a poor curate, is a source of satisfaction to himself and of entertainment to those who happen to come into his company. —London Evening News.

Diplomatic Denouncement

"Persona non grata" is a Latin phrase literally meaning a person not acceptable. It is used in connection with diplomatic appointments. When a certain person in the diplomatic service is not acceptable to the government of a foreign nation he is said to be persona non grata to that government.

"Genius"

One authority defines the word "genius" as meaning the highest conceivable form of original ability, something altogether extraordinary and beyond even supreme educational prowess, and differing in kind, apparently, from talent, which is usually distinguished as marked intellectual capacity, short only of the inexplicable and unique endowment to which the term "genius" is confined.

Human Emotions

There are three primary human emotions—fear, anger and love. All others are merely diagnostic modifications of the original three.

Wasteful Waiting

"I believe in moral suasion," said Uncle Eben. "When my boy don' show me rightful respect, I jes' waits to see what'll happen when he tries to sasso' de big boys in de neighborhood same as he does to me."—Washington Star.

"L'Aiglon"

Napoleon II is the name of the young son of the Emperor Napoleon. The child was named Francois Charles Joseph Napoleon Bonaparte. The title was duc de Reichstadt. The child was born in Paris March 20, 1811. His mother was the Empress Marie Louise. His death occurred at Schonbrunn, July 22, 1832.

Well-Nourished Children

A child who "just grows up" may do a very creditable job of it. But the fact remains that accidental growth can never be as sure of success as scientifically controlled development, based on proper food.—Exchange.

Advanced Indians

That Indians of California had organized school systems with elementary and higher instruction in ceremonial and religious matters, long before white men came into their country, is the finding of an anthropologist at the University of California.

Embassy Captive Saved by Message in Bread

It was hardly surprising to find that the Swiss ambassador to France issued a prompt denial of the story that three of his fellow countrymen were being held captive in the Russian embassy, but something of this kind really did happen in London once, writes a columnist in the Manchester Guardian. Lord Riversdale tells about it in his "Reminiscences." In the snows at the back of the Chinese embassy in Portland place, a piece of bread was picked up, appropriately enough, by a baker, and inside it was a note addressed to a certain Chinese resident in London. The note stated that the writer had been about to pass the embassy in the company of two of his fellow countrymen when he had been bustled inside, and that he was now a prisoner in an attic in the building and feared that something worse was going to befall him.

The foreign office was not at all pleased to be confronted with such a delicate situation, but the attorney general was quite positive that diplomatic privileges did not include liberty to incarcerate anybody in an embassy, and, an intimation to that effect being gently conveyed to the ambassador, the prisoner was released. There is room for speculation how far the course of history might have been altered if that bit of bread with its message had not been picked up, for the writer of it was the Sun Yat Sen who a dozen years later became first president of the Chinese republic.

Remarkable Low Note on Australian Organ

On the great organ in Sydney town hall, Australia, is a pedal stop of 64 feet. The pipe actually of that length, the lowest C, does not stand upright, but is bent in several places, so that it may be accommodated in the interior of the instrument. The note this giant pipe emits—the stop is a reed stop, a "contra-posaune"—is fearsome. It is more like a cavernous growl than a musical note, and one of the little jokes of the tuner when he is showing visitors through the great army of pipes in this organ is to have the famous 64-foot pedal pipe sounded when the visitor is alongside it and not expecting the shock. It is an unfailing surprise. The vibrations of this low C can almost be counted—in which regard, no doubt, the note resembles that of the basso-profundo whose boast it was that he had always to begin to sing his lowest note 32 bents before it was needed, since it took so long to become audible to the listener!

Lizard Teaches Lesson

Chuckwallas are gentle and easily handled, and make interesting pets if captured and kept in comfortable quarters with a satisfactory food supply. We know too little of the habits of even our common wild neighbors, and these dwellers in the desert could teach us many things that we do not understand, says Nature Magazine. For instance, if we could eliminate the waste of our bodies by means of dry uric acid instead of by drinking quantities of water, it would be very convenient at times, and we might go for months without drinking water. Apparently none of the cold-blooded reptiles suffer from the heat and many thrive in the hottest parts of our low desert valleys, basking on rocks so hot that one can hardly bear to touch them with the naked hand.

Siam's National Flower

The chrysanthemum, regent of oriental gardens, but comparatively new in the Occident, is about to have its one thousand six hundredth birthday. Following its arrival in Japan and China from Korea in the early 300's, the little pompon was immediately adopted by oriental royalty. The chrysanthemum still remains the national flower of Siam. In Japan the 16-petaled flower adorns the emperor's crest. The star and collar, emblem of the Imperial Order of the Chrysanthemum, is the choicest decoration the emperor of Japan can bestow and is seldom found on the breast of any save royalty.

Sell "One"

The advertising manager of a certain company was endeavoring to sell his plan to the board of directors. When he saw that it would be almost impossible to do so, he made this remark: "It is not necessary for me to go into the details of the complexities of this sound advertising plan with one member of this board, because this intelligent man understands advertising well. I would, however, like to confer with him immediately after this meeting." When the meeting was adjourned, every member remained in his seat.—American Mutual Magazine.

Boys on Parade

As in the case of the college student, it takes but little to start the New York street urchin off on a parade. He finds a long pole, or even a discarded and dilapidated broom, which will do for a flagpole. He and his companions seize on a pile of celery stalks thrown out by a grocer; these are carried as swords or muskets, and the line of youngsters perhaps half a dozen in all, march proudly up the street to the badly sung tune of "The Maine Stein Song."

Husbands and Wives

The man who tells you that he never had an unpleasantness with his wife is a liar—or a dud.—American Magazine.

Mistaken Idea

The county persons think co-operation consists in going through it by relying here with the other fellow and yet doing nothing to make it revolve. —Buffalo News.

Wisdom of Hammurabi

Two thousand years before Christ, Hammurabi made severe laws against rapacious money lenders and made the protection of widows and orphans and of the weak against the strong the cardinal principles of law and morals.

Various Kinds

I was looking for a copy of "Tales from Shakespeare," by Charles and Mary Lamb. As I was in a hurry I cut the title down, and asked the girl at the book counter of one of our department stores whether she had "Lamb's Tales." Imagine my amazement when she directed me in a very superior tone: "Lamb's tails? Fur department—fifth floor."—Forbes Magazine.

Spirit Worship

Probably the oldest form of religious belief still practiced is that of Animism, or worship of good and bad spirits, to be found among primitive tribes in Africa and other continents. A late estimate gives their number as 135,650,000, including 90,500,000 in Africa, 45,000,000 in Asia, 100,000 in Oceanic and 80,000 in North America.

First in the World

"How old is the British museum; and how was it started?" asks a correspondent. The foundations date from 1753, when Sir Hans Sloane, in exchange for £20,000 ($100,000) to be paid to his executors, bequeathed his priceless books, manuscripts, and curiosities to be held in trust for the nation. A special bill was passed to sanction the deal.

Vandal's Choice

The first opera of Carl Maria von Weber, distinguished German composer, was produced when he was a boy of fourteen.

Day's Changing Length

Brown's measurements of the changing length of days show that in 1926 the earth was 32 seconds ahead of its average rotational motion for the past three centuries. There appears to be a cycle of 300 years of lengthening and shortening.

Freed From Pain After Suffering Two Years

"For two long years I was in agony, the pains were so severe I lost much sleep and became very nervous, my limbs were swollen—I carefully followed advice rendered me by people who were supposed to know. I took medicine daily, but none seemed to affect my condition. "As time went on I became desperate, my kidneys were bothering me more than ever, my bladder had become weak, and I was compelled to arise many times during the night. Karnak was recommended and I decided to find out just what it would do. I have used several bottles and just what a glorious change, no one can ever realize. I have no pain whatsoever, my system is gradually becoming normal and I feel better than I have in years, I shall always praise and advise Karnak to anyone suffering from rheumatism."

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER

"THE CROSSROADS NEWSPAPER"

VOLUME 86 | Established 1875 | BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1931 | $2.00 Per Year | NUMBER 31.

COUNTY SEASON OPENS SATURDAY

Five clubs were represented at the Boone County League baseball meeting held at the court house last Monday night.

The most important matter that came up for discussion, in fact the real purpose of the meeting, had to do with a revision of the original plan.

The original schedule as made out was to have been completed the last week in June, which several of the teams thought too early. It was proposed that another ten game schedule be played, to start immediately after the conclusion of the first, and which second schedule would be completed on September 1st.

At the end of the second schedule it was planned that the winner of the first play the winner of the second series of games for a silver trophy to be donated by the A. G. Spalding Co., of Cincinnati. Four of the five teams represented at the meeting ratified the latter proposal, Walton not being present and Hebron being present, but not voting.

Next Saturday, April 25th, will be the official opening with the following teams playing at the following points:

Burlington at Petersburg
Hebron at Walton
Rabbit Hash at Bellevue

SEED CORN SHORTAGE

There seems to be a general seed corn shortage in Boone County at the present time, according to County Agent H. R. Forkner. Numerous requests for Boone County white and Johnson County white corn have been received the last two weeks. Many farmers report that the seed they kept the past year is not germinating.

The County Agent would be glad to have a list of all farmers in the county who have good seed of Boone County white, Johnson County white, Reids yellow dent and any other good varieties of seed corn that they might have for sale.

GRANT 4-H CLUB

The Grant 4-H Club held their third meeting since organizing at Citizen Deposit Bank in Grant. Seventeen members have been enrolled in the Tobacco and Sewing Club projects. Two new members, Dorothy Sprague and Robert Williamson, enrolled in the club at this meeting.

Mrs. Wallace Clore was selected as leader of the girls' sewing project group. Mr. Sherman Burcham was selected as leader of the tobacco project group. Allen Burcham and Dorothy Sprague were selected as project group captains of the tobacco and sewing groups respectively.

The tobacco project members reported that all beds had been sown and that the plants had from two to four leaves on them. Many of the members have weeded their beds and have their ground broken. Each member is raising from one to two acres of tobacco. The Sewing Club girls are planning on meeting with Mrs. Wallace Clore on Friday afternoon for their first sewing meeting.

EASTON AND TANNER

A wedding took place at Latonia, Ky., Saturday afternoon at the parsonage of Rev. H. C. Runyan.

The happy couple was Miss Lula Mae Easton, of Florence, Ky., and James Tonner, of Hebron, Ky.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose Easton. She is a charming young lady and has a host of friends.

The groom is the son of Mr. and keeping in their home at Hebron.

The bridesmaid was Louise Popham, of Florence, and the best man was the groom's brother, Earl Tanner of Hebron.

After the ceremony the young people were entertained with a wedding supper at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Easton.

The bride and groom went to housekeping in their home at Hebron.

The many friends of this charming young couple extend to them their best wishes for a long life of happiness and prosperity.

Mrs. Hubert Gaines disposed of her spacious building lot in the Maple Grove subdivision to Mrs. B. B. Grant last Monday.

Local News

The Hon. Frank C. Greene was welcomed by a host of friends upon the occasion of his visit here in the trial of a case last week. Mr. Greene formerly was commonwealth's attorney here and gained many friends during his tenure of office. His original home is at Owenton, while he now has a splendid law practice at Louisville.

Mr. and Mrs. Ransom Ryle entertained a number of friends last Sunday in honor of their youngest daughter, Lucille. It was the occasion of her sixteenth birthday and the following guests were present: Mr. and Mrs. Otis Rouse, Lamar Congleton and family, and Joseph Hoffman and Miss Elizabeth Ryle.

Miss Kate Kirkpatrick, of Cincinnati, spent Sunday with her family here.

Misses Lucille Craddock and Johnny Dickerson, of Union, spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Manley Ryle and family.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Arnold entertained the following guests at their home on the Burlington-Belleview pike last Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Peeno and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Cox, of Bridgetown, Ohio; Clifford Edwards, of Covington; Miss Eva Arnold and Misses Marjorie Hensley and Hazel, Elizabeth and Anna Lee Burton.

Harold Gaines is driving a new Chevrolet Coach, which he purchased from J. R. Eddins last week.

The Burlington P. T. A. play was exhibited at Florence last Saturday night upon the invitation of the P. T. A. organization at that place. A nice crowd witnessed the performance and they were well pleased.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Huey, of Florence, spent Sunday with parents, J. O. Huey and wife here.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Stephens, of Petersburg, spent Sunday and Monday with relatives in Burlington, Mrs. Stephens accompanying Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brown to Cincinnati where they took advantage of Ladies' Day at Redland.

J. J. Kirkpatrick is superintending the moving of the dwelling from the east to the west side of the lot recently purchased by M. Riddell from S. W. Tolin. As soon as the moving is completed a basement will be dug under the dwelling, after which work will start on the erection of a modern filling station on the west corner of the lot.

Improvements are under way on the property belonging to the Boone County Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Co. A large cistern has been excavated on the rear lot, while modern improvements will be made in the apartment upstairs, it is said.

Wilford Sullivan and a friend from Cincinnati spent the week-end with Mr. Sullivan's parents on the Petersburg pike.

The county-wide tournament for both high schools and grades is being held in Burlington this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester McBee spent Sunday with the parents of Mr. McBee in Mt. Zion, Grant County.

Miss Nell H. Martin is having some repair work done upon her property here.

Mrs. Lillian Presser, who is making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kirkpatrick here, spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Louden, of Waterloo.

Prof. G. A. Nelkirk and Miss Sarah Cropper, Hazel Cubbage, Mary Bess Cropper and Katheryn Clore attended the K. E. A. at Louisville last week.

Mrs. Bess Rouse is spending two weeks with relatives in Cincinnati.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Hall arrived in Burlington last Saturday, after a winter spent with their daughter, Mrs. H. W. Shearer, and family, at Newport. What with a garden to care for and his daily duties as caretaker of Uncle Ed Hensley, L. A. Conner and Company, we opine that his summer months will be full indeed.

PUBLISHER'S STATEMENT

The Recorder has been unable to reach its subscribers regularly during the past few weeks on account of linotype trouble that was both unavoidable and unpleasant.

With a renewal of this trouble this week and subsequent delay the publisher arrived at the necessary conclusion the purchase of a new Linotype.

It will be two weeks before this machine is installed and next week's issue, if it is published at all, necessarily will be very short on live local news matter.

NO SEED LOANS AFTER APRIL 30

All Federal Seed Loans must be applied for and mailed before midnight of April 30th if they are to be accepted. Farmers' attention is called to this fact by the County Agent, who urges that those who must make loans do so before the last minute.

The County Committee, serving without pay, can only give time from their work as possible and cannot profitably afford to employ help at the last minute to take care of more requests than they can handle. The committee has been most considerate in this work and reports from St. Louis show that their applications have been filled out with the highest degree of care and efficiency. The committee is composed of Carol L. Cropper, Peoples Deposit Bank, Burlington; Wilford M. Rice, Walton Equitable Bank; Walton and Hubert Conner, Hebron.

Those farmers who can secure credit through their local banks are urged to do so. Those who cannot and need loans to finance their 1931 crops should not hesitate to take advantage of the Federal Seed Loan.

HEBRON HIGH IN STATE SPOTLIGHT

Exceptional honors came the way of the Hebron High School in state contests completed at Erlanger several weeks ago. The results were made known recently.

Students of Northern Kentucky took the exams. at Erlanger, while those from other points in the state stood the tests at other points in their various districts.

George Burton Yates achieved the unusual honor of finishing second in the state-at-large in general scholarship. Yates also finished third in History.

The only other honors to come to the sixth district were a third place to Carrollton, a third to Newport and a third to Dayton.

Young Yates is an exceptional student and will compete in the county tests, which will take place at Burlington this week. It is generally conceded that Hebron again will win first honors in high school subjects, an honor they have achieved for the past several years. However, there are several schools that promise to give them a good battle.

Mrs. O. S. Eddins and Mrs. Garriott, of Petersburg, attended the sessions of the M. E. Conference, Covington District, held at Walton last Thursday.

SUDAN GRASS FOR TEMPORARY PASTURE

Sudan grass will make numerous farmers of the county one of the best temporary pastures this year, according to the County Agent. It should not be seeded until around June, the first or late corn planting time. It is a warm weather crop. It should be seeded similar to oats and at the rates of 20 to 25 pounds per acre.

Numerous requests for information on this crop have been received at the County Agent's office during the last few weeks. Sudan grass will be of special importance this year to a number of farmers who are short on permanent pasture. It is a crop that may be pastured often fifteen days after sewing. It may be pastured or pastured and cut for hay several times during the year. In a good year it should usually furnish sufficient pasture for from one to two cows per acre throughout the summer. The seed at the present time are selling at from 8 cents to 10 cents per pound.

FORMER BOONE COUNTY GIRL WINS HONORS AT LEXINGTON

Miss Wanda Lee Hafer, a senior in the Ludlow High School, won second place for flute contestants in the State Interscholastic Tournament, held at Lexington, Ky., April 10th.

Miss Hafer is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter O. Hafer, recent residents of Hebron, this county, and an eighth grade graduate from the Hebron Consolidated School.

She is a pupil of Robert Cavally, of the Conservatory of Music, Cincinnati; a member of the Ludlow School Orchestra, under direction of Professor Mitchell, and also of the Orchestra of the Avondale Presbyterian Church, conducted by De Loyce W. Moffitt.

CORNCRACKERS MEET

The Corncracker 4-H Club met with H. R. Forkner at the Constance Schoolhouse Friday afternoon, April 6th. The club is the largest in its history. Project group captains reported the progress of their groups.

The Sewing Club is to meet at the home of Mrs. Henry Kottmyer Jr. next Friday for the first sewing meeting. The Corncrackers have added a new project this year, the girls' room project.

MADGE REEVES,

Sam Ryle and wife, Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Aylor, and Misses Mary and Velma Phillips, visited Mrs. Aylor's sister at Dayton, Ohio, where they visited the Old Soldiers' Home.

Mrs. A. W. Albeiz and Mrs. Victor Reese, of Avondale, Cincinnati, spent Tuesday with Mrs. Lavinia Kirkpatrick and family.

School Notes

The Burlington High School baseball team got started last week with two victories over the strong Petersburg team. On Wednesday winning by a score of 14 to 8 and on Friday by a score of 10 to 7. In the game Wednesday the batteries for Burlington were Ogden and W. Greenup. For Petersburg Bradburn and Christy. Home runs J. Williamson and Ogden. The game was played well by both teams with the exception of afew errors which every team makes once in a while. The batteries were the same for Petersburg Friday but for Burlington they were the opposite with Greenup pitching ast Ogden catching. J. W. Williamson and Snow were the White and Greenup following close with triples each. Next Thursday the Hebron High School will challenge the Burlington boys for a game. So you can kill two birds with one stone by being at the Tournament and ball game. So let's all come.

We are glad to welcome Hallie Stephens back to the Freshman class this week as she has been confined at her home for the past week with measles.

The Freshmen English class will finish Julius Caesar this week and the members of the class have all seemed to enjoy it.

Elmo Aylor is still out of school but we hope he will be able to come back some time this week.

Mr. W M. Ewald, the District Y. M. C. A. Secretary, made a business call at the Burlington High School Monday morning, Preparing for a field meet to be held Friday morning April 24th.

Miss Stella Spalding was absent from school last week.

The Girl Reserve Club wishes to thank all who helped to make our lunch sales during court week a success. Especially do we wish to thank the ladies who worked with us and those who donated pies. We are also indebted to the Hi-Y for their assistance and to those in authority who gave us permission to use the court yard. Above all, we thank the public who patronized us.

The Hi-Y boys are making plans to sell candy, chewing gum and etc., and will sell sandwiches Thursday night to the Tournament folks. So if you are hungry let the Hi-Y boys feed you.

7th and 8th Grade

This is our last week of school and we are looking forward to the Tournament which will be held on Wednesday and Thursday of this week—our school ending Friday.

Our room enjoyed a picnic Wednesday April 8th.

PHEASANT EGGS

A large number of requests for pheasant eggs were sent through the County Agent's office to the State Fish and Game Commission the past few weeks. Mr. Edwin Johnson, District State Game Warden, who was responsible for this announcement to Boone County farmers, received word soon after the announcements appeared in the Boone County Recorder and Walton Advertiser that more requests were being received than could possibly be supplied.

While many requests no doubt were received too late to participate in the available supply, the County Agent wishes to say that all requests received have been forwarded to the Fish and Game Commission. It will be practically impossible to acknowledge by letter all requests received.

Clifton Roberts, of Covington, spent the week-end with Walter Brown and family.

Mr. William Taylor and daughter, Miss Mildred Thompson, of Cincinnati, spent the week-end with G. C. Jarrell and family.

Mrs. Laura Crisler, of Petersburg, spent a few days here last week visiting her sister, Mrs. J. W. Kelly, and Mr. Kelly.

Leon Aylor and family have moved from the Raymond Goodridge property on Jefferson Street to the property of Wendell Easton in the west end of town.

JURY DISAGREES IN SECOND TRIAL

The second trial of the case of the Commonwealth of Ky., vs. Jeff Mills for the killing of Charles Young resulted in another hung jury.

The facts as presented in the case by the various witnesses were approximately the same as the evidence at the first trial, while the standing of the jury was reported as nine for a ten-year sentence, one for a lighter sentence and two for acquittal.

At the conclusion of the trial Mills was again remanded to jail, although the court later set his bail at $7,500.00. Previously Mills had been denied bail on account of the seriousness of the charge, but, in view of the fact that two trials had resulted in hung juries, the court acceded to the plea of the defense for bail. At this writing, however, Mills has been unable to raise his bond.

His third trial has been set for the first day of the August term. Edwards and Lail, of Cynthiana, again defended Mills, while the interests of the Commonwealth were looked after by Yager and Riley.

FARM PROSPECTS GOOD

Farm prospects in Boone County are well advanced for this season of the year. The present prospects are good. A last week's survey of the county show the following:

More early plowing has been done to date than at any time this early in recent years.

Tobacco plants in most sections of the county have come up and are looking good. Two to four leaves per plant can be found.

Rye, wheat, alfalfa, clover and grass are all making good growth in the county.

A heavy crop of fruit blooms are coming up. An unusual heavy crop of peach and pear bloom could be found in full blast this week. Fruit men are busy on their spray schedules.

The lamb crop is good and lambs are doing fine. The majority of the sheepmen have docked and trimmed their lambs. More than in other years.

Dairying is still with us. When all is said and done it is coming to be the greatest stabilizing factor in our agriculture.

Garden crops are up in most communities. Many truck growers could be seen giving their peas, onions and other early crops the first plowing.

Poultrymen are reporting one of the best springs on record for raising their young chicks.

Last but not least is the farmer, the farm people—they have faced one of the worst depressions on record—what do they do? They come back as they always have in the past—to their spring tasks with new zeal, new spirit eager to give another 1.43 per cent of their lives with the hope that 1931 will be a better year than 1930 and that good crops and fair returns will be the reward improved practices and efforts during the year.

The farmer may be cussed and discussed, but there are not many in other professions who would have the nerve to face the same problems. We do not know what freezes, drouths, disease and pests may bring before the year is up, but we are off—off with the spring time, with high spirits and we are going to try to make good.

WARSAW BASEBALL TEAM DESIRES GAMES IN BOONE

The editor received a letter last week from Rev. Harry M. Wilson, pastor of the Warsaw Christian Church, at Warsaw, Ky., stating that his church will have a fully informed team ready for games by May 1st. He further stated that any team desiring games with their church team might obtain them by corresponding with their business manager, J. S. Ryle, of Warsaw. All games must be played during week days, preferably on Saturdays. Games may be played either in Warsaw, or in the home town of the other team.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Stephens received the sad news of the death of their granddaughter, Dorothy Stephens, age 3 years, who died at her home in San Diego, Cal., after four days' illness of measles and pneumonia. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene W. Stephens.

CANNED FOOD IS WHOLESOME

The use of preserved foods, fresh vegetables, fruits, meats and almost everything edible, packed either in tin or in glass, is a matter of such everyday experience that few people realize what an extremely new thing is in human life.

A hundred years ago the canning of food was practically unheard of. It is only within fifty years or so that the present safe modern methods of canning have been developed. Up to the 1870's the only effective ways to generale use of preserving food were those of salting, smoking, pickling, drying or preserving with spices. The opening up of trade with Indies routes between Europe and the East Indies, in the Middle Ages, was due, as much as to any one cause, to the demand in Europe for pepper, cloves, all-spice and other pungent, aromatic spices grown in the East, which could be used to preserve meats and other foods.

In the World War our soldiers were fed largely on canned meats, canned beans, canned fish, and an immense variety of canned vegetables, soups and fruit preserves, all of them already cooked. Military rations in the Civil War consisted only of such foods as could be preserved by salting, smoking and drying. The cooking had to be done in the field.

The last prejudice against canned foods ought to disappear in the light of the report of Dr. W. H. Eddy, of Columbia University, who has conducted extensive tests with forty-nine different canned foods, including milk, meats and fowl, vegetables and fruits. Dr. Eddy informed the American Chemical Society, the other day, that these tests show that the vitamins A, B, C, and G, which are essential for health, are contained in foods canned by modern processes, in substantially the same degree that they are to be found in the fresh prodocts.

It is inevitable that the use of canned foods will increase as population tends to concentrate in the cities, and the problem of fresh food supply and of domestic cooking become more complex.

The canning industry is one of the largest in the U. S. but it bids fair to be much larger. In several parts of the country co-operative canneries, owned and operated by the farmers who grow the products which are canned, have been successful. Co-operative projects of that kind are among the enterprises which the Federal Farm Board authorized to assist with financial cooperation and expert advice. There is room for many more of them, wherever a sufficient number of farmers are willing to agree to produce the necessary supplies of raw material to keep such a cannery in operation.

STRAWBERRY MARKETING COSTS VARY

Cooperative marketing associations, like private businesses, operate with widely varying efficiency. The cost of marketing Kentucky strawberries in a recent year varied, for example from 6 to 36 cents per crate and averaged 12 cents, according to C. D. Phillips of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. There are many factors which effect the operating efficiency of an association, and any of these factors which reduce its efficiency of operation increases costs of marketing.

Volume of business and the handling of individual expense items are teh principal reasons for the wide varieties in costs of marketing the strawberries.

The first factor, volume of business, is important. It is the main cause for variation in such important fixed expenses as management, office labor and inspection. Many other items, as directods fees, taxes, insurance, market information, etc., are also affected by volume, although not to the same degree. Available information indicates that the fixed costs are so important that unit costs of operation decline substantially as volume increases up to 100 to 150 cars per season.

A second factor causing wide variation in efficiency of operation is the large number of small expenditures incurred from time to time. Bonds for manager, printing, storage, drayage, rent, etc., were a few of the many expense items included. Although there is some danger that the association which attempts to save its pennies, by economizing on some items, may prove to be "penny-wise and pound-foolish," yet these small items amount to a considerable sum when added together. Attention to details is, therefore an important sum when added together. Attention to details is, therefore, an important factor at all times, but especially so when the volume of business handled by an asocition fails below the optimum required for efficient operation.

In a year such as this, when the prospective volume will probably be below that required for maximum operating efficiency it is especially important to watch smll expenditures in order that net receiptes to growers may be as large as ossible.

It seems that Slovak is so closely allied to Czech that most scholars describe it as a dialect. This alphabet is founded on the Czech. Slovak books were rare before the World war, but since the formation of the Czecho-Slovak state many have appeared.

Vitood on Monroe Doctrine

Senator Bingham, in his book on the Monroe doctrine, says it was not until 1895, during the second administration of President Cleveland, that a secretary of state thought it expedient or necessary to restate the Monroe doctrine and to bring us to the verge of a European war by backing it up with an absolutely uncompromising attitude. Venezuela had had a long-standing boundary dispute with British Guiana. Nobody cared very much either way until somebody discovered that in the disputed territory were rich gold fields. In the excitement that ensued the Venezuelans appealed to the United States and Secretary Olney, invoking the Monroe doctrine, brought matters to a crisis.

Owl in Squirrel Nest

The long-eared owl is of medium size with extremely long ear tufts. They live throughout temperate North America and breed south to Virginia, Arkansas, northern Texas and southern California, spend the winter in most of their range and south to central Mexico. The nest, says Nature Magazine, may be that of some large bird or a squirrel, carelessly repaired; it is usually in a dense growth of evergreen trees and placed from ten to twenty feet up. They are very beneficial, for their food consists largely of meadow mice and other small mammals, insects, spiders, crayfish, small snakes, frogs, snails and earthworms are known to be taken as well.

Odd Movement of Particles

The name "Brownian movement" is given to the irregular agitation seen when minute solid particles, suspended in a liquid, are viewed under a high magnifying power. It is named for Robert Brown, who observed it in 1827. Many particles which are put into a fluid, instead of sinking steadily, are endowed with a vigorous motion which is haphazard and irregular. The particles move to and fro, rotate, rise and sink, but show no tendency to rest, maintaining indefinitely the same average state of agitation.

"THAT LITTLE GAME"—WISE WINNER

GOVERNMENT FIGHTS TO STAY CORNBORER INVASION OF SOUTH

The United States Department of Agriculture has forces of men at work in Bracken and Lewis counties, cleaning up evidences of the European cornborers' attempted invasion of the South. Tractors are being used to ull wide-bottom plows to bury old corn stalks and other debris that may harbor the insect. Feed and badn lots are raked and all materials barned.

A statement from Prof. W. H. Price, state entomologists at the Experiment Station says that the University of Kentucky being without funds to fight the pest, appealed to the Federal government last December, in an effort to have the Ohio river quarantine strengthened. Extra guards were placed at bridges and ferries to check the flow of ear corn from infested areas into Kentucky.

Prof. Price believes that it will be necessary to rely principally on publicity and cooperation of farmers and others in keeping the borer north of the Ohio River. He has appealed to farmers not to buy corn from infested regions unless it is shelled. Those who already have it shelled and ther burn the cobs.

After the borer has become established in the state, the main efforts should be directed toward the disposal of corn refuse. This may be accomplished by feeding it to live stock direct from the field, or as silage of as finely shredded material. It also may be accomplished by plowing under completely all debris left in the field. Neither depth of plowing now time of plowing is important for control if a clean job is done and the material is not afterward dragbed to the surface before the moths emerge. Finally, any crop remanants not disposed of otherwise should be prned.

Famous Trinity Church

The Trinity church tract contained about 62 acres and was variously known as the King's farm, the Duke's farm and the Queen's farm. Van Twiller, the Dutch governor of New Amsterdam, sold this tract in 1633 to Roelof Jans and by his will it became the property of his wife Anneke. She died in 1663, leaving eight children, all of whom but one, Cornelius Bogardus, in March, 1670, executed an instrument, known as a "transport," conveying the property to Col. Francis Lovelace, then governor of New York. Trinity church was incorporated by royal charter on May 6, 1697. In 1703 Queen Anne formally presented the tract of land to the Trinity church.

Street Bonfires

Small fires are a delight on cool evenings to the children of the city streets. Old newspapers and stray bits of wood are enough to start a blaze that attracts a throng. Toes are toasted and sports, such as jumping over the flames, keep the youngsters interested. Nearby streets are scoured for fuel, and the extra wood is neatly piled up or kept in a large tin can or grocer's box. But if the fires grow too large, fed by the enthusiasm of the children, a friendly policeman or fireman is likely to intercede.

Way of Life by BRUCE BARTON

BLESSED ARE THE ASKERS

When I was younger I used to look at the Giant Corporations of the country with awe.

I thought: "How wonderful to be president of such a world-wide business. Millions of capital and surplus in the treasury; great plans which are turning out a stream of products; the highest priced experts in every line to do the work! All the president has to do is to sit in a nice big office and watch the wheels go round."

For instnce:

I happened to be in the office of the chairman of the board of one of the biggest businesses of its kind. The telephone rang. On the other end of the wide was the president of a railroad.

Said the railroad man to his friend the manufacturer: "You have a subsidary campany in our hill territory. Its total freight bill now for a long time, not only here but all over the world. Many predictions have been uttered; many remedies proposed.

My own suggestion for improving things is very simple:

Let's all quit talking about how times are.

Let's go out and ask for orders.

Blessed are the askers!

Whether a business be big or small, or international, makes little difference. If it is to keep going it must have orders. And there isn't any president or chairman of the board so famous or so rich that he isn't after orders every single day.

Conditions have been subnormal not only here but all over the world. Many predictions have been uttered; many remedies proposed.

My own suggestion for improving things is very simple:

Let's all quit talking about how times are.

Let's go out and ask for orders.

Blessed are the askers!

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

PERODICAL EXAMINATIONS

I am 100 per cent in favor of health examinations at regular intervals. It is my purpose in this letter, to persuade you into the same view, if possible.

If you were setting out on a long journey in your automobile, now would you have have an expert look the car over, to see that it is in first-class order, that the trip might be made with maximum ease and comfort? You certainly would, if you used the plainest variety of common sense.

I know of no more important trip than this journey that we call human life; we are all on the highway and, a happy; and, successful journey is what of all things we most want.

A sontemporary tells us that the doctor is by your side when you are born—and he will probably be there when you pass into the great beyond. And, during your active years, you do your best to keep away from him; you use every nostrum that you can hear of for your ailments that are sure to come— and you come—and you send for the doctor only when you re "all shot to pieces," and fear you ade going to die!

This seems to me the most inexcusable form of short-sightedness that a sensible man or woman can exercise. Do you wait till your automobile is reduced to a pile of junk before going to the expert department? Is your body of less importance than the car? Think about it.

It is every man and woman's privilege and DUTY to go to their family physician at stated intervals and be carefully looked over; here is the moment above all others that "a stitch in time saves nine." I am sure nine cases of sinkness out of ten would be eliminated if the duie of periodical examinations were faithfllly observed. Wouldn't that be a pay proposition?

A dangerous dise in blood pressure may be nipped in the bud; a sireuos ow koy kow way babtbo serious kidnney disorded may be recognized at the easiest stage for cure. I ooiln instance many more see if you can't.

THE RICH MAN ANND LAZARUS

Luke 16:19131

Rev. Samuel D. Price D. D.

Jesus kept on teaching by means of parables as he made His way thru Perea, enroute to Jurselem for the Feast of Passover. Some had just "scoffed at him" and He purposed to show them mode about true and abiding values. The "certain rich man" is witnin an indicator name. We call him Dives because therein we have the Latin wodd for rich. He was the kind to sum up class antagonism. He would not have given any thing of value to help the man out of employment during the winter through which we have just passed. He lived to eat and made himself a candidate for gout by the way in which he "fared sumptuously every day." Though he did not invite even his fellow aristocrats to share in the banquets this selfish vagabond sat clothed in garments suitable for a king.

If the looked at the beggar who lay at his gate it was with disdain. There was Lazarus, the man full of sores and attended duding the day by dogs only. This wretched bit of humanity eagerly hoped that crumbs from the rich man's table might be his portion, and he would have thanked Jehovah for even such limited food.

Death must come to all and in time both characters passed into the beyond. An expensive funeral was accorded the man the man of wealth though his attendents were paid to mourn officially. Once ignored Lazarus had the angels to attend his spirit into the divine presence. When Dives beholus the beggar better off than he is, he thinks that he can have him as a sevant to bring a cooling drop of water, for now the miseries of full retribution are upon the man who was rich in gold only. Facts concerning the future world make every one meditate at length. We fix our place for eternity by the way we live in this world.

LOANS TO KENTUCKY FARMERS AMOUNT UP

A report made by Dean Thomas P. Cooper of the College of Agriculture, University of Ky. showed that at the end of the first 10 days in April Kentucky farmers had received nearly a million and three-quarters, dollars in government loans for the purpose of planting the year's crops, for purchasing feed for livestock and for food, clothing and other family needs.

Loans numbering 16,273 for a total of $1,613,886 had been made to Kentucky farmeds for the purchase of seed and fertilizers, and 1,2r2 additional loans for $58, 07 made for the purchase of food, clothing, repairing labor and depairing machinery, known as rehsbilitation loans.

Kentucky was leading the eight states served from the St. Louis farmers' seed loan office, both in number of loans and in the total amount of money loaned. The number of applications varied from 1 to more than 400 per county, with many counties in this counties in this state filing more than 200 requests for government assistance.

Notice has been received that the loan service will be discontinued on April 30 and tha no applications received after that date will be honored.

FARMERS TO INSPECT CATTLE FED ON WHEAT

Farmeds have been invited to the Experiment Station at Lexington on April 25 to see cattle fattened on wheat and hear the results of a comparison of the cattle feeding values of wheat and corn.

Due to interest in feeding wheat, the Experiment Station last October began feeding one lot of steers cracked wheat and another lot shelled corn. Each lot received the same number of pounds of grain, and the same supplementary feeds of corn silage, cottonseed meal and oats straw.

The steers are Herefords where brought from the west to Kentucky as calves, and placed on feed when averaging 730 pounds. They now have been in the feed lot nearly six months, in a test of the feeding qualities of wheat.

The meeting will be held at the Experiment Station farm at ten o'clock Saturday, April 25.

Remarkable Jaw Power of East Indian Lizard

The strength of jaw of carnivorous animals cannot compare with that of reptiles, an article in Pearson's Weekly points out. The building and muscle are famous for their strength of grip and the hyena is said to be able to bite through the thigh bone of an ox to extract the marrow, but they take back seats to the power and tenacity of a lizard in the Calcutta reptile house.

The lizard was of the sort known as the "go-anap" and weighed about 100 pounds. As it was being drawn out of the cage which it shared with the pythons it seized a twelve foot snake by the neck.

Locked together, the two creatures were drawn out. Keepers made every effort to lever the jaws of the lizard apart. But it was useless, and the python's neck was flat as a pancake when at last the lizard let go.

A record illustration of the muscular power of the turtle was given by the late Frank Bullen. He and his mates captured an immense turtle weighing 1,800 pounds and cut it open. They removed all the meat and left only the head attached to the shell.

A young man began examining the head and foolishly put his fingers into the turtle's mouth. They were bitten off as cleanly as if they had been cut.

Historian Sees Symbol in "Song of Nibelungs"

A strange theory, according to which the famous "Song of the Nibelungs" is partly a symbolic description of metallurgical processes, has been published by the German historian, Carl Ludwig Antz. While Herr Antz does not deny that some of the personalities and motives of the song may have a historical background, his thesis is that the poet of the Nibelungs used old fairy tales and myths merely as a garment. The life of Siegfried, Herr Antz contends, is full of such indications. In his opinion, it is highly remarkable that metals have been mined in the territory around the city of Worms, the seat of the Nibelungs, for several thousand years. Siegfried's fight against the dragon is explained as a symbolic interpretation of mining. Brunhilde, who lived in Brittany (not in Iceland), is described as the queen of tin, and Siegfried conquers her for Gunther, the king of copper. Gunther (copper) marries Brunhilde (tin) and the result is bronze. Alberich, the dwarf, is a miner who reveals the secret of mining to Siegfried.

"Erasmus Alms Box"

Erasmus, noted scholar and reformer of the Sixteenth century, with his friend Dean Colet, founder of St. Paul's school, visited St. Nicholas' almshouse, in England, and one of the brethren ordered a holy relic for them to kiss, as was the custom before sprinkling guests with holy water, writes Lovinia Walsh in the Boston Transcript. The relic in this case was a part of a shoe once worn by St. Thomas of Canterbury. The dean, it seems, was not kissing anybody's old shoes. He forthwith got hot under his clerical collar and became rhetorically hectic.

The scholarly Erasmus, on the contrary, was most courteous, and to make amends for the dean's misbehavior, he dropped a goodly sum into the alms box. Ever after, this box was known as "The Erasmus Alms Box."

Getting Deaf

A certain well-known local hypochrondriac has a new fear—that is getting hard of hearing. His doctor assures him it isn't so, but he worries constantly about the possibility of becoming deaf.

His complex took the form of announcing to his office mates that he was going to buy some sort of an earphone, to see if that aided him. Consequently his colleagues were ready for him when he appeared with it next day, and whispered every word they addressed to him or to anyone in his presence.

Now he's telling his doctor that the good man doesn't know what he's talking about. Mean? Maybe—but have you ever lived with a hypo-chrondriac? —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Properly Southern States

The original Mason-Dixon line was the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Maryland; just before the Civil war the line was accepted as the dividing line between free and slave states. The states generally regarded as southern are Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland and Delaware. The Mississippi river, which forms the eastern boundary of Missouri, does not change its name. The Missouri river divides the state, but the whole of Missouri is considered as a southern or border state.

Making a Market

A market for any kind of goods is any assemblage of buyers and sellers of that commodity. This market does not necessarily mean that the buyers and sellers must be in close contact, as on the New York stock exchange, but there can be no actual market unless the buyer and seller are in communication with each other. Thus modern inventions like telegraphy, telephone, wireless and other means of communication have greatly enlarged the possibilities of markets.

Prohibition Already Making It Self Factor In 1932 Race

Editor's Note—The opinions expressed by the writer of this story each week are not necessarily concurred in by this newspaper.

(BY FRED HOLLMES)

Washington Correspondent for The Boone County Recorder

"Who shall decide when doctors disagree,
And soundest heads are at a doubt, like you and me?"

Our politicol doctors, irrespective of party affiliation, attempting or pretending to diagnose, are just guessing and at the present time hopelessly disagreeing.

Frank Kent, of the Baltimore Sun, one of the most, if not the most astute political writer in this country laughs at the declaration of the Progress made at the time of their Washington conference last month, that Prohibition is a 'sham issue." Mr. Kent goes so far as to maintain that coming from the group which more than any other inveighs against the cowardice of the two major parties and praises its own wisdom, virtue and courage, theirs is really a ridiculous position which, if they were more important in the general political scheme, would completely untenable.

The same redicts that before the 1932 campaign really opens, if they adhere to their published contention that Prohibition as an issue is in the discard, the Progressives certainly will be convicted either of an utter lack of humar or conscious incercerity. He is convinced that even the extraordinary talents of their leaders for obtaining publicity will hardly obscure that. To him scarcely a day goes by but some development makes it plainer that the only question in which any large part of the people is deerly interested in Prohibition and that it will be the one outstanding issue next year. This, thinks Mr Kent, seems almost too clear to argue.

Then come some of President Hoover's advisers who are said to have exressed the opinion that "prohibition is good for one more Presidency." Their theory is that if the party and the candidate take the Dry side once more, the believers in prohibition will forget their quarrels with the Republican Administration and vote it in again.

And who do you imagine was the first to throw a money-wrench into this well-oiled, sdoothly-running piece of machinery? Who was the first to scatter seeds of suspicion that prohibition lank, after all, may not obliterate other issues in at least one section of the country?

The other night Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, a regular Administration man, made a radio speech to his constituents. What he said may well be considered prayerfully by the Republican National Committee and by the White House. It is not as if these words came from a Democrat, or from one of the party revolutionists who who call themselves Progressives. Senator Capper said:

"I just want to show how my own party has shamelessly violated its principles, despite all we of the mid-west could do to hold it to its promises. The Republican party is committed to protective tariff policy. Yet when we of Kansas and other mid-western States asked for a tariff on oil to protect our present paralyzed independent oil industry the Republicans of the East denied it to us."

Two weeks ago your correspondent reported that Kansas was vitally interested in the fate of its own "Charlie Curtis." That was and still is true. But in Kansas and eleven other States is all the talk is of oil. The incomes of many citizens are dependent upon that industry. Most of them are strongly in favor of the Dry laws. But if the Democratic party should offer them the relief which their own party denies, "one more election" might not be squeezed out of the issue which once seemed all in all to Kansas, Senator Capper continued.

"They (the New England Republicans) want protection against foreign competition on the stuff they make and sell, but want free trade on the stuff they buy, especially oil in my opinion, the Republicans of New England and those of other sections who are several tools of the Big Four oil monopoly are making a fatal mistake. Their action has started an insurrection which may junk the whole tariff policy and bring disaster to their own section as they have wrought it to the mid-west. I believe Kansas is ready to fight."

To this William Allen White's Emporia (Kansas) Gazette, which reprints the fiery oration, gives its approval. Neither the Senator nor the newspaper suggests that the Eastern Republicans have brought the reverse of prosperity to their own section by the tariff, which, it is claimed, has stifled foreign trade; or that in many of their States the Democrats have taken most of the offices already. If Senator's Capper's sentiments truly represent the feeling in this indefendable Dry Republican States, and his advice is followed, the next session of Congress and the next Republican National Convention may be full of events which will impel President Hoover's advisors to change their point of view.

Republican leaders lost no time in turning to the consideration of the problem with which they are confronted because of the death of the late speaker, Nicholas Longworth Representative John C. Tilson, of Connecticut, majority leader of the House and acknowledged to be the "logical" selection of the Republicans for Speaker of the next House, has spent some time at the Capitol recently. He declined both to announce his candidacy for the speakership nomination and to deny that he would be a candidate.

It would seem to be the desire of Republican in the House to postpone for the time being any decision in the matter of the speakership nomination. It is most unlikely that the House before Congress convenes. The regular session which starts on the first Monday of next December, and it is just as unlikely that there will be a caucus of Republicans of the House until before Congress convenes. The Republicans will choose their candidate for Speaker at that caucus, and if Mr Tilson is selected it will be necessary also to pick his successor as majority leader.

Undoubtedly there is some opposition to Mr. Tilson's selection among western Republicans, but it is understood that he is regarded with some favor by the Progressives in the House. Progressive Senators, so often opposed by Mr. Tilson during the last Congress in legislative matters, are bitterly antagonistic to his election as Speaker, but there is more than a responsibility that if the Progressive Republicans of the Senate undertake to tell the House members who the latter shall select for Speaker some resentment on part of the House will be aroused.

Mr. Tilson was the unanimous choice of the Republicans for majority leader at the last party caucus. He is popular with members of the House and doubt is expressed that he could be defeated for the Speakership nomination if he becomes an active candidate. He has been a strong supporter of the Administration. While it is claimed in some quarters that the Speakership should go to the mid-west it has been pointed out that Ohio has filled this office during the last three Congresses and that it might be considered the East's turn for the honor.

Bertrand H. Snell, of New York, chairman of the committee on rules has shared with Speaker Longworth and Leader Tilson the practical direction of legislation in the House. Mr. Snell's duties required him to hold a firm grip on the steering wheel of the House and, of course, he was often compelled to deny favors to members clamoring for consideration of their pet measures. His fairness to all, while clearing the way for paramount and necessary public legislation, is conceded by all parties. His qualifications for the Speakership are not questioned. His willingness to co-operate in amending the rigid rules of the House may promote his chances with his party colleagues.

However, it must be remembered that in the present case nomination is by no means the equivalent of election, and with the control of the new House precariously balanced between two major parties so evenly divided as to give the insurgent Republican group the determining voice in all important matters, the whole question of legislative policy during the next two years is at stake.

Some of the Democratic leaders continue to believe that that the party might maneuver itself into a better position for the 1932 campaign by sidestepping and placing the nominal responsibility in the House on Republican shoulders. The one drawback to this argument is the fact that no matter whether Democrats organize the House or not, they with the insurgent group of Republicans will have actual working control over legislation—a responsibility of which the country is well aware.

In view of the fact that it will devolve upon the Democrats in any case, there would seem to be small profit in trying to avoid the nominal responsibility that goes with organization and the election of a Speaker. By assuming this nominal responsibility, if they can get it, the Democrats might obtain a more effective control of the working machinery that would be useful in discharging the tasks or which they are to be held responsible.

Indians Believed Lake to Be Home of Dead

Before the coming of the white man into what is now Colorado, the Ute Indians, proud possessors of the country, watched the mists rising from Echo lake and, with weird incantations, held many of their strange tribal rites on its shores. To them the lake, with its strange mists, was sacred.

They could not fathom the mystery of the heavy mists, but they knew that they came from the lake and were lost in the heavens. The Indians observed the Milky way, and in their legends it was known as the home of their dead. They thought the mists from the lake formed the Milky way.

The lake is known today for its strange echoes that ring along its rocky shores with many reverberations. To the Indians the echoes of their voices in their many religious services and in every-day life on the shores of the lake were the answering voices of their departed friends and relatives in the happy hunting grounds.—Detroit News.

Living "Lamps"

Clark's "Animals of Land and Sea," devotes a chapter to "Living Lamps" and mentions that more than two dozen different types of light-emitting organs are found among the fishes, some very simple, others exceedingly complex, with a structure more or less like that of eyes but fitted to send out light rays instead of to receive them. William Beebe's "The Arcturus Adventure" also gives an account of various myctophids or lantern fishes and other luminous fishes found by him in deep water. Clark's book goes into detail regarding the various forms of life believed to be luminous. The barn owl of western Europe shines by night through the intermediary of a fungus that sticks to its feathers. A certain tree frog of Europe exudes from its body a shining substance with luminous properties. Luminous and phosphorescent centipedes, earthworms, gnats, jellyfish, tunicates, fireflies and glow worms, crustaceans, etc., are described by this same authority.

Train Telephones

Telephoning from a moving train is made possible by use of the lines of the telegraph wires that parallel all railroad tracks. The conversation is broadcast to them, runs along the wires to a central station and is then transferred to ordinary telephone wires. The instrument looks not unlike a radio broadcaster. An ordinary telephone is used and the voice transmitted by the broadcaster to the telegraph wire. The process involves the disintegration and reassembling of the human voice, for the words spoken into the telephone on the train vanish into high frequency cycles and are precipitated from the train to the carrier current telegraph wires. At the pickup stations the voice is reassembled and so transmitted further.

Recalling Early Days of Chartist Movement

Delivery of a 1792 copy of Tom Paine's "Rights of Man" in the month of an old house in Chesterfield, Scotland, recalls those stirring early days in the workingmen's movement when possession of that fiery rebel's book was cause for transportation to the prison colonies. It was a time of misery and degradation among the weavers, and they first took form the revolutionary democratic agitation which finally culminated in the Chartist movement. Sweeping through the rank and file of English and Scot working people in the years when our North and South were breaking apart over slavery, Chartism sought universal suffrage, vote by ballot, equal electoral areas and abolition of property qualifications, all of which were in time secured. With those hard won accomplishments today commonplace facts of everyday life, we do well to remember that one of its guiding spirits was more at home inside prison walls than out and that his devoted followers, at the risk of their freedom, read his printed words in closest secrecy and hid them away in roof thatches.

Simplified Refrigeration

READ THESE QUICK FACTS about the new SERVEL HERMETIC

1 The operating unit is hermetically sealed to eliminate the bother and expense of repairs in your kitchen.

2 The Servel Hermetic requires fewer moving parts, fewer chances for friction and wear.

3 No moving parts are exposed. They are permanently sealed in a bath of oil.

4 This "care-free" refrigeration costs you less—requires considerably less electric current.

5 The Servel Hermetic is the quietest electric refrigerator yet produced, as shown by scientific test.

6 The handy Temperature Control for fast freezing is out of reach of children.

7 The beautiful new Servel cabinets have a graceful smartness that every woman appreciates.

8 More usable shelf space than others of equal rating.

9 Flat, "ribbon-type" shelves let dishes slide smoothly without tipping—and there's plenty of space between shelves.

10 A sweeping factory guarantee protects you from the trouble and expense of old-fashioned service.

REPORT OF RED CROSS NURSING SERVICE FOR MARCH, 1931

On the second Tuesday of March our regular monthly Red Cross meeting was held, which is a joint meeting was held, which is a joint the Nursing Committee, it was one of the most spirited we have had for some time. All the members of both the Chapter and Nursing Committee were present. And while these meetings are held to discuss and decide questions of the Red Cross chapters business and policies, all these members. The meeting is open to every Red Cross member throughout the county, and the attendance and interest of all members would enlarge our ability to render a larger and more complete service. So in this report we sincerely invite your presence at these meetings, the second Tuesday of each month at the Building & Loan Association room in Florence at 2 p. m.

The children of the Florence School were given a physical inspection during March and I found that 27 had obtained one or more corrections of defects since I last inspected them, and now I have arrangements for examinations and treatment for still more of them, as an outcome of the work I did there. The Florence P. T. A. is helping to promote the health of the children by serving hot lunch daily to them at a very nominal cost, and with well planned means.

Through our class-rooms teaching in our Home Hygiene Class at Petetsburg it was discovered that one of the students needed medical attention and after the needed physical examination, the proper diagnosis was made and under the prescribed reatment, we have every reason to believe that a complete and speedy recovery will be made.

The high value of good in this one instance can not be over estimated and is truly worth the entire cost of a public Health program for many years. I thinn of these classes as "good ground" and I see the seed of Health Instruction springing up, and could I live long enough I am sure I could note a great change in the way of better and more healthful living in the years to come. It is a growing process to be watched nutured and developed always in the newest light which the Scientist unfolds to us.

MiMiss Margare. E. Digney, Nursing Field Director of the American Red Cross for Ky., visited Boone county two days the last of March During her stay we covered a considedable portion of the county, wanted her to realize how much territory I had to cover. How big the task of trying to get he vital message of Health to all of our people She liked much all that I was able to show to her coming from Burlea, she said it was "hilly enough" that she could like living here. She helped me plan for new ways of working. Helped me plan to make myself mode capable we hope, that the Red Cross we both love may do more service in Boone county.

EUNIE B. WILLIS,
Red Cross P.H.N.

Pacific Islanders Go Back to the Primitive

The disappearance of the sailing ship has wrought a curious change in some of the more isolated sections of the world. For instance, on many of the islands in the South Pacific, tiny palm-crested knobs of greenery sticking up out of a blue sea, the calendar is being turned backward.

In the days when thousands of winged freighters ambled leisurely on their way, many of them from four to six months out, it was customary and often imperative that they heave to and send a party ashore to trade tobacco, clothing and trinkets for vegetables, fruit, fresh meat and water.

During the course of a year this happened not once, but several times, each contact leaving its imprint on the eager, friendly natives. In time, they learned some of the rudiments of civilization, although the value of many of them was highly debatable.

Nowadays, life on those islands that are not regularly visited by either tourist steamers or trading schooners, constitutes a different picture altogether, and possibly a happier one. No more do the roving windjammers pay their short, informal calls for needed supplies; and the steamers have no reason to stop, their refrigerated storerooms being well stocked with fresh food, their courses being figured out to within one day's steaming time.

Living conditions on the more remote islands, then, have slipped back into the habits which prevailed before the coming of the white man.—Tom White in the North American Review.

Justice

Justice is only a lively apprehension lest we should be deprived of what belongs to us.—La Rochefoucauld.

What Would Some Folks Do Without Us?

The antiquated people in the world, says an observer, are two-dish Americans, driven hysterically from place to place by the fear that some pleasure might elude them.—Country Home.

What Really Counts

Every gift which is given, even though it be small, is in reality great, if it be given with affection. —Pindar.

New York's Many Lakes

There are, strictly speaking, 11 "finger lakes" in New York state. They are: Conesus, Hemlock, Canadice, Honeoye, Canandaigua, Keuka, Seneca, Cayuga, Owasco, Skaneateles and Otisco. They vary in area from 66.7 square miles to .97 square mile.

BUSINESS PITFALLS IN FARM DISTRICTS

Bankers Point Out Hazards of Unsound Practices and Help Farmers to Avoid Them.

WAYS in which bankers may discourage unsound farm practices are described by President F. D. Farrell of the Kansas State Agricultural College in the American Bankers Association Journal. He says:

"In Kansas in connection with the importation of dairy cattle, a large shipment of very inferior animals came into a county to be sold at auction to local farmers. The county agricultural agent informed the bankers that the cattle would be a detriment to the community. The bankers refused to finance the purchase of the cattle and the sale was abandoned. The cattle were shipped to another county. The county agent and the bankers there did as was done in the first instance and the second county escaped.

"A year ago creamery promoters began trying to capitalize the Kansas farmers' desire to improve his markets by inducing communities of farmers to purchase creamery plants before production and local conditions justified them. Informed of this by the State Agricultural College, the bankers association sent warnings to every bank in the state, leading many to refuse to support the creamery promoters until the college approved the plant for the community concerned. This saved many communities loss from the premature establishment of plants.

"A third way bankers can discourage unsound practices is to refuse to finance farmers who wish to pyramid their enterprises, a temptation difficult to resist. This is illustrated among farmers who buy cattle for feeding purposes. A farmer feeds two or three cars of cattle one year and makes a good profit. This induces him to buy twice or three times as many the second year, still more the third and so on until he finally loses more by having too many cattle on feed in a year of bad prices than he made in several previous years with smaller numbers and better prices. When bankers discourage bad practices their action is a positive benefit to the farmers concerned."

WHAT A KEY BANKER DID FOR HIS COUNTY

The farmers of one county in Tennessee are receiving $400,000 additional annual income from new farm enterprises started since 1926 through the efforts of a "key banker" and the county agent, according to estimates from the Tennessee College of Agriculture. A "key banker" is a part of the state bankers' association voluntary field force cooperating with the American Bankers Association in its nation-wide plan for bringing about better agricultural conditions through combined banker-farmer effort. New projects started in this particular county are tobacco, Irish potato and cabbage production for cash crops, and dairying and poultry raising for livestock.

The key banker, looking for something to do to better his community, first attempted to procure a county agent but was unable to get the county to make the necessary appropriation, so he and other leading citizens made up the requisite funds through private subscription among farmers and business men and an agent was employed.

Up until 1926 grain was the principal farm production in the county. The banker recognized the disadvantages of this. It afforded a low cash income, and the land was too hilly and rough for profitable grain raising. His idea was to introduce cash crops that offered more return per acre and were better fitted to the county. It was decided that the county should standardize on the Green Mountain potato and to market it in carload lots. Through his bank he sponsored the buying of a car of certified seed potatoes. He likewise bought some high quality tobacco seed and several hundred settings of purebred eggs. These supplies were distributed at cost through the banks to the farmers.

After considerable effort a market for dairy products was assured the farmers when in 1928 a national cheese company located a factory there. A county appropriation was secured for county agent work in 1928.

In 1929 the cash crop program resulted in farmers selling $15,000 worth of milk, $150,000 worth of tobacco and fifty-five carloads of potatoes and cabbage, mostly through cooperative sales. "This was some step from the $25,000 worth of cash crops in 1926," the county agent says, "and indications are that this amount will be doubled."

Banks Favor Diversification

Emphasis was placed on the strategic position the banker holds through the use of directed credit at a recent meeting of the Alabama bankers' agricultural committee, Alabama is confronted with the problem of over-production of cotton. The committee recommended to banks that credit be extended on the basis of a twenty-five per cent reduction in cotton acreage. The value of growing other crops than cotton was strongly stressed and county outlook meetings are being planned with the thought of bringing about a more balanced agricultural program in the various communities.

Korean lespedeza seed will be grown on a commercial basis in every community in Henderson county. Certified seed was sown.

FUNDS FOR HOMES SUPPLIED BY BANKS

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

A LARGE portion of the funds required in home building always has been furnished by banks. They have shown constantly a deep interest in the performance of this feature of national development. Upon it rests much of our country's future stability, and any contribution to its advancement redounds to the advantage of all. So banking has never permitted its co-operative attitude toward home building to lessen.

R. C. STEPHENSON

Practically all banks now accept savings deposits which can well be turned to the advantage of the home builders. The construction of individual dwellings requires a large amount of financing and is a thoroughly commendable enterprise. Necessarily, the aid given to home builders is governed by the sound banking rules which have grown out of the years of experience and the constant studies of bank practices.

All of the efforts made to secure broader real estate loan privileges, to adjust resources to make it possible to lend larger sums for long terms, the standardization of mortgage loan formulas, and the actual lending of vast sums on mortgage notes evidence the desire of banks to contribute a full measure of support to the home-building movement. This is true of all classes of banks, but even in a more marked degree of those whose deposits are largely in the form of savings and whose loans are primarily for building or home purchasing purposes.

Both Sides Protected

The process through which bank loans are made on real estate is as simple as the nature of such an important transaction will permit. When money is advanced the lender must know that repayment will be made the specified time. Likewise the borrower wants to be assured that, after he has figured the loan on the basis of his conservatively anticipated ability to pay, he will not be required to do more, that he will not be disturbed in his efforts to work out of his obligations under those terms. Whether his agreement is to repay the entire loan in three or five years, or on a monthly or yearly basis, he wants the assurance that no additional burdens will be imposed upon him. All of this is settled definitely in advance.

There is no mystery about any of the details, and when the negotiations are complete the borrower knows just what he may expect and what he will be required to do to meet his obligations.

Loans made to persons who wish to acquire homes are not necessarily building loans. One may wish to purchase a home already constructed. In this form of transaction bank loans are used very freely because it is the only kind of a real estate loan some classes of banks may make. Others of course, may lend upon real estate with improvements uncompleted and advance funds as the construction progresses. Different styles in home financing have developed in the various states, and banks have tried to adapt their facilities to the needs. Whatever character of assistance is required in any particular instance usually can be found in some bank in the local community.

Among banks and borrowers for home acquisition purposes a long established and thoroughly tested relationship exists. Banks are not the only agencies through which such funds are available; they do not embody all the spirit of helpfulness which abounds. However, through the years of their co-operation their aid has been of unquestioned value to the home builders whose efforts to establish a permanence for themselves have received constant encouragement. Bankers everywhere are ready to counsel with their customers about their home-building plans and to assist to the extent of their ability. This is being done constantly and the many advantages of it are not without recognition.

Farm Service by a Bank

A farm service department was inaugurated a year ago by a bank in Olympia, Washington, and a farm advisor appointed. Close co-operation has been maintained with the state college extension service. Work in dairying is carried on in conjunction with the Dairy Herd Improvement Association. Also a pasture contest was held in cooperation with the four banks in the county which offered prizes amounting to $100. Work in poultry was carried on in cooperation with the Co-operative Poultry Association and assistance was given in organizing an economic conference for the benefit of berry growers. The farm advisor of the bank is active in the Agricultural Council of the county composed of farm and other organizations interested in agricultural development, and also in the Farmers' Market. Six hundred farm business analysis blanks were distributed while farm account books and poultry record books were also provided to farmers and have been helpful in starting many farmers in keeping business records.

NOW WELL AND STRONG AND ROBUST

"For years I never knew what it meant to feel well. I was always tired out. I was actually becoming a burden to myself as well as others. I was examined by many doctors and they gave me many things to take—but nothing seemed to help me. I was really getting in a very serious condition. Then like a fairy God-Mother I happened upon Karnak and I will say without a bit of exaggeration, it is almost like magic—so marvelous and so quick in its wonderful power to make a new person of one. I often shudder when I think of what might have happened to me had I not found out about Karnak when I did. Instead of what 'might have been' I am strong and well and robust and the amount of things I can accomplish amazes everyone I know.

"RAIN AND COLD" AS LEAGUE OPENS

The Battle of Lake Erie, waged last Saturday afternoon at Ports Petersburg, resulted in a victory for the battleship Burlington, after a fight of nearly two hours.

No sooner had the Burlington swung into action tha nher gallant crew opened a devastating broadside into the frigate Petersburg, named, by the way, for the port near where the battle was fought.

After this opening skirmish the Petersburg drew away into a safer position and at which time Captain Carver descended into the hold and ordered Lieut. Henson to take charge of the ship.

For what seemed hours to the onlookers, who had gathered on the wind swept shores to witness the spectacle the combat continued, with the Burlington holding the upper hand, although the Petersburg at opportune moments slipped in some telling shots at long range.

Captain Afterkirk maneuvered his vessel capably enough to keep out of danger, although he no doubt experienced some very anxious moments during the momentary fussilades from the big guns of the Petersburg. However, he remained in command at all times in spite of a severe lashing by the elements.

Editors Note—The writer has been told that his great-grandfather was a hero at the historical battle of Lake Erie and, naturally, we always wondered just what the place looked like. The game last Saturday resembled our imagination of the famous scene, hence the nautical outburst. With apologies to baseball fans we now shall endeavor to record a more comprehensive account of the ball game.

Played In Mud And Rain

Certainly no one will deny that this [illegible] conducive to the playing of good baseball. Of course some opinions differ, but the game could have been called at any point from the third inning on, without any just room for criticism.

But Howard Huey, who was the umpirein-chief, as he handled the balls and strikes all the way, was in a tough "spot." He did not care to tempt the criticism of Burlington by stopping the contest while they held a nice lead thru the early innings. Neither did he like the idea of listening to Petersburg criticism by stopping the game at the end of the fifth (a legal contest) after having allowed it to go so far, in what was nothing less than a downpour. However, no umpire who took the punishment that was suffered by Huey and Lamb last Saturday should have been criticized for anything less than stealing the pitcher's shirt.

Burlington Open Attack

In the very first inning Burlington chalked up five runs when Lenhof walked and advanced to second on a sacrifice by Snyder. Rallenkotter sent up a short fly just back of short stop, which fell to the ground for a single when Aylor and Cox collided. Ryle singled to center, scoring Lenhof and Rallenkotter, but was retired on Kelly's drive over second base, Kelly being safe at first. Afterkirk singled, a prelude to a mammoth drive from the hickory of Roxy Akin and which cleared the right field wall. Two successive walks to the Maurer brothers came before Carver fanned Lenhof, coming up for the second time, for the final out.

Burlington faced Henson, a smart right hander from "over the river" in the second and were retired easily. In the first half of the third, however, the visitors found him for a pair of runs, the result of a long double by Frank Maurer followed by a tremendous home run by Rabbit Lenhof. The latter cleared the left field fence and Lenhof was waved home by virtue of a ground rule. This ended the Burlington scoring, as far as officially recorded, as the game was called with two men out and two strikes on Aylor, of Petersburg, in the last half of the seventh, after each team had counted twice. Aylor had taken two lusty swings, the slippery stick lodging upon each occasion in the vicinity of the outfield. It was taken that Umpire Huey, fearing accidental homicide, mercifully called the game.

Petersburg Scoring

Petersburg also counted in the opening stanza, but in far less numbers than the visitors. After Cox and Jarrell had been retired Afterkirk faltered perceptibly. Mahan singled past Snyder at second and Klopp doubled scoring Mahan. It was then that Afterkirk revived to fan Walton for the side-out.

In the third O.K opened with a single, followed by a safe drive by Jarrell. Mahan was safe on an error, filling the bases, and Klopp drove in two markers with his lusty bat, which incidentally, had a perfect record for the day with four out of four.

This ended the scoring for Peters- [illegible] the side was retired in the latter half of the seventh. Thus the final score was 7-3, although it would have been 9-5, had the Petersburg side been retired when the game was stopped.

Triple Play A Feature

The Petersburg nine outhit the locals by 14-10, but all were singles save two, while Burlington drove out two home runs, one good for two runs and the other for three. Another feature of the opening game was a triple play which helped Afterkirk out of a tight hole. Henson had singled and Aylor had done likewise, the latter stealing second. With runners on second and third and no one down Carver smacked one right on the nose straight at Afterkirk. "Sim" caught the ball and whirled to third, where he caught Henson flat footed, the play then turned to Aylor, who was nabbed on a close play, Rallenkotter to Snyder.

Another Close Game

In a closely fought and interesting battle Rabbit Hash bested Belleview Saturday, in the opener at Belleview. The score was 3-2 over the regulation distance, with Podge Alloway as the official.

Two of the county's best pitchers opposed each other in this hill duel, Brady for Rabbit Hash having a slight edge over Big Bill Rogers. The former fanned 13, while Rogers made nine of the boys from farther down the river whiff the breezes. Rogers walked three while Brady permitted but one batter to reach first base via four balls. Brady and Rogers each hit two batters.

Belleview garnered eight hits, three of which were two baggers, while Rabbit Hash made four, only one being a two baser. The Belleview boys who made hits for the double distance were Wm. Rogers, A. Rogers and Russell Miller, while W. Stephens was the boy to drive for the extra distance for Rabbit Hash.

Leslie Ryle, who started his baseball career at Belleview many years ago, looked strange in a Rabbit Hash uniform. Brady and several others in the Rabbit Hash line-up formerly played with Belleview.

Mrs. Cora Stephens traded the 56 acres on the Dixie Highway known as the Dr. Glacken farm, to Mrs. Callie Sutherland of Erlanger for Mrs. Sutherland's home in Erlanger with a cash consideration in favor of Mrs. Stephens.

The A. B. Renaker Realty Company and John E. Goodpastor negotiated the deal.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Walton of Elsmere spent Sunday with Hubert White and wife.

School Notes

The Burlington High School baseball team lost two games last week. On Thursday they lost to the Hebron High School 14 to 4. Ogden and Greenup were the batteries for Burlington with Elliot and Riddell for Hebron. In the [illegible] of Hebron but Ogden's arm began hurting him and 7 runs were scored before the game ended. In the last part of the eighth with D. Williamson on 3rd base and Greenup batting a long fly was knocked to Center field which was caught making the second out. Williamson started home after the fly was caught when he saw that he couldn't make it and was forced to slide which stirred a lot of dust. When the dust had cleared away we found that David had broken one of his fingers and was rushed to the doctor immediately.

On Friday the Crescent Springs High School team came over for a game and went back home with another victory added to their list. They defeated the Burlington boys by a score of 11 to 8. J. Williamson and Greenup were the batteries for Burlington with Silbree going in for Williamson in the first of the 9th. The "monkey" sure sits on old B. H. S. plenty when its comes to ball players getting hurt. George Cook who played left field while batting was hit by a pitched ball on the ear an was rushed to the doctor who found it not very serious, but told George to wear a large bonnet which makes him look like old mother goose. The High School boys are to go to Hebron Friday May the 1st.

Again the Boone County tournament has come and gone leaving Burlington outside the distinction rank, however, we are ready to congratulate those who won and to announce that we are to be in the battle stronger than ever next year. Those who received honorable mention are senior Elva Akin, third in English and James Vice second in science. Juniors, Rosa Pettit second in Mathematics. Sophomores, Harold K. Clare, first in English, Virgil Vice second in science, Martha Blythe and William Greenup 3rd in declamation. In the Freshmen Class a first was awarded William Vest in mathematics and a third to Betty Mc Mullen in English. Our duet represented by Wilma Cotton and Londa Lee Jarrell won second place and our quartet composed of Wilma Cotton, Londa Lee Jarrell, Bailey Greenup, and James Ogden won third.

Easton and Huey are doing some papering for Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pettit at their residence on Jefferson street.

Raymond Goodridge and family again are citizens of Burlington, having moved into their home here from Elsmere, early this week.

PITCHERS BATTLE IS 10 INNING TIE

In a pitchers battle that was fought thru ten frigid innings, Hebron and Walton nwound up in a tie at 2-all last Saturday afternoon in the season's [illegible] Glenn opposed Brown on the mound and each appeared at his best. But Glenn must have overlooked the fact that Brown had the better of him in Hudson Bay atmosphere, a la the deciding championship battle on the Burlington lot last fall. Even at the "Rol" gave him a royal tussle.

Hebro garnered nine hits and Walton made three errors, but, even at that, the foxy Glenn did not taste the sting of defeat. He allowed one run in each of the first two innings and that was all. He walked two of the Hebron batters.

Brown allowed but five hits, but issued six free tickets to first. Hits and passes were bunched against him, when Walton tied the score by counting twice in the third. After that both twirlers were invincible and the Saturday was wasted insofar as a decision was concerned.

Features of the game were circus catches by Robinson and Hudson in center and right for Walton. Both drives were hit by Stull, who was hitting in tough luck.

Moreland and Aylor were the hitting stars, each garnering three bingles, two of Aylor's being for the double distance. Rain started to fall in the fifth inning and continued thruout the game.

A meeting of all managers is called for Monday night of next week at the cour thouse. It is each managers' business to attend.

ISSUE OMITTED

Owing to the fact that we shall be installing a new Linotype next week it will be necessary for us to omit our next issue---May 7th.

DEVON

The Ladies Aid Society of the Ebenezu Lutheran Church, will have their regular meeting at the home of Miss Mary and Jennie Dixon, on Wed. afternoon, May 6.

Mrs. Egbert Nichols of Covington, passed away at her home on Saturday, April 25th. Mrs. Nichols was the mother of A. L. Nichols of this place. The remains were placed on the family lot in the Petersburg cemetery, after the funeral services on Monday of this week.

CHANGE SHOWN IN TOURNEY RESULTS

The interest in the annual Boone Boone County School Tournament, while of the very best, could not have surpassed that of last year, if the number who attended the musical and declamatory contests on Wednesday and Thursday evenings could be taken as a criterion. The auditorium was filled to its capacity each of the past few years on the last night.

As was the case last year there were no athletic contests. As usual the Hebron school was prominent in scholarship, although nosed out in the grade studies by Constance. As predicted in these columns last week they were outstanding in high school subjects, although Florence ran a good second.

Below are listed the winners in the various subjects, as well as the total number of points received by each school:

Statue Held Symbol of Unity of Two Peoples

Senor Daniel V. del Burgo, consul general of Chile in this country, has given a most interesting description of "The Christ of the Andes," the inspiring sculpture which stands at a mountainous elevation of 4,000 meters (13,000 feet) on the Chilean-Argentine frontier, says the newspaper La Verdad, of Caracus, Venezuela. Senor del Burgo says of this appealing figure that the suggestion for its establishment came from seeing the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor. It is seven meters high (23 feet) and weighs three tons. It can be perceived for many kilometers on all the routes connecting the two republics of Argentina and Chile and is held in veneration by the peoples of both nations because it was erected, in 1902, to seal and commemorate the peaceful settlement of the final disputes between the two great South American republics. It was the women of these two countries who collected most of the funds necessary to defray the cost of the statue and its transportation and erection and whose influence was most exerted on the respective governments to provide a site and perpetual maintenance for the monument. "The Christ of the Andes" stands in a lonely and desolate spot, much the same, no doubt, as the wilderness in which "The Man of Sorrows" spent 40 days of his life in prayer and fasting. Yet the statue is not really lonely nor deserted, but visited constantly by thousands in their journeys to and fro, who call it, too, "The Christ of Amity," for this statue is the symbol of the bonds of friendship which henceforth and forever knit these two peoples together in a Christian fellowship.

Tyroleans Go in Fear of Whimsical Goddess

Perhaps the quaintest survival of Norse mythology is the dance performed in honor of the goddess Perchta, said to be the consort of Wodin and mother of the gods. In certain districts of Austria the goddess is still a vivid personality and held in veneration and great fear. She is believed to have a duplex nature which is manifested at certain times with showers of blessings and at other times with curses. At all times she is said to be surrounded by her followers or "spirits of the air" and neither she nor her followers are supposed to be seen except at certain times of the year. These dances are given just before Lent, at Easter and about St. John's day in the Pongau and Pinzgau districts of the Austrian Alps. It originated among the Tyrolese mountaineers with the intention of worshiping and at the same time placating her in her vindictive mood. Those who take part in it dress to represent her double nature, some are gracious and gentle and dress to represent the beautiful, and others are spiteful and vindictive and dress to represent the wild and malicious.

Oldest School in England

Like all superlative claims there are those who doubt that the King's Grammar school at Canterbury is the oldest, but the evidence points out that it was established in A. D. 631, by the Bishop Felix. Lovers of Dickens will recall that he claimed it to be the oldest, when he sent David Copperfield there. To Dickens, who has perhaps given elsewhere pictures of the worst school in England, the King's school was the ideal school: "a grave building in a courtyard with a learned air about it that seemed very well suited to the stray rooks and jackdaws who came from the cathedral towers to walk with a clerkly bearing on the grass plot."

Life Story of Kiss

The kiss developed out of the primitive habit of rubbing noses with a man who was your equal in the social scale. If you met a superior, then you rubbed his face with your nose.

In time, it became the custom for two persons who were greeting each other to touch lips instead of noses. And years later the kiss lost its ceremonial importance and became an affectionate gesture between two friends or lovers.

But many races still retain nose-rubbing as a salutation. The Maoris of New Zealand press their noses together when they meet, and in Melanesia it is the custom to put your nose close to the other person's and to sniff.

RECORDER ADVERTISING PAYS

Declaration That Put Agent Out of Running

"One reason why salesmen are often a pest," declares one of them, "is because people try to turn them away with flimsy or evasive excuses, instead of flat refusals that carry conviction. People who are annoyed by salesmen should be more like Bliggins.

"Mr. Bliggins is carrying a creditable amount of life insurance, but still finds himself the victim of many solicitors. 'But,' says he, as he opens the front door and is very nearly carried away in the flood of language and gesticulation, 'I have all the life insurance I can carry.'

"The salesman draws a long face. 'My dear sir,' says he, 'suppose that you should—through some unfortunate accident—be cut off from this world tomorrow, that you should be hit by a motor or street car. What would your wife do? Could she maintain her present luxurious living standard? What would she do?'

"To which Mr. Bliggins responds nonchalantly, 'Oh, well, I don't know—but I don't care. You see, I never did like her!'"

Cactus Bridal Bouquet Held Good Luck Emblem

A cactus was carried by a bride instead of the more usual bouquet of orange blossoms at a Warsaw wedding recently. It was stated, in reply to inquiries, that the cactus brought good luck.

It will come as a surprise to most people to know that the cactus is "lucky"—so far it hasn't usually been credited with producing either good or bad fortune. Carried by a bride, indeed, it rather suggests a warning to the bridegroom, because the average cactus is fairly well provided with the means of self-defense.

The cactus is hardly likely, therefore, to win general favor as a bridal bouquet. The more usual orange blossom can, after all, produce reason for its claim to be a luck-bringer. According to authorities on folklore, it is appropriate at a wedding because the orange tree bears flowers and fruit at the same time. So the bride's orange blossom means that she will have a family and keep her good looks.—London Answers.

Rodin's Famous Statue

Rodin's statue, the "Thinker," was exhibited at the Georges Petit gallery in 1889. It was one of 38 pieces of sculpture placed on view. It was designed to be placed over the Porte de l'Enfer. The idea of fashioning was largely due to Rodin's visit to Italy in 1875. The sculptor was commissioned by M. Turquet, who told Rodin that he wished to have a door for the proposed palace of decorative arts. The "Thinker" is part of Rodin's "Magnum Opus." At the salon of 1904 the figure was on exhibition. It was planned to be placed on the upper crossbeam of the gate of hell, where the "Thinker" could look down on the scenes of human passion and woe extended below him. By public subscription the statue was ultimately purchased and presented to the city of Paris.

Cure for Insomnia

One of the most amazing cures for insomnia is that discovered by Mr. Percival Boyd. He is a member of the Society of Genealogists and finding some time ago that he could not sleep he embarked upon the task of compiling a complete index of the marriages that took place in England and Wales between 1538 and 1837. Mr. Boyd has already compiled a list of 1,400,000 in 139 volumes. So good is the index that the record of any marriage can be found in five minutes. Letters and slips containing information arrive daily. It is calculated by Mr. Boyd, that at the present rate of progress the work will take a hundred years to complete. He cannot get on any faster because his task makes him so sleepy. He has found his cure.

Scallops Led to Water

The scallop season is not long and the persons who are employed in it must make the best of the time with the result that in some sections of Long Island and New England the school sessions are curtailed in order to allow the children to do their part. But the government will not permit of any irregularity in the handling of this delicacy and recently a New England fish dealer was fined $1,000 for "watering" scallops. When treated to an ordinary bath the scallops take on size and weight so that an unscrupulous dealer is really selling water at the price of scallops.

Obstructed Vision

The thing that very commonly hinders perception is preoccupation; we go about with eyes that see not because our minds are full of something else.—Judge Homer Ferguson.

Two Dates for New Year in Seventeenth Century

We ought to be thankful that the affair of the calendar was settled for us by our ancestors, for it must have been a very muddling business to live in the Seventeenth century, for instance, when the new year did not begin officially until the last week in March, while at the same time people counted December 31 as the last day of the old year. Long before the time of Pepys, for example, many people regarded January 1 as New Year's day, though the old year went on until March 24. Thus on December 31, 1660, Pepys notes in his diary: "At the end of the last and the beginning of this year. . . . I take myself now to be worth £300 (about $1,500) clear in money." But this did not alter the fact that January 1 was not 1661, but 1660. March 25 he reckons merely as "Lady day," though on that date he had to change the year.

It is really remarkable that nothing was done until 1752 to bring the end of the year by ordinary reckoning and the legal end of the year together—though, after all, it may not be so wonderful when we remember that we ourselves still begin the fiscal year as from Old Lady day, which is April 6 of our modern calendar. Yet there are compensations even in anomalies. The sufferings of the ordinary citizen about the turn of the year are serious enough without having a budget to add to them.—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Height of Human Agony in Waiting Return of Lost

In Brittany they are always awaiting the return of lost fishermen. Day after day the bereaved ones of their families wait, gazing out over the treacherous waters. Mothers, wives, sweethearts haunt the quays. For them, in the strange absence of their loved ones, all life is suspended. Bodies without hope or conscious life, almost without souls, they wait upon the piers. Of all the agonies that rack the human heart, such waiting is the cruelest. The uncertainty of hope deferred plunges the heart into a constancy of the bitterest grief. Better far to know the worst than to hope on and on, without even the polgnant consolation of a knowledge of the dear one's fate. That persistent anxiety and dread paralyzes every healthful activity, destroys the savor of one's food, makes every night a sleepless one and exiles all joy and peace from human souls. The only refuge left such Breton fisherfolk in life is passionate and daily prayer to God for the return of the missing men who went out upon the sea, and who have not returned.—Le Matin (Paris).

Tracing the Word "Pie"

"The word pie was unknown to English speech until the year 1303, and we are told by the late eminent philologist, Sir James A. H. Murray, that it occurred in our literature first in Compotus of the Bolton priory in Lancashire in 1303, in which there is an entry concerning the use of fruit in pyis and pastellis for the bodyguard of the priory, Celerario prioris," writes Frank H. Vizetelly, dictionary editor. "The earliest work on cookery of which we have any record is dated 1390, and is in manuscript; the first book on English cookery was printed in 1498; but, ten years before Christopher Columbus discovered America, the Worshipful Company of Cooks was formed and chartered in the city of London in 1482."—Detroit News.

Authors and the Bible

A list of authors whose work shows the influence of the Bible would be endless, but we cite a few examples: Coleridge said, "Intense study of the Bible will keep any man from being vulgar in point of style." Daniel Webster said, "If there be anything in my style or thought to be commended, the credit is due to my kind parents in instilling into my mind an early love of the Scriptures." A Scotch nurse taught Byron to love the Bible and his "Hebrew Melodies" are drawn wholly from the Scriptures. In Robert Burns' "The Cotter's Saturday Night" there are some 20 Biblical references.—Washington Star.

Spider's Deadly Enemy

There is one enemy against which spider cunning and ferocity cannot contend—a little blue wasp. Finding the door ajar, the wasp swoops down, stuns the doorkeeper with a stab of its sting, then leaves a calling card in the form of an egg among the living blobs of jelly in the silken hammock and disappears. From the wasp egg comes a grub, which devours the baby spiders, whereupon in that subterranean chamber it spins a cocoon around itself and metamorphoses, under protection of the murdered mother spider's trapdoor, into a blue wasp that will repeat its mother's performance on another trapdoor spider.

Legendary Potentate

Prester John was a semi-mythical potentate of the Middle ages, believed to reign over a Christian kingdom in the East. It is, however, certain that a Christian potentate ruled in Asia in the Twelfth century, though the legend must have had some basis in fact. Prester John has been variously identified with a certain Mongol chief and with the founder of the Khara-Khitai, who called himself "Gur Khan or "Supreme Khan." The legend of Prester John's existence provided a continual stimulus to medieval exploration.

As African Youngster Climaxed Bible Story

The wit and wisdom of the Orimbundu people, one of the many tribes that make up the Bantu race, is well known in Africa.

Umbundu proverbs—Umbundu being the speech of the Orimbundus—and the replies of Orimbundu children, especially in Bible classes taught by missionaries, says the Boston Post, show conclusively that the native African has a potential intellect not to be sneered at, and proves also that children are children the world over.

Results of a recent Bible examination among a group of children threw astounding light upon Biblical history. One small boy finished a dramatic recital of the story of David and Goliath (the native African is a born actor) with the rather startling climax which, translated literally, was:

"And the giant said to David, 'Go away, little boy, I like the looks of your face and I don't want to spoil it.'"

Woman Patriotic Figure in History of Old City

Mainz is one of the first and oldest cities on the Rhine. It has also furnished its share of legends and played its part in making this river one of the most famous in the world. Here is one that holds a bit of charm and philosophy: When the French occupied the city the countess of Stein led the young women to take a vow not to listen to a word of love from any man until the country was rid of the invaders. The French, thinking this might stimulate their foes, tried to humble her by giving her a broom and commanding her to sweep the streets. Instead of being shamed, she swept them and prayed as she swept, "God of my Fatherland, bless my sweeping, and as I sweep the highway, grant that the enemy may be swept from the land." Instead of jeering her, as the French had anticipated, her own people gathered about her and prayed "God bless the sweeping." Fired by the courage of the countess the young men succeeded in sweeping the enemy from their land.

Frankfort Long Great City

Since the great trade routes of the Middle ages, Frankfort-on-the-Main has played one of the most important parts in the commercial activities of all Europe, and for many years was the undisputed mistress of the international money market. However, her simplicity and quiet charm have not been affected by her eminent position in international affairs. She reflects her ancient walls and towers in the clear waters of the Main with a modest dignity becoming a beloved monarch. It is no wonder she beguiled and endeared herself so keenly to the heart of Goethe, her native son, who was inspired to write his famous opera "Faust," in the first part of which old Frankfort breathes in almost every verse.

Proof of Education

William H. Danforth selected the following from "The Marks of an Educated Man": An educated man cultivates the open mind; never laughs at new ideas; knows the secret of getting along with other people; cultivates the habit of success; knows as a man thinketh, so is he; knows popular notions are always wrong; always listens to the man who knows; links himself with a great cause; builds an ambition picture to fit his abilities; keeps busy at his highest natural level; knows it is never too late to learn; never loses faith in the man he might have been; achieves the masteries that make him a world citizen, and lives a great religious life.

Good Cheer

Good cheer is almost as essential to life as sunshine, air and water—and is quite as plentiful.

Cheerfulness has a dual value in life. First it helps you—then it helps you to help others—and it keeps on spreading out into the great throng of humanity, stirring the hearts of men as the gentle breeze stirs the leaves of the forest—returning again and again to you in its endless course and all the while making the heavy load lighter and the dark road brighter for all.

Good cheer is one of the biggest little things among all the elements of success.

Buddhistic Shrine

The great Shwe Dagon pagoda is one of the best known places of worship in the East. It has a particular sanctity to Buddhists because it is credited with containing actual relics not only of Gautama but of the three Buddhas before him. The pagoda stands, upon a mound partly natural and partly artificial. It is about 370 feet high and is profusely covered with gilt from base to summit. At the base of the pagoda hill are many monasteries.

Beautiful Stockholm

There are a few cities of the world whose beauty it never seems possible to eclipse, and Stockholm is one. It is a city of great and splendid buildings—the town hall and the royal palace are of the first order in Europe. The spacious streets are lined with gay and palatial hotels and quiet, lovely homes. But perhaps the waterways and the islands on which the city is built are what make Stockholm not just beautiful, but the beautiful.

Belief in Evil Spirits Common to All Peoples

There are many explanations as to where and when the story of a Devil or Satan originated, that is when this personage first came upon the earth and who or what creed first brought him here?

The belief in evil spirits has been found in practically all religions and among all peoples from the earliest times, and how the idea has been modified from time to time may be gathered by reference to cyclopedia articles on the subject, to articles in Bible cyclopedias, dictionaries of religious knowledge, Catholic Cyclopedia, Jewish Cyclopedia, etc. The word "Satan" signifies "an enemy" and the word "Devil" signifies "a slanderer." The International Encyclopedia says in part: "In later Jewish and Christian belief, a mighty spirit of evil who has during unknown ages ruled over a kingdom of evil spirits and is in constant and restlessly active opposition to God." The writer of that article states that the Hebrews knew little about such evil spirits until they came in contact with the religions of Babylonia and Persia during their captivity in Babylonia. These ideas were developed by the Jews and many of them were carried over into Christian theology, where they were subject to other influences.

Fainting Spells One of Acrobats' Great Perils

It is not unknown for acrobats to faint in mid-air. One famous acrobat has said that during a somersault in mid-air from a trapeze his brain is numbed, and for a second or two he is practically unconscious. This he attributes to the speed with which the evolution is performed, and the sudden shock it gives to the brain. One night a woman performer was preparing to do a sensational flying act from one trapeze to another when, suddenly, at the moment she should have jumped, she was seen to sway dizzily. The next second the horrified crowd saw her tumble head first from the trapeze. Fortunately, the rope was twined around her ankle so that she hung head downward. She was obviously in a dead faint. Quick as a flash another trapezist swung himself out, and, in a flying leap, grasped the trapeze from which the girl was dangling. He pulled her back to safety, fastened a rope round her waist, and lowered her—still in a faint—to the stage.

Origin of "Size"

"Sedere" is a Latin verb from the same root as our "to sit" and has the same meaning. With the addition of "ad," meaning "to," we have "adsidere" or "assidere," meaning literally "to sit to." From this comes the medieval law-word "assisa," which has several meanings, of which the most important is "a sitting of a judge," preserved in our "assize." The French form "l'assise," meaning, "the assize," was probably mistaken for "la size." The latter word meant, first, "legal regulation by a judge sitting in assize," then the thing regulated particularly weights and measures, next a standard of magnitude, and so at last simply "bigness."

Revolution's Beginning

The French revolution was mainly the result of the oppression of the French people, who rose in revolt against the extravagance and tyranny of the kings and nobles. In addition they had no adequate representation in the legislature. The taxes were heavy and in 1777 there were as many as 1,250,000 beggars in France. Alarmed by the increasing signs of unrest in the country, the king and some of the nobles began to gather the army near Paris. This so enraged the people of Paris that they stormed the bastille on July 14, 1789. This is regarded as the beginning of the revolution.

Buddhist Cave Temples

Though the Ceylon Buddhists did not make such fine cave temples as their fellow religionists in India, there are several which are of more than passing interest. One very curious example is to be found at Dambulla, not far from Kandy, where natural caves have been enlarged, and huge images have been carved in the interior. But modern structures have been built in front of these caves, thus spoiling the whole conception. The whitewashed brick walls seem very incongruous in the vicinity of ancient cave temples, which are probably nearly two thousand years old.

Different Kind of Work

In a south side school the class in literature was very much interested in the poem, "The Village Blacksmith." In the midst of the discussion the teacher asked:

"Why does the blacksmith have such large muscles? My arm isn't like that."

After a pause, one of the girls replied:

"He does his work with his arm, while you do yours with your mouth."—Indianapolis News.

Took His Word

Brown inserted an advertisement in a newspaper offering his car for sale. At 8 p. m. the door bell rang, and a man asked to see the car. "It's out in front," said Brown. He had no garage, so parked it there.

"There's no car there," said the man—and he was right. Brown's advertisement read: "For sale, good car. A gift. First to see it will take it." The first man to see took it all right.

Every Variety of Song in the Lives of Russians

In Russia music has always been closely connected with the lives of the people. From the time of birth through all the events of life until death claims them, they move to a musical accompaniment. The return of spring is celebrated by a sort of choral dance, termed the khorovod; marriage, being a most important time, brings forth many songs, such as "The Birchwood Splinter" ("Lootchina"), "Glorification," "The Matchmaker" ("Svat oushka"). There are boating songs, laboring songs, lullabies and dance songs. Most of the dance tunes are in the major mode, the slow tunes, and these are best liked in the minor. Cesar Cui, in his book "La Musique en Russie," divided the Russian composers into three groups: First, the old lyric school, Glinka Darkomiszky and Seroff; second, the New Russians, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Mussorgsky, Borodin, and lastly Rubinstein and Tschaikowski in a class by themselves as being less distinctively national.—Washington Star.

Paw-Paw Tree Products Put to Various Uses

Papuya, or paw-paw trees, which grow in the tropical jungles of South America, are put to various uses. They are versatile in that they furnish food, medicine and soap. The Field Museum of Natural History, in Chicago, which has one of these trees in its botany exhibit, states emphatically that the tree is not to be regarded as a link between the animal and vegetable worlds. The tropical paw-paw tree is described as an odd-looking affair, tapering from the base of the stem to a height of about 20 feet. It exudes a peculiar juice which, rubbed on meat, will make the toughest beefsteak as tender as venison, according to Popular Science Monthly. The natives living in the districts where the paw-paw tree abounds use the juice for this purpose. The juice is an acid, milky substance and has medicinal value. The seeds are used as an effective vermifuge or worm destroyer. Furthermore, the tree has a delicious fruit. It is large, pulpy, oblong in shape, and has a heavy rind.

Ruby Rates Above Diamond

A ruby is harder than any stone except the diamond. Carat for carat, rubies of the first quality are rarer and consequently more valuable than diamonds of a corresponding grade. No other stone increases as rapidly in value in proportion to increase in weight as this.

One peculiar property of the ruby is that it becomes green upon exposure to high temperature but regains its original color on cooling. Dark red rubies are found in Siam, and purplish ones in Ceylon, but Burma alone may claim the wonderful pigeon's blood ruby. A cloudy variety exists also which, when cut with a convex surface, exhibits a luminous star, giving it its name of star-ruby.

Odd Methods of Fishing

Natives of some sections of India have several unusual methods of catching fish. Popular Mechanics Magazine says. In Assam, fishermen crouch on the banks of shallow lakes and emit a shrill whistle which attracts a species of mountain fish. Lured by the sound, this fish darts into the open palms of the whistler and is caught. In other places the direct rays of the sun force mountain fish to seek shelter beneath or beside rocks along the banks of streams. The cunning hillman crawls to a bowlder behind which a fish is hiding, strikes the rock a heavy blow with his steel-shod club, and catches the fish, stunned by the sound vibrations.

His Move

In the wee hours of a recent morning a group of grownup kids emerged from a restaurant, went into a huddle on a prominent corner at the direction of a lad whose fiery red hair waved in the breeze from the broken plages of a crushed derby, and began to harmonize. Soon the deserted city canyon was ringing with the strains of "Here we are together!"

The young cop on the beat listened for a moment, then turned the other way and started down the street. "I guess I'll go down here and look for robbers," he said.—Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Eagle as a Symbol

The eagle stood for two things in ancient symbolism. The Greek name for the monarch of the air was a word meaning "rapid motion." The deeply mystic Hebrews, after watching the great bird sitting motionless, contemplating the sun, gave it a name which meant "meditation." In early Christian art the eagle became the symbol of spiritual power, because it was able to soar tirelessly through the highest places. The lion was the symbol of human pride and temporal power.

Engraving Is Ancient Art

Engraving dates back to the ancients, but the first authentic engraving of which there is any record was that of St. Christopher, 1423. Baron de Heiffenberg claims to have found an earlier one, dated 1418, and a manuscript discovered in the middle of the Eighteenth century gives reason for believing that the art was known as early as 1300 in England, but there has been too much controversy concerning those prior to St. Christopher to accredit the earlier ones.

Haughty Impulse That Was Foiled by Chivalry

Among the good stories told by Miss Jane Harrison, the famous lecturer in classical archeology at Newnham college, Cambridge, England, in her autobiography, "Reminiscences of a Student's Life," is this one:

Miss Harrison was for a time a magistrate, and on one occasion there appeared before the bench a certain prisoner who, it seems, had used peculiarly foul language. Instead of repeating it the clerk had had a typed copy made, which was circulated on the bench. Miss Harrison says:

"The unknown to me has always had an irresistible lure, and all my life I have had a curiosity to know what really bad language consisted of. In the stables at home I had heard an occasional 'd—n' from the lips of a groom, but that was not very informing.

"Now was the chance of my life. The paper reached the old gentleman next me. I had all but stretched out an eager hand. He bent over me in a fatherly way and said:

"'I am sure you will not want to see this.'

"I was pining to read it, but sixty years of sex subservience had done their work. I summoned my last blush, cast down my eyes, and said:

"'Oh, no! No. Thank you so much.'

"Elate with chivalry, he bowed and pocketed the script."—Kansas City Times.

Early English Dramas Acted Only on Sunday

Though legislators in 1780 frowned on Sunday amusements, some of their predecessors regarded them with a more tolerant eye. In the Sixteenth century Sunday was almost the playgoer's only chance of entertainment. It was not until 1579 that plays were acted on week days, and until a considerable later date Sunday was still regarded as the occasion for the production of new pieces. Queen Elizabeth patronized Sunday plays, as did also James I, and even the higher clergy took no exception to the practice. Indeed, we read of the then bishop of London producing "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at his town house on a Sunday evening as late as 1631. The practice, however, was not without many opponents, and there can be no doubt that Sunday performances had not a little to do with the Puritan dislike of playgoing of every description.—Manchester (Eng.) Guardian.

Covered Wagon Days

In the days of the pioneer treks across the plains courage was required to face the 2,000 miles stretching bleakly in front of them. A typical train consisted of one wagon, "two yoke of four-year-old steers and one yoke of cows." In front of them were rivers, mountains, thirst, hunger, privation and the pestilence that overtook migrating hordes. Soon they were in a column of wagons said to be 500 miles long—all moving toward the west, their occupants without proper food, dependent upon unhealthful streams for water, enveloped in an intolerable dust. In calm weather the dust would rise so thick at times that the lead team of oxen could not be seen from the wagon. Then, again, the steady flow of wind would hurl the dust and sand like fine hail, with force enough to sting the face and hands.

Steel Plow in America

In this country, about 1797, John Newbold demonstrated a cast-iron plow. It was similar to cast-iron plows which had been demonstrated shortly before in England. Records indicate that farmers feared detrimental effects from so much iron in contact with the soil, and evidently this first American cast-iron plow was never repaired after its moldboard became broken. The obstinate quality of the soil in the Mississippi valley led to the use of steel instead of iron strips on the moldboards of plows. John Deere, 1837, and William Parlin, 1842, were pioneers in the steel plow business of the Middle West. Much credit is due also to James Oliver, who, beginning his experiments in 1853, greatly advanced the process for chilling cast-iron plow points.

Dumb

A seven-year-old Cleveland boy believes that Santa Claus has a very poor memory. Just before Christmas the lad's mother tok him downtown to see Santa Claus, and the boy told what presents he wanted in his stocking.

A few days later another whiskered Santa Claus stopped the lad and inquired:

"What would you like for Christmas, sonny?" Whereupon the chap registered keen disappointment and answered:

"Of all the chumps! I knew that you'd forget what I told you."

Early Road Builder

Swedish heroes of a former day are recalled by the story of the deeds of Jarlabanke, one of the earliest of the Viking road builders, which are revealed on one of the Rune stones recently found at Taeby. More than 1,000 Rune stones, dating from the Ninth to the Eleventh centuries, are now registered. One stone glorifies Jarlabanke for building a road across the swamp in Taeby. The road is still in use, and even to this day, carries the name "Jarlabanke's bridge."

Not to Rot Generous With Gift of Oratory

Speeches can now be broadcast to millions of people but listeners as yet have been unable to do a thing to improve the speakers. Suppose, given time, think they can—by improving the speaker. How rare is the genius of true oratory; rarer far than that of poet, sculptor or painter, F. H. Collier comments in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. America has never had but one Daniel Webster. It has produced a score to enchant us in music with their voices, others to read the lines of drama with telling effect, but the orator who sweeps his audience along with himself in enthusiasm is one in ten million.

Most of the people who say something stirring, do it with the pen. Thought flows easily from the fingers but apparently not from the tongue. Many are expert and convincing in their speech making—dealing mainly in facts and cogent arguments; but that is not oratory in its highest sense; the oratory of Mark Antony, of Demosthenes, of Burke, of Henry Ward Beecher, of Robert Ingersoll, of Phillips Brooks.

In some instances, eloquence has become grandiloquence; whereas effective elocution, moving the emotions and remaining permanently as a fine structure of rhetorical value is always restrained; such as Lincoln's address at Gettysburg; and Webster's debate with Hayne.

Poor Food Set Before Early French Monarchs

The science of cookery did not always flourish in France. It languished in a very inferior state under the early monarchs. "Gregory of Tours has preserved the account of a repast of French warriors, of the unrelieved rudeness of which we are astounded," writes Anthony Clyne in the Boston Transcript. Charlemagne lived poorly and ate but little. Philippe-le Bel was hardly half an hour at the table, and Francis I thought more of amorous dalliance than of eating and drinking. Nevertheless, it was under this last king that the science of cookery took its rise in France. Few have heard the name of Gonthier d'Andernach. What Bacon was to philosophy, Dante or Petrarch to poetry, Copernicus or Galileo to astronomy, Gonthier was in France to gastronomy. Before him, their culinary code was a collection of scraps picked up here and there, the names of dishes were as barbarous and uncouth as the dishes themselves.

Gonthier is the father of cookery, as Descartes of French philosophy. It is said that he invented, in less than ten years, nine ragouts, thirty-one sauces and twenty-one soups.

Tempting Dog's Appetite

Nursing a sick dog, especially when it is in the convalescent stage, is not an easy task, as any dog owner who has been through it knows. One owner was having great difficulty in getting his dog to eat. He mentioned the matter to another dog owner, an old-timer who has been through much of it. Said he: "I got this from an old lady when I was a kid and I'm no spring chicken. You might think it's an old-fashioned notion, but I've tried it and never knew it to fail. Try the dog on a little smoked herring, just enough to get him started. It's great as an appetizer."

The owner followed the suggestion, and sure enough the dog ate the smoked herring, with relish, and then turned to a few other things. After a few days, with an occasional taste of smoked herring, the dog's appetite came back. Old-fashioned or not, the treatment was successful.—Brockton Enterprise.

Robert Burns' Marriage

Burns legally married Jean Armour in 1788, about two years after he had contracted a secret and irregular marriage with her, which was acknowledged in writing. Her father was indignant at the secret marriage, compelled his daughter to give up Burns and also forced her to destroy the document which vouched the marriage. In April 1788 the poet privately acknowledged her as his wife. On August 3 of that year a legal ceremony was performed at Gavin Hamilton's house, and two days later they acknowledged their marriage in the Mauchline church.

Beautiful Flanders

The enticements of the Middle ages linger on everywhere in Bruges and Ghent where some of the finest examples of the Flemish builders' art are found and whose deep but sweet-toned bells have rung out alarms of war and paens of victory in the past and remain to delight the modern visitor with their music. Carillon concerts are held in both cities during the summer and also in Malines, Tournai and other places. The belfries of Bruges and Ghent are world shrines and the flower and bulb fields of the latter are equaled only in Holland.

Childish Simplicity

Four-year-old Billie had spent a happy afternoon with a little neighborhood visitor. When his mother asked the child's name, he replied he did not know.

"Will you please tell me how you could play together so long without knowing each other's names?" insisted his mother.

"O, that was easy," said the resourceful Billie, "I just called her 'Hey' and she called me 'Say.'"

Apparently Beggar Had Found Rare Profession

The New Yorker thought he had experienced every form of panhandling extant. Recently, however, he visited Washington and learned a new wrinkle in extracting money from the pockets of the public.

Walking through a public square in the afternoon with one of the numerous judges who lives in the capital, a man approached. In his arms was a baby; at his side was his wife and walking in front were two more children not over six years old.

Holding a half-dollar up between his finger and thumb, the man with the baby muttered to the New Yorker as he passed: "Won't you help me pay my rent?"

The visitor dug into his pocket for a quarter, but the judge stopped him.

"You don't know if this man is worth helping," he said. "We have a community chest in Washington to take care of such cases."

As the New Yorker argued the point with the judge, the man and his family disappeared.

A few minutes later a taxicab swept past and as the New Yorker jumped back to avoid it he saw, comfortably driving home, the man who had pleaded for assistance with his rent, and the whole family accompanying him.—New York Sun.

People of Asia Minor First to Breed Mules?

The mule, which is the product of a cross between a mare and a male ass, has been bred as a beast of burden since early times. The inhabitants of Mysia, Paphlagonia and Cappadocia, ancient countries in Asia Minor, are said to have been the first people to raise mules. This, while not definitely established, is borne out by Homeric tradition. Mules were bred in large numbers by both the ancient Greeks and Romans. The Jews were forbidden to breed mules by Leviticus 19:19, which declares, "Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind." Evidently, however, the Israelites either imported the hybrids or broke the law, because early in their history they possessed large numbers of mules, which in a hilly country like Palestine were preferable to horses and asses for many purposes. It is probable that in some cases "mule" is employed in English translations of the Bible when "ass" would be the proper word.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Islands Now American

Wake island was acquired by the United States in 1898, as a result of the Spanish-American war, and was ceded to this country by Spain under the treaty of Paris, which ended the war. Midway islands are now a part of the Hawaiian group, and under the jurisdiction of the Hawaiian government. They were discovered by Capt. U. C. Brooks in the ship Gambier on July 5, 1859, and officially taken possession of in the name of the United States on August 28, 1867, by Captain Reynolds of the U. S. S. Lackawanna. Baker island was taken possession of in the name of the United States in 1839 by an American named Michael Baker, who first discovered it in 1832. Howland island was discovered by George E. Netcher in 1842, and officially possessed in the name of the United States in 1857.

In Old Celtic Lands

Of all the interesting trips in France, Brittany should be included, especially the south coast, with its sea resorts. This is the land of the "Pardons," those semireligious and semi-pagan festivals, when the villagers don the costumes and play the ceremonies which go back to the days of the dolmen and menhir of their wild moorlands. Paris—Nantes—Savenay—St. Nazaire is the route to follow, and the great Pardon centers are at Auray, St. Malo, Quiberon, Quimper, Daoulas, Plougastel and St. Anne-la-Palud, where the most important Pardon in Brittany is held on the last Saturday and Sunday in August. These old Celtic lands of France have a fascination different from the rest of France.

And He Fled

A golfer who has devoted the better part of the last five summers to the pursuit of the little white sphere was the happy recipient on his birthday of a set of expensive matched clubs. The first thing he did was to summon a companion in the sport and gloat (as only golfers know how to gloat over such an acquisition) openly before him.

"Ah," exclaimed the friend tartly, "that's a wonderful set of clubs. Now all you have to do is to learn how to play the game." And he fled from the house followed by a flood of epithets (pronounced as only golfers know how to pronounce them).—Springfield Union.

Chemists of Olden Days

The Egyptians appear to have possessed greater knowledge of chemistry than any other of the ancient nations. For one thing, it takes unusual skill to preserve a corpse for centuries in such perfect condition as the ancient mummies unearthed in Egypt happen to be. These people stood very high in the production of medicines and dyes as well as toilet soap, vinegar, metals, alloys, salts, glass and enamel. The Arabs, Greeks and Romans all obtained their knowledge of chemistry from the Egyptians without being able to add anything of importance to this knowledge.

Candy Made At Home Is Best Bridge Trump.

By JOSEPHINE B. GIBSON
Director, Home Economics Dept., H. J. Heinz Company

A PLATE of creamy, delicious home-made candy adds a touch to the afternoon or evening bridge party that is hard to equal. And even the grown-ups enjoy scraping the kettle after the candy is made. Yes—making candy at home is great fun for all the family. And serving it to your guests gives them delight, too.

Below are recipes for a number of delicious home-made candies. Some are simple enough for the children to make for themselves; while others you will enjoy trying out yourself, even though you may not have made candy for a long while.

Give both your family and your friends an unexpected treat soon with some of these tempting delights:

Peanut Butter Fudge With Marshmallows 1 cup white sugar; 1 cup brown sugar; ½ cup milk; 2 tablespoons corn syrup; 1 tablespoon Pure Vinegar; 1 teaspoon vanilla; 12 marshmallows, cut in quarters; ½ cup Peanut Butter.

Mix sugar, milk, corn syrup and vinegar. Boil to 236 degrees F., the soft ball stage. Remove from fire, cool, and add Peanut Butter, marshmallows and vanilla. Beat until creamy. Pour into a buttered pan and cut in squares.

Maple Pralines: 2/3 cup sweet milk; 1 teaspoon Distilled White Vinegar; 2 cups granulated sugar; 1 cup maple syrup; 2 cups broken pecans or walnuts.

Add the vinegar slowly to the milk, and then add sugar and maple syrup. Stir until thoroughly blended, and cook slowly with a lid on until sugar is melted. Uncover and boil rapidly to the soft ball stage. Take from fire and cool. Beat until smooth and creamy and add nuts. Drop mounds on waxed paper from the tip of a spoon.

Divinity Fudge: 2 cups granulated sugar; ½ cup corn syrup; ½ cup cold water; 1 teaspoon Pure Vinegar; 2 egg whites; 1 cup nuts; vanilla.

Mix sugar, syrup, water and vinegar. Cook slowly, without stirring, until it forms a very firm, almost brittle ball in cold water. Pour gradually over stiffly beaten egg whites, and beat until creamy. Add nuts and vanilla. A little almond extract may be added if desired. Pour into a buttered pan and mark into squares.

Chocolate Fudge Sandwich: 2 tablespoons butter; 3 cups granulated sugar; 1 small can evaporated milk or, ¾ cup top milk; ¼ cup corn syrup; pinch of salt; 3 squares unsweetened chocolate; 1 teaspoon vanilla; Peanut Butter.

Melt butter and brown slightly. Then add sugar, corn syrup, salt and milk, and stir until well blended. Cover and bring slowly to a boil. Add chocolate broken into small pieces, and boil rapidly until mixture forms a soft ball in cold water. Keep covered while cooking to prevent crystallization. Cool, add vanilla and beat until creamy. Pour half in a buttered pan and cover with a layer of Peanut Butter. Pour rest of fudge on top of Peanut Butter and set aside to cool. Cut in squares.

Peanut Butter Marbles: 1 1/3 cups shredded cocoanut; ½ cup Peanut Butter; 1 tablespoon vanilla.

Mix ingredients thoroughly. (The cocoanut may be toasted first if desired.) Take up mixture by teaspoonfuls and roll into small marbles. Set in cold place until firm.

Rice Flake and Peanut Balls: 1 package Rice Flakes; 1 cup peanuts; 1 cup white sugar; 1 cup brown sugar; ½ cup corn syrup; ½ cup water; ½ tablespoon butter; 2 teaspoons Pure Vinegar; Vanilla.

Cook the sugar, corn syrup, water, butter and vinegar. Boil to firm ball stage—244 degrees F. Cool slightly, add vanilla and pour gradually, stirring gently, over the Rice Flakes and peanuts. Form into balls when cool enough to handle.

Home-Made Salted Nuts: Pour boiling water over shelled almonds or filberts and allow to stand for about a minute. Place nuts between towels and rub, and the skins will come off easily. Cook nuts in hot Olive Oil until brown, drain on heavy paper and sprinkle lightly with salt; or roll the nuts in Imported Olive Oil, dust with salt and brown in a moderate oven.

Pecan Wafers: 2 cups granulated sugar; ½ cup butter; 4 teaspoons Distilled White Vinegar; ½ teaspoon soda; ¾ cup pecans, chopped; ¼ lb. dipping chocolate.

Melt butter, add sugar, and stir until sugar becomes dark tan and loses its crystaline form. Add soda, stirring vigorously, and three-fourths of the nuts. Pour in a well buttered pan ½ inch thick. When almost hardened, turn candy over with flat surface on top. Melt chocolate over warm water and coat the top, then sprinkle with remaining chopped nuts. When chocolate hardens, break into irregular pieces.

Discreet Man Leads

If we look into communities and divisions of men, we observe that the discreet man, not the witty, nor the learned, nor the brave, guides the conversation, and gives measures to society.—Addison.

Turkish Iconoclasts

In order to get stones with which to build their houses, Turks tore down the one thousand, five hundred year-old Byzantine wall surrounding the city of Istanbul.

Puzzle for Scientists

Scientists are trying to determine what kind of vehicle could have made the deep double ruts in rock in several parts of the island of Malta and are believed to be the oldest existing remains of roads in the world.

Fame

Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. —Addison.

Women in Industry

In most cities of more than 100,000 population more than 30 per cent of women sixteen years of age or more are employed.

Bar to Education

There ought to be some easy way of looking up information in the encyclopedia. As it is now, we start looking for one subject and get interested in the article about another, and before we find the subject we started after it's quitting time.—Kansas City Star.

Island of the Bumble Bees

Bumblebees, in the island of the Hebrides, are said to be a plentiful prey to the depredations of the rabbit known as of Belford or the Irish rabbits of Shandonagh. From the isolated peat. Bumbles has had scattered over the landscape, especially in the North, rock towers often rising to a hundred feet with a rounded base. The towers are unhewn and joined without mortar. There are traces of about 4,000 on the island, and they are said to have been burial chambers, temples, granaries or refuge places, or perhaps just castles of days of violence long ago. They are cavelike inside and admit by windows, and today only a storm-beset shepherd will seek them out, for they are abandoned to snakes and decay.

Where the Shillelagh Grew

In County Wicklow in Ireland the tourist may spend one of the most charming of Irish holidays. Almost every village is full of diversified charms. Especially in the South, let him seek out Rathdrum, perched like a Tyrol village on the steep banks of the Avonmore, the Vale of Avoca, the Devil's glen, Glenealy, Arklow, and even Shillelagh, where was the famous blackthorn wood which gave its name to the short, nobby sticks which until recent years, were the inseparable companions of Irish laborers and others. The wood was cut down in 1698, but tradition says that the king of Leinster sent wood from here to William Rufus for the roof of Westminster hall.

Retouched

Mary Jane's aunt noticed the picture of a little girl on the youngster's desk. It so happened that Mary Jane had quarreled with the little girl a short time before.

"What a pretty little girl!" exclaimed the aunt. "Your little friend is very pretty."

"Oh, she isn't really pretty," corrected Mary Jane. "That picture has just been retouched!"

Recruits Making Good

Encouraging news received from the general direction of Peoria, Ill., Cincinnati Reds baseball farm, indicates that Bill Bradburn and Lefty Sprague, Boone county products, are making good.

The following clipping from a Peoria newspaper relative to Sprague is especially encouraging: "The outstanding hurling of the day emanated from the sturdy left arm of Sprague, the Regulars mound representative in the final three innings. Though found for one run Sprague showed nearly everything that a good pitcher needs, exhibiting excellent control and an extensive repertoire of twists and curves."

JERSEY CATTLE CLUB MEETIN.

The annual meeting of the Boone county Jersey Cattle Club is scheduled to be held at Burlington Monday, May the 4th, according to Mr. O. C. Haier secretary. An effort is being made to write up a report of all leading herds of the county.

Mr. W. G. Kite, president of the club is urging all Jersey breeders to be present at the above meeting. The meeting will be held in the county agent's office at 1:15 p. m.

TOBACCO BEDS BEING DESTROYED

From strong healthy growing tobacco plant beds one day to practically a total loss the next is being reported by a large number of farmers from all four parts of the county during the last five days. A smal dark species of cut worms are reported to be destroying beds wholesale.

Poison bait is one of the best remedies and it will probably pay those who have not already had trouble with this pest to get ready. Simple mixtures of Paris Green and bran has given good control results.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture poison bait bran mixture is composed of the following: 25 pounds of bran, 1 pound of white arsenic or Paris Green, 2 quarts of cheap molasses, 2 to 3 gallons of water, 6 lemons finely chopped may be added. Mix the bran and poison thoroughly, add the water and mix again. Sprinkle poison all over the bed.
